Many individuals have recognized that the reason the public is dissatisfied is because of these multiple proceedings and the lack of finality in the criminal justice process. We must find a way to at least eliminate part of the multiple proceedings we have in both the Federal and State courts to resolve the issue of one conviction for one offense. The cost of these proceedings is incalculable. But the cost to the credibility of the courts may be fatal. Without question, the credibility of the courts is deteriorating because of the problem.

Justice Overton went on in his speech to call on the public to prompt Congress to reform the habeas corpus statute. He stated:

> If there is going to be a solution to this dual court process and its delays, as it presently exists, that solution must come from public pressure to Congress to do something and amend the act that has caused the problem in the first place.

There is no question that Justice Overton is a man who knows the abusive use of habeas corpus as well as anyone. He has had to watch as cases which he reviewed and joined in denying relief for have ended up in Federal court and often been granted relief. He sees the problem clearly, and he knows where the problem must be solved—here in Congress.

Mr. President, I am calling on the Senate to heed the words of Justice Overton by addressing legislation which reforms habeas corpus procedures. We have an excellent opportunity to do this by taking up the proposal which Senator NUNN and I introduced. This proposal, S. 2543, makes a number of substantive changes in the habeas corpus statute which will help to dam up the flood of frivolous appeals. In the process, it will serve to put finality back into our criminal justice system. Let us take this action without any further delay.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m. with statements therein limited to 3 minutes each.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATOR STROM THURMOND—RECIPIENT OF THE AUDIE MURPHY PATRIOTISM AWARD

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, on the Fourth of July, Independence Day, Senator J. STROM THURMOND was honored as the recipient of the Audie Murphy Patriotism Award at the Spirit of America Festival in Decatur, Ala. Nothing could have been more fitting, for I know of no public figure in this Nation who is more deserving of the honor.

Throughout his illustrious career as teacher, circuit judge, member of the armed services, Governor, politician, and Senator, STROM THURMOND has been the epitome of patriotism.

STROM THURMOND volunteered for service in 1941 on the day that war was declared against Germany. During his military service, he participated in the Normandy invasion with the 82d Airborne Division. He was awarded 5 battle stars and 18 decorations, medals and awards, including the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Bronze Star with Valor, the Purple Heart, and many others. In 1977, he was also awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor Society National Patriot's Award.

During STROM THURMOND's career in the Senate, he has recognized and operated upon the necessity that this Nation remain militarily strong. As a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, he has been an effective spokesman for our national defense and against the threat of expansionism and domination by the Soviet Union.

STROM THURMOND truly deserves the honors and recognition he has received. During my brief tenure in the Senate, I have acquired the utmost respect for him, and I am honored that I have had the opportunity to serve with him on the Judiciary and Armed Services Committees.

I believe the remarks that Senator THURMOND gave in Decatur on July 4, about the imperatives of our national defense and the need to reduce the size of our Federal Government, warrant the attention of all Members of the Senate.

I request that Senator THURMOND's speech be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY SENATOR STROM THURMOND

Senator Denton, Mr. Lee, Lieutenant Governor McMillan, Mayor Folmar, Ladies and Gentlemen, it is indeed a pleasure for me to be here in Alabama on this Independence Day. I deeply appreciate the honor which you have accorded me this evening. Throughout my 59 years of public service, I have always believed in and attempted to be guided by the qualities of patriotism and service to State and Nation which are exemplified by the Audie Murphy Patriotism Award—the principles which we celebrate on this day. I am honored and humbled to have been selected for this coveted award.

It is especially gratifying to be placed in the company of those distinguished individuals who have previously received this award—General of the Army Omar Bradley; two of my former colleagues in the Senate, James Allen and John Sparkman; Astronaut

John Young; Olympic Gold Medalist Jesse Owens; Country Music Star Johnny Cash; Secretary of State Alexander Haig; and, most recently, Senator Jeremiah Denton.

Tonight, I will try to keep my remarks brief. My wife, Nancy, tells me there ought to be a new Beatitude— "blessed are the brief, for they will be invited again." Recently, I was at a meeting where the guest speaker began by saying, "As I was shaving this morning, I was thinking of my speech and cut my face." When he had finished his speech, a member of the audience added, "Next time, he ought to think of his face, and cut the speech." I will try to remember that advice.

The people of Alabama have always been very special to me. In 1948, the people of this great State supported my candidacy for President, and I believe that this award is a reaffirmation that we share the same basic principles and beliefs.

In their traditions and actions, the people of Alabama have shown their dedication to the values which have made our Nation great. This is reflected in the high caliber of leaders which you have provided for our Country. It has been my pleasure to serve with many of these outstanding individuals during my 28 years in the United States Senate.

The contributions of Senator Lister Hill are well-known to students of history and observers of the Congress. The Hill-Burton Act, which has meant so much to the public health care area, was only one of his notable contributions.

Senator Hill was succeeded by James Allen, the finest parliamentarian I have known during my service in the Senate and a true gentleman in every sense of the world. Following Jim Allen's untimely death in June, 1978, his very capable and devoted wife, Maryon, served the state admirably.

Jim's right-hand man was Quentin Crommelin, a native of Alabama, who has most recently served as the dedicated and capable Director of my Staff on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Quentin comes from one of Alabama's most respected families, and is leaving my staff soon to assume a position of larger responsibility in the Government.

I have had the pleasure of serving with other distinguished Alabamians.

Senator John Sparkman served ably as Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and was honored by his colleagues in the Democratic Party when he was chosen in 1952 as their nominee for Vice President of the United States.

More recently, I have had the pleasure of serving with Senator Donald Stewart, a capable young man who demonstrated skill in representing his state.

I congratulate you on the fine representation you now have in the Senate in Judge Howell Heflin and Admiral Jeremiah Denton. I am especially pleased to have both of these men serve on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which I chair. Judge Heflin, whose record of outstanding service on the Alabama Supreme Court speaks for itself, is a valued friend, and a well-respected colleague.

Of course, when I think of American patriotism, one man immediately comes to mind—Admiral, now United States Senator, Jeremiah Denton. Who can forget Admiral Denton coming off the first plane of American POWs and returning after over seven years of torture in North Vietnam and hearing his ringing tribute to our Country? He said simply, "We have been privileged to serve our Country under difficult circumstances. God Bless America." Surely, this man is a true American hero. His service in the Senate is a living tribute to the valor and devotion of Alabamians throughout our Nation's history. His performance in the Senate is truly of a high order.

For all of these reasons, involving my admiration for, and close association with, your State, this award holds a special meaning for me.

As I considered how I would respond to this special award this evening, I remembered a saying which serves as a warning to those who make speeches on this day. The Fourth of July, goes the saying, is the day when "both orators and artillerymen shoot blank cartridges." That is one tradition I will try to break tonight.

No acceptance speech at this Festival would be complete without a comment on the life of the man who is memorialized by this award. I am sure that you are familiar with the exploits and bravery of Audie Murphy, who was the most decorated American soldier of World War II. His actions will always be an inspiration to Americans as an example of courage, leadership, dedication to duty, and love of country. Audie Murphy was an American patriot in the finest sense of that term, and this award achieves a unique value by bearing his name.

It is also fitting that this award should be presented annually on Independence Day—a day set aside to celebrate all that is good about America—and indeed, we have much to celebrate today. The intent of Independence Day was captured quite well, I believe, in a letter which John Adams wrote to his wife. In that letter, Adams stated his belief that the date on which America declared her independence would be "the most memorable epoch in the history of America." He continued, "I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward forevermore." I am sure that John Adams would feel that this "Spirit of America Festival" has helped fulfill his prophecy.

As this Festival reminds us, we have so many to thank for the prize of freedom so gallantly, yet so costly, won. Every American age has had its heroes in the cause of freedom. Thankfully, responding to our Nation's call is a distinguishing characteristic of Americans, even though the duty to one's country often involves great personal peril and sometimes, even the sacrifice of one's life for this noble cause.

I would like to share with you a passage about the spirit of American people. In this passage, the writer uniquely comments on the sacrifices of several historic figures.

"Nathan Hale could have blamed George Washington and lived to a ripe old age. Instead, he died at 21.

"Paul Revere could have said: 'Why pick on me? It is the middle of the night. I cannot ride through Middlesex Village. Besides, I am not the only man in Boston with a horse.'

"Patrick Henry could have said: 'Yes, I am for liberty, but we must be realistic. We are small compared with the British, and someone is going to get hurt.'

"George Washington could have said: 'Gentlemen, you honor me. But I am just getting some personal matters settled and have much to do at Mount Vernon. Why don't you try General Gates? Also, you might say I have served my time.'"

These scenarios never occurred, because Nathan Hale, Paul Revere, Patrick Henry, George Washington, and countless Americans of more recent generations loved liberty more than life itself.

Today, preserving our liberty remains a burdensome proposition. It is burdensome because of the commitment that it requires, both personally and in terms of our national resources.

At present, there is no more important issue before the Congress and the American people than that of our national defense. Some say that we are spending too much money on defense and that we are pursuing a policy of provocation. Others add that the United States should declare a "freeze" on the development and deployment of nuclear weaponry in order to avert a nuclear war that threatens the extinction of civilization. I strongly disagree with both of these claims.

I would be the first to admit that a military force that is too large is wasteful. On the other hand, to diminish our military force beyond the level of strength necessary for the protection of our national interests is a grave threat to our security. Today, the percentage of our Federal budget committed to defense is at its lowest point since the attack on Pearl Harbor. Throughout the 1950s, we spent ten percent of our Gross National Product on national defense. During the 1960s, that fell to eight percent, and dropped further to only six percent during the 1970s.

Conversely, Soviet defense spending increased during the same time span and, as a result, the Soviet Union has greatly outspent the United States on defense. In the last decade alone, Soviet defense spending has exceeded that of the U.S. by $800 billion. The Soviets have now developed the largest peace-time military force in the history of man.

Some would have us believe that the United States enjoys a decisive technological advantage that offsets the numerical superiority in men and equipment enjoyed by the Soviet Union. This false claim is insidiously misleading, because it engenders a false sense of security. Perhaps, ten years ago, we did enjoy a decisive technological advantage. The truth today is that the Soviets are producing weapons systems technologically comparable to ours. In some systems, the Soviets lead the United States or possess capabilities we do not have.

There is but one choice for us as a freedom-loving people. We must continue the defense modernization efforts advocated by President Reagan to close the "window of vulnerability" which developed during the 1970s.

Repeatedly, we hear calls from a vocal minority for a nuclear arms freeze. While this movement has a superficial appeal, I believe such a freeze now would be highly detrimental to this Nation and to the Free World. If the United States were to enter into a freeze on nuclear weapons at current levels, we would irrevocably concede nuclear superiority to the Soviet Union. The Soviets would have no incentive to negotiate any arms reduction because we have intentionally granted them superiority.

A declaration by this country of no "first use" of tactical nuclear weapons could be disastrous as well, because the Communist world could use their overwhelming conventional forces without fear of effective retaliation. Our European allies understand this because they are face-to-face with the massive conventional armaments of the Soviets and their Warsaw Pact allies. However, I do support the President's proposal of nuclear arms reductions provided that reductions on the Soviet side can be verified. This is just a beginning, however, and I hope that both the U.S. and the Soviet Union can soon agree to even greater reductions in both nuclear and conventional forces.

War—be it conventional or nuclear—is a terrifying prospect. I experienced first-hand the tragedy of war when I landed on D-Day during World War II with the 82nd Airborne Division. No one wants war, but we must realize that the best way to prevent this tragedy is to remain strong. I am personally committed to doing all that I can to ensure that a nuclear war is never fought anywhere in the world. I know that our President shares this commitment.

The desire and hope for peace is a natural human characteristic. There is, however, one inescapable reality: the price of liberty is a constant ability and unswerving commitment to protect it from destruction. If we have any less resolve than that, and if our resolve is not reflected clearly in our policies on national defense, then we will be condemned either to lose our freedom or to fight for it once again in the face of terrible odds. Peace through strength is our best, and indeed, the only realistic course.

A strong national defense is necessary to the preservation of liberty, yet a strong economy is vital to the health of the Nation as a whole. We are all aware of the economic realities that we face at present. You and I live with those problems daily in the form of unemployment, high interest rates, inflation, a huge federal deficit, and businesses burdened by unnecessary and stifling Federal regulations.

The policies of President Reagan have had an impact upon the economic state of the Nation. Interest rates have declined over the past year and a half by more than five percentage points, and inflation has slowed considerably. Of course, much remains to be done, but the progress so far is largely due to the efforts of the President to reduce the size of government, to reduce the Federal tax burden and to reduce the Federal deficit.

In charting this course, President Reagan has shown great courage. It would have been far easier to continue Federal spending for many programs, rather than face the wrath of those affected by this reduced spending. It would have been far easier to choose a middle-of-the-road approach to boosting defense spending and to pursue a moderate course in reducing bureaucracy than to face the tremendous opposition of special interest groups which are adversely affected by his actions.

For a full and lasting economic recovery, I believe it is important to pass the balanced budget constitutional amendment now pending in Congress. This amendment, of which I am the primary sponsor, has the President's support, and only through it can we achieve long-term economic success. I am convinced that the end result of these efforts will be a strengthened economy, although, of course, it will take time for us to realize this objective in full measure.

A final point which I wish to address is the initiative the President and Congress have taken to restore the balance of powers between the Federal and State governments as intended by the Constitution. It is a simple fact that the Federal government cannot continue to be all things to all people. We have seen the waste and the bridling of initiative that has resulted from Federal encroachment upon the powers, prerogatives, and responsibilities of the states and the people under our Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson wrote, "That government is best which is closest to the people." I might add that the government closest to the people also tends to be the most accountable and the most responsive. In this regard, I hail this redefinition of American Federalism, and I view it as a return to more effective and efficient government. I believe this approach will maximize individual freedom and initiative, which will lead to a strengthened America.

In conclusion, I wish to leave you with this thought: "A Nation is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its great forests, but by the men who use them; not by its mines, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it; Americans have made of it a great Nation."

I challenge each of you to protect the blessings of this great Nation, and to pass on to future generations an America even greater than the one we received.

I am grateful for this fine award, and I thank you very much.

BALTIC FREEDOM DAY

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the modern history of the Baltic nations of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania is a tragic and tumultuous one. Mass deportations and executions have occurred during Soviet occupations of the region. In June 1941, Estonia lost more than 60,000 people, Latvia 35,000, and Lithuania 45,000 to mass arrests and executions when the Soviet Union attempted to gain control over the Baltic region. Soon after the German attack on Russia, the Baltic peoples were again the object of foreign persecution as the Nazis killed approximately 190,000 Jews in Lithuania, 90,000 in Latvia, and 4,500 in Estonia. When the Soviets returned in the fall of 1944, they reestablished Communist governments and dominated the population by deporting more than 500,000 additional citizens of the Baltic States.

Over the years, victims of the deportations to the Soviet far east have included educators, military personnel, politicians, businessmen, writers, publishers, and the families of those persecuted. In short, no one has been above suspicion in the Soviet campaign to bring the independent nations of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia under their control. In addition to terrorizing the population with executions, deportations, and the destruction of family life, the Soviet Union has attempted to squash the independent will and spirit of these courageous people by denying them freedom of religion and freedom of speech. The educational system may now only use the Russian language in the curriculum and the study of national history by Baltic youth is under the constant surveillance of the KGB. The culture is further decimated by quickly replacing those who have been deported with Russian settlers. Should this trend continue, Estonians and Latvians may soon be in the minority in their own republics.

In spite of this systematic repression of the Baltic nations, the peoples of this region have continued to keep their culture and language alive and have refused to abandon their religion. Under the constant threat of further repression and deportations, the Baltic people have bravely challenged Soviet infiltration and have refused to stand by quietly as their freedoms are stripped away. July is the month when we celebrate our own hard-won liberty and power of self-determination. I would like to join my colleagues in supporting the Baltics in their struggle for freedom.

What has enabled each country to maintain an individual identity in spite of Soviet efforts at Russification is the burning desire of the people for the right to self-determination. These people must fight every inch of the way to maintain their cultural, political, and historical identity. An officially established Baltic Freedom Day recognizes and proclaims the past of these people, thereby lending much-needed support and encouragement to their present and future struggle for dignity and freedom. The more emphatic our support, the closer that free future will come and the sooner current injustices will be relieved.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for morning business has expired.

BALANCED BUDGET—TAX LIMITATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 58) proposing an amendment to the Constitution altering Federal fiscal decisionmaking procedures.

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 58).

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. We are ready to proceed with the constitutional amendment. If any Senators have amendments to this amendment, we should like for them to come to the floor and offer those amendments at this time. We have been on and off of this constitutional amendment now for several days, and we wish to proceed and wind it up as soon as possible.

I understand that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. FORD) has an amendment, and if he wants to offer that at this time I wish the minority staff would ask him to come to the floor; we are ready to proceed.

And also the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) I understand may have some amendments; the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) I understand may have an amendment, so if the minority staff could notify Senator LEAHY, Senator MOYNIHAN, and Senator FORD, we are ready to proceed.

I understand the distinguished Senator from Hawaii (Mr. MATSUNAGA) may also have an amendment. Will the minority side notify him, too, that we are ready to proceed.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FORD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quroum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1933

Mr. FORD. Madam President, both the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the floor manager of the bill, the Senator from Utah, are here.

On the first day we discussed my amendment to require the President to submit a balanced budget, I discussed with both of them the new responsibility that was going to be shifted to the States. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina is a former Governor, and we even call each other "Governor" because we have held that office in our respective States. I was under the assumption—it is probably erroneous to assume something—that section 4 was still in the bill. This section would not transfer new responsibilities to the States unless they would also be given the responsibility to tax. Even the Washington Post, in its article of Sunday, alluded to this section. Now we find out that somewhere between the committee vote and the Senate floor, section 4 has been eliminated.

I am sure that a statement has been prepared concerning this section and that the Senator is adequately prepared to give us the reasons why it has been deleted from the bill. As my colleagues know, I have a little interest in what happens to my State and the other 49 States in the balanced budget amendment. I am very concerned that the Federal indebtedness is going to be transferred to the States.

I believe a report was issued yesterday, by a very good authority, that said if this amendment is passed, the taxes within each State will increase an average of 37 percent.

Does either the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Utah have an answer to my question?

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, section 4 of the proposed amendment was stricken by the full Judiciary Committee, by a voice vote, more than a year ago. The provision is still reflected in the committee report because the report was published shortly before this action and the bill itself was reprinted as a star print to drop the section. Section 4 was stricken at the behest of several Senators, notably Senators HEFLIN, DOLE, and GRASSLEY.

Although the section purported to limit the ability of the Federal Government to balance its budget by imposing new costs upon the States, the concern expressed by these Senators was that it might result in precisely the opposite situation. In their view, the implication of the language was that Congress had greater present authority than generally believed to impose such costs upon the States. They believed that the language was largely unnecessary because it did nothing more than reflect present law, anyway. Thus, the provision was stricken as a protection to the States.

Mr. FORD. I ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina: How can the elimination of section 4 protect the States? How in the world can it protect South Carolina or Kentucky?

Mr. THURMOND. There is nothing in the amendment now as the amendment now reads that we feel puts any burden upon the States. We feel that the amendment is clear, concise, and I think it is res ipsa loquitur. It speaks for itself.

Mr. FORD. Let me ask the distinguished Senator: If we have a balanced budget we are going to cut spending by $100 billion. If we had it today, we are going to cut spending by $104 billion, and I believe the Secretary of the Treasury said the other day I will probably have a $130 billion deficit. We are going to have to cut a large amount or increase taxes. How much of a problem then is Congress creating for the States?

Mr. THURMOND. The trouble is both parties here in Congress have been spending too much over the years. It is true for the last 27 years that the Democrats had control of both bodies in Congress——

Mr. FORD. If I may interject, the greatest percentage of increase of the deficits was under the Republican administrations.

Mr. THURMOND. I could not say that. They are not responsible. In other words, Congress is responsible.

Mr. FORD. However, the President submits the budget.

Mr. THURMOND. Congress authorizes and Congress appropriates.

Mr. FORD. And the President submits the budget.

Mr. THURMOND. And the President recommends and vetoes.

I wish to say that it is the responsibility of Congress. But at any rate, the debt accumulated over $1 trillion. Some steps have to be taken. We cannot keep on as we are going. No individual could stay in business who does not balance his budget but once in 21 years, and that is what happened there in Congress. No corporation could stay in business that does not balance its budget but once in 21 years and twice in 25 years. That is what happened here in Congress. No Government can justifiably stay in business with those kinds of deficits.

We have faced a crossroads in this country. We have absolutely to take steps to cut down on the spending.

The public is demanding we do this. Taxpayers are demanding we do this. As a matter of fiscal responsibility we have an obligation to do this. It is my hope that we will pass this amendment and get on the way.

Congress has not shown the restraint to balance the budget. Therefore, I think it is going to take a constitutional amendment to bring that pressure upon Congress and to restrain them from spending more than we take in.

Mr. FORD. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina rhetoric is fine. But some of us are going to have to look to the future.

Does the Senator think the President is not responsible? For 25 of the last 54 years Congress did a better job of budgeting than the Presidents. So at least half of the time Congress did a better job than the Presidents. At least half of the time Congress turned around and cut those budgets and reduced those budgets the President submitted. We should have this sort of cooperation.

So at least in 25 of those last 54 years Congress did better than the President.

Mr. THURMOND. They have not done well enough.

Mr. FORD. That is fine, but we have to have the cooperation of both the President and Congress.

Mr. THURMOND. After all, the responsibility for authorizing and appropriating under the Constitution is upon Congress.

Mr. FORD. The Senator said that.

Mr. THURMOND. All the President can do is to recommend. He only recommends. Congress does not have to follow that. He only recommends, I wish to repeat that. Then the President can veto. But it is the responsibility of Congress to authorize and appropriate and that is where we have gotten in trouble throughout these years.

Mr. FORD. The Senator keeps saying that. He keeps saying that and indicts himself. He indicts every Senator. He indicts every Congressman.

Mr. THURMOND. I indict everyone who spent, who advocated spending more than we have taken in. I am one of those who voted against big spending for years and the Senator can look up my record and see.

Mr. FORD. Did the Senator vote to not increase the debt ceiling last time?

Mr. THURMOND. I voted last time. We had a new President, President Reagan, and I knew what he stood for, balanced budgets, and I was willing to give him a chance.

Mr. FORD. Let me say this, then, Madam President——

Mr. THURMOND. The Government would come to a close, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. FORD. Why not try it for 24 hours and see the Government stop and see if these people care whether the bureaucrats write another regulation or spend another dime? Let us stop Government for 24 hours and see what happens out there. I wish to have it stop for 24 hours. We had 27 inches of snow 1 day and we did not do a thing for 3 days around here and everyone was happy. Not a bureaucrat went to work, not a Congressman came to the Chambers, and Government went on without us. I think we could try that for a while.

Mr. THURMOND. Why did the Senator not advocate that under President Carter? Why did he not advocate that under President Lyndon Johnson?

Mr. FORD. I was not here. The Senator was.

Let me say this, for 25 years——

Mr. THURMOND. The Senator from Kentucky was here when President Carter was here.

Mr. FORD. That is right, but I was not here under President Lyndon Johnson.

Mr. THURMOND. The Senator was here when President Carter was here. Did the Senator advocate it then?

Mr. FORD. Yes, I certainly did.

Mr. THURMOND. I do not recall the Senator's voice saying that then.

Mr. FORD. The Senator was not listening. He was not listening because I have and I have so voted.

Mr. THURMOND. Look up the record and bring it to this Senate and show it to me.

Mr. FORD. I am glad to bring my record here and lay it down before the Senator so he can see what I have done the last 8 years. I have voted many times against not balancing the budget.

Mr. THURMOND. Compare the Senator's record on spending with mine and take the organizations. Take the ACA. Take the ADA, and take the rest of them.

Mr. FORD. I am not here to argue about what has happened in the past, I say to my distinguished friend from South Carolina. I am here trying to get a balanced budget, and I think I have the answer. At 11 a.m. today a number of Senators are going to meet with the President. I understand they are going to talk about the balanced budget. I hope they ask him if he is willing to submit a balanced budget to Congress.

The thing that I wish to get straight here is that I am not saying what happened in the past. What is past is past. I am here now trying to correct the future for my children and my grandchildren, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina is doing the same.

What we have to have is the leadership and guidance of the oval office. That is what we have to have.

Mr. THURMOND. I think this constitutional amendment will provide that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will suspend. The time has expired.

PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATIONS ON EL SALVADOR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 494, which the clerk will state by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 494) with regard to Presidential certifications on conditions in El Salvador.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 494).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time divided equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Madam President, if there was ever a need for legislation on a particular matter, the case of the murdered churchwomen, the slain land reform specialists, and the disappeared freelance journalist in El Salvador is a prime example. When we formulated the certification requirements as part of Public Law 92-113, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981, we acted on the good faith of both the Salvadoran and United States Governments that in a few months time, the cases would be resolved and adjudicated. We, therefore, only required the President to certify, one time—at the first certification in January—that progress was being made in bringing to justice those guilty of these heinous crimes. We thought they would have been resolved long since, and there would have been no need to have included them in the certification that followed. Alas, because of the foot dragging, slow movement on the part of the Salvadorans, we find that is not the case.

Our experience, however, now demonstrates that the flurry of activity on these cases, which took place around the time of the first certification, has slowed to a virtual halt. Just after the first certification, five national guardsmen were indicted in the murders of the churchwomen. Unless something has happened in the last day or so, the only movement in the case is the Salvadoran court's investigation to determine whether the five guardsmen may properly be brought to trial. This incredibly slow process could very well result in the guardsmen never being brought to trial.

I understand, I hear rumors from downtown, there may be some activity, just as there was before the time of the first certification, showing another halting step forward. If there was, hooray. But, nevertheless, I think this measure should be passed, and there should be a requirement that when certification comes it include the case of the murdered Americans in El Salvador.

Lack of admissible evidence has been given as the reason for the Salvadoran court's inability to move forward on the case of the land reform specialists killed in the coffee shop of the Sheraton Hotel in January of 1981. Virtually no information has been produced by the inquiries into the disappearance in December 1980 of freelance journalist John Sullivan. It is obvious that the Government of El Salvador, and perhaps the U.S. administration, needs the prod of the certification requirement in order to work with more dedication and purpose toward bringing the guilty to justice.

In considering this measure, I hope my colleagues will note the overwhelming support it received in the House of Representatives—it was unanimously approved in the Foreign Affairs Committee and was adopted by the House of Representatives by a vote of 399 to 1. The administration supports the spirit of the measure as evidenced by the Secretary of State Shultz' statement during his confirmation hearing that:

I certainly would want to do everything I can to clarify the situation and see that responsible parties are brought to justice.

The cases of these Americans who lost their lives in El Salvador have to be regarded as more than a benchmark for measuring human rights progress in El Salvador. It is a moral question that weighs heavily on a vast majority of the American people and on us in the Congress as their representatives. We must overwhelmingly approve this measure and send a loud message to the Government of El Salvador from the people of the United States. Justice must be served.

I think many of us come from States where these murders are of particular interest. I know in my own State of Rhode Island there is nothing that has arisen in the last year that has aroused people more than the murder of these four churchwomen. They had many connections in our State and were very fine people.

I have talked at some length with Mr. Ford, the brother of one of the murdered nuns, and I share his sense of frustration and feeling that there is real foot dragging, not on our part but foot dragging on the part of the Salvadorans.

I do not fault Ambassador Hinton or our Government in pressing on this matter. I do fault the Salvadorans in declining to be pressed.

(Mr. KASTEN assumed the chair.)

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague for once again indicating the importance of this issue and also indicating the bipartisan nature of it.

I do urge forthwith passage of the pending resolution, House Joint Resolution 494.

The House of Representatives passed House Joint Resolution 494 by a vote of 399 to 1. That is as close to unanimous as they can come. In fact, it is even better than a unanimous vote because it was a rollcall vote. Everyone had a chance to vote on it, study it, and to express themselves on it.

Likewise the Committee on Foreign Relations agreed unanimously to report out the similar Senate version, Senate Joint Resolution 208, on July 14.

I joined, together with the ranking minority member, Senator PELL, of Rhode Island, to write the Secretary of State on July 6 asking that he include full reporting on the issue in his certification report.

The substance of the resolution really should appear to be noncontroversial. Everyone wants justice to prevail in the case of the four American churchwomen, the two American land reform experts murdered in El Salvador. We all seek news and information on the missing journalist, John Sullivan.

On substantive grounds, the administration has absolutely no objection to the inclusion of this requirement in the certification. Indeed, I believe the reports have been included in the draft certification reports for some time.

In discussion with us and in briefings provided to staff, the evidence is that this is one area in which some positive steps have been made.

Let me just review briefly the facts in the case:

In May 1980, six national guardsmen were arrested in the slaying of the four American churchwomen. In February 1982, indictments were handed down against five of them, and the case was turned over to an administrative judge who, according to Salvadoran law, must review the evidence prior to convening a trial.

I understand that the judge is expected to complete his review in the near future and set a date for the trial. In short, the judicial process is working in El Salvador in this case.

In the case of the two land reform experts, a commission of inquiry has been formed like that which, in the nuns' murder investigation led to the arrest of the national guardsmen. I understand that the commission may be able to contribute positively to the resolution of this case in the not-too-distant future. This will be a very important step, for to date the evidence presented has been believed not sufficient to stand up in the Salvadoran courts. I am told that the AFL-CIO's American Institute of Free Labor Development, which hired the two land reform experts, is pleased with the recent progress in the case.

This, in itself, is an independent, objective source and the report on that source is a very important report to myself and to all of us, I should think.

In the case of John Sullivan, it is disappointing to have to say that there appear to be few clues so far. Nevertheless, I am told that the case remains very much open.

Clearly we remain a long way from resolution of these cases. Of course, the families of the churchwomen and the AIFLD (A-Field) employees are impatient that the cases are not solved yet. But we must remember that El Salvador's legal system has been under fire—literally—for many years now. It is working now. The United States has provided help when asked for it.

And I would like to pay tribute to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I personally talked with the Director on a number of occasions, Judge Webster. He has assured me at all times that they have received cooperation. When their services have been requested, they have been provided and they have provided such expert advice and counsel as was fitting under the circumstances to assist in the solution of this problem.

The certification process has kept the need for continued progress constantly before the Salvadoran leadership and this steady pressure hopefully is going to produce results over time.

In sum, the information on progress in these several cases has already been included in reporting on human rights progress in El Salvador. With or without this resolution calling for certification on this issue, we would have received those reports. Calling for certification by the President does underscore our continued concern in these cases, and until these cases are resolved and brought to trial, no one doubts this concern will be with us and will influence our ability to provide continued support for El Salvador.

Mr. President, I must return to the Foreign Relations Committee to convene a meeting there. I know of no other Senators on this side who wish to speak, other than Senator HELMS, who has 15 minutes reserved in his own right. Therefore, Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts such time as he may need.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today we are considering House Joint Resolution 494, an identical resolution to Senate Joint Resolution 208 which Senator GLENN, myself, and several other colleagues had introduced in the Senate.

House Joint Resolution 494 amends the requirements for Presidential certification for continued U.S. aid to El Salvador. It requires a finding in the President's second certification; which is due shortly, that the Government of El Salvador has used all of its resources to further the investigation into the murders of four American churchwomen and two American labor representatives, to bring to justice those responsible for those murders, and to fully investigate the disappearance of the journalist John Sullivan in El Salvador.

It is indeed a sad commentary of our times, and an even more tragic reflection of the bankruptcy of administration policy in El Salvador, that this Senate must again consider the lack of progress in investigating the murders of innocent American civilians in El Salvador. At the time of the first certification of military aid to El Salvador in January, which included this certification requirement which I and other Members of the Senate had introduced, President Reagan assured the Congress that the Salvadoran Government "has made good faith efforts both to investigate the murders of the six U.S. citizens in December 1980 and January 1981 and to bring to justice those responsible for those murders." Coupled with this statement was an assurance by the Salvadoran Minister of Defense that his Government would prosecute "within a very few days" the guardsmen suspected in connection with the murders.

Six months after this statement and nearly 2 years since the murders of the four chuchwomen, still no trial has occurred and the Government of El Salvador continues to impede efforts to fully investigate these cases. According to a report released by the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights on July 20, 1982—which appeared at my request in the RECORD on July 22—the Salvadoran Government has used a variety of tactics to assure that progress in the investigation is and will continue to be "lamentably slow." The lawyers claim that top officials are "hostile to the investigation or punishment of any security force members in this case." The presiding judge and prosecuting attorney have been directly hampered in their pursuit of justice through "intimidation by Government security forces and parliamentary activists." In addition, strict interpretations of requirements regarding information gathering and trial procedures have placed a tremendous burden on the full conduct of the investigation. The Government of El Salvador has also been consistently unwilling to "pursue evidence suggesting that higher ranking military officers or parliamentary groups may be involved in the killings." In conclusion, the lawyers note that there is "a distinct possibility that no one will be tried and punished for the murders."

The blame for inaction, however, does not fall on the Salvadoran Government alone. Regrettably, the U.S. Government has obstructed the complete and thorough investigation into the murders. According to the lawyers' report, agencies in the U.S. Government, principally the FBI, CIA, Department of State, and Defense Intelligence Agency have floundered in their commitment to pursue a "full and fair investigation of the murders." For example, according to the lawyers' report the State Department has failed to pursue fully the question of the possible involvement of particularly high-ranking Salvadoran officials, suspected to be involved in the murders.

Moreover, the report finds these Government agencies to be in direct violation of the intent of the Freedom of Information Act, greatly hampering the families of the murdered victims in their quest for justice. Under the FOIA, the families are entitled to gain access to all documents pertaining to the deaths of their loved ones. The agencies have refused to provide the information asked for by the families. Instead, the administration has been inattentive, uncooperative, and evasive—and more cruelly, insensitive—in its handling of the families' requests.

Mr. President, we should all be appalled by the lack of concern exhibited by both the Government of El Salvador and the Government of the United States. It is an outrage to the fundamental principles of justice and human decency upon which the Government of the United States is founded that there continues to be no resolution of these cases. It is certainly clear from the lawyers' reports and other such reports that the Government of El Salvador has not made "good faith efforts" to investigate the murders and "bring to justice those reponsible for those murders" as certified by the President in January.

I hope that my colleagues will support passage of House Joint Resolution 494, and that this resolution will emphasize to the President the insistence of Congress on a serious and complete investigation into the murders of the six Americans and the disappearance of John Sullivan if there is to be continued military aid to El Salvador.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, entitled "Certifying the Uncertifiable—Again," and a superb article that appeared in today's New York Times by former Ambassador White on the issue of human rights violations and the failure of the El Salvadoran Government to meet its responsibilities to those Americans who were brutally murdered in El Salvador, and their families.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CERTIFYING EL SALVADOR

(By Robert E. White)

CATAUMET, MASS.—In 1981, Congress signaled its anger over the course of the Reagan policy toward El Salvador by inserting into the Foreign Assistance Act a twice-yearly certification requirement. Accordingly, all military aid will stop this month unless President Reagan warrants that the Salvadoran Government is making a concerted and significant effort to achieve progress on human rights, land redistribution, a political solution to the guerrilla conflict and free elections. As all evidence we have runs directly counter to these propositions, any document providing a rationale for Presidential certification will necessarily be long on unsubstantiated assertion and short on demonstrable fact. In spite of this, the President is expected to sign the certification provided him by a bureaucracy more comfortable with barren continuity than creative change.

All independent witnesses, including a highly professional study by the Americas Watch Committee and the American Civil Liberties Union, confirm that the slaughter of unarmed civilians goes on. How could it be otherwise? In spite of the many thousands of cases involving torture and murder by the Salvadoran armed forces, no officer or enlisted man has yet faced trial for any of these crimes. Nor will they. The refusal of the military high command of El Salvador to permit justice to take its course in the case of the four murdered American missionaries symbolizes the generals' determination to continue to use terror as a weapon against their own people.

It is true that an election was held in March this year that might have provided some evidence of progress toward Congressional goals. At least it had the potential until this month, when William J. Casey, Director of Central Intelligence, in obedience to God-knows-what imperative and with his customary exquisite sense of timing, publicly bragged that the Central Intelligence Agency had meddled in the election. As reported in The Wall Street Journal of July 16, Mr. Casey stated that "the C.I.A. was now again active in clandestine activities albeit in post-Watergate style." He added, "For instance, we helped out in the El Salvador election." Let us all hope that he operates as effectively against our nation's enemies as he does against the policy objectives of the Administration he serves.

The military and economic elites of El Salvador have developed their own rationale to justify their systematic extermination of political leaders, union members, clergy, journalists and peasants. They insist that the Reagan leadership secretly agrees with their terrorist methods and will continue to send aid because the alternatives is to see the revolutionaries victorious. If President Reagan certifies as true that which is known to be false, he will breathe new life into this chilling theory and at the same time undermine his own high reputation for honesty. He will also revive the specter of past administrations that chose to justify unpopular policies by concealing the facts from the American people.

Defenders of Presidential primacy in foreign affairs contend that Congress, by intruding so conspicuously into the domain of the executive branch, has simply asked to be lied to. They point out, correctly, that Congress is a blunt instrument in the conduct of foreign affairs and that any attempt by the legislators to play a continuing role in country-specific policy formation is likely to end in disaster. In the case of El Salvador, however, it is legitimate to argue that Congress had no intention of manacling the President or intruding into his domain but rather intended to compel high Administration officials to assess at least twice yearly whether our El Salvador policy was based on illusion or reality.

The appointment of a new Secretary of State known for candor and pragmatism gives the Reagan Administration an opportunity, if it wants to use it, to seek an honorable and sensible way out of this dilemma. One possible solution might be for the President to send a special message to Congress. The communication would state that the Secretary of State has thoroughly examined the record and based on the evidence is not completely convinced that all the Congressional considerations have been met. The President would say that in view of this disturbing report he has ordered his chief adviser on foreign affairs to review policy toward El Salvador fully and he would ask Congress to accept this message as the equivalent of certification pending the outcome of the policy reassessment. State Department lawyers could easily work out the appropriate legal language.

It is vital for the future of United States relations with Central America that President Reagan not continue to certify fantasy masquerading as fact, thereby providing a continuing whitewash of the brutal and corrupt Salvadoran military machine. The executive branch and Congress must work in harness if they are to forge a more creative and common-sense course in Central America. The Reagan Administration should look on the Congressional certification requirement on El Salvador due tomorrow as an opportunity to begin that cooperative effort.

CERTIFYING THE UNCERTIFIABLE—AGAIN

The presidential certification on progress in key reforms in El Salvador, which must be delivered to Congress by July 27, may invite even more controversy for the Reagan administration than did its prior assurance on January 28 (WRH 2/9/82).

State Department officials, worried about the slow pace on the reforms and the ongoing human rights violations, are pressuring Salvadoran authorities to deliver a better performance in order to avoid a major confrontation with Congress.

They have ample cause for concern. The following COHA report was forwarded to Capitol Hill offices. It reflects the general conclusions of studies by other human rights groups and legal organizations in recent weeks: that reforms have lost, not gained, ground since January.

Strong evidence suggests that five of the six original requirements for certification approved in December are not being fulfilled by Salvadoran authorities. Human rights violations continue: "substantial control" over the Salvadoran security forces has not brought an end to "indiscriminate torture and murder;" the government has not made "continuing progress" in the land reform; "good faith efforts" are not being made to bring about discussion of an "equitable political solution" among the parties to the conflict; nor in bringing to justice the killers of either four U.S. churchwomen or two U.S. agrarian advisers.

A review of the chronology of events surrounding the investigation into the deaths of the churchwomen (see box) suggests that the Reagan administrations's January certification notwithstanding, no progress whatsoever has been made in the case since it was declared at a "dead end" last December by the Salvadoran judge presiding in the case. In fact, lawyers representing the families of the victims said at a July 1 press conference in New York City that the State Department, CIA, FBI and the Defense Intelligence Agency all have consistently acted to prevent the families from gaining greater knowledge of the circumstances of the murders. The lawyers are filing suit under the Freedom of Information Act to force the State Department to comply with their requests for information concerning the case.

On June 23, Republican leaders in the House blocked consideration of new legislation which would again require President Reagan to certify that progress in the investigations is being made as a precondition to continued U.S. aid to El Salvador. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee also decided to suspend action on a Senate version of the bill (WRH 7/13/82).

The two suspects originally detained for the murders of the U.S. agrarian advisers have been released and no further legal action against them is expected.

The State Department cannot seem to decide what the exact scale of the political violence is currently. On June 6, State Department officials were quoted in the New York Times as claiming that the rate of politically motivated killings was about 250 per week. But when contacted by COHA three weeks later, department representatives suggested a rate of 50 per week.

At the time of this writing, no independent report has been issued with precise and comprehensive figures on the levels of violence in the past months, although the American Civil Liberties Union will soon release an updated version of a human rights study which it originally published in January. But a review of only a porition of the news reports dealing with political violence indicates that the practices of illegal abduction, torture, beheadings, and mass executions during counterinsurgency sweeps continue unabated (see chart).

The U.S. has trained three batallions—the Atlacatl, Belloso and Atonatl (the latter two in the U.S.)—which have reportedly been more effective in combat against the insurgents. But those same batallions also have been involved in indiscriminate killings of non-combatants on a large scale, according to reliable reports. Atlacatl commanding officer Domingo Monterroso himself told reporters, after a "cleanup" operation in early June in Chalatenango province, that among the 135 "subversives" claimed as killed were women and children, who Monterroso said acted as "messengers" and in other logistical roles for the guerrillas.

A New York Times article on July 4 quoted international relief workers in Honduras who said that some 200 unarmed persons were killed by soldiers and helicopter gunships in late May and mid-June while trying to cross the Sumpul River on the border with Chalatenango. The killings would have occurred in conjunction with the Atlacatl-led cleanup operation operation in the area at the time, and the relief workers said Honduran troops were involved as well.

The Reagan administration and officials of the Salvadoran government have made numerous representations to the Congress in public and private forums to assert that the land reform program is progressing, as the certification requirement stipulates. The basic argument is that the suspension of Phase III and the abolishment of Phase II on May 18 is only a temporary halt in the progress, and by taking that action the government has consolidated the gains made thus far.

Earlier, however, on April 26, the Constituent Assembly had passed Decree No. 3 repealing three decrees issued by the first revolutionary junta that formed the constitutional basis for the land, banking, and trade reforms. To attempt to reimplement reforms without the repealed decrees will now be constitutionally illegal. Statistics show that only 25-50 percent of the potential beneficiaries of Stage III ever got even provisional titles and an estimated 5,000-12,000 families have been evicted from their lands.

The U.S. Justice Department received on June 9 a statement from the Washington-based firm of Neill and Company, Inc., registering itself as an agent of the Salvadoran government. The contract which the company signed covers the period June 7, 1982, through January 31, 1983, and stipulates payment of $200,000. The services to be rendered by Neill and Company will be to: Render government relations and related legislative services to assist the Government, working with the Embassy of the Government in the United States, in increasing the amount of United States economic and military aid, in improving terms and conditions of such aid progressively and in general, providing such other appropriate assistance as will serve to achieve these purposes.

Given the hardly promising factual basis of the state of reforms in El Salvador currently, it would appear that Neill and Company will have its work cut out for it in putting a favorable light on the regime now in power.

POLITICALLY MOTIVATED KILLINGS SINCE JANUARY 28, 1982

1/30/82: At least 19 persons murdered in San Antonio Abad in San Salvador by government troops, according to relatives of the victims. (W Post, 2/1/81)

1/30/82-1/28/82: At least 452 non-combatant deaths are reported by the Socorro Juridico office, and attributed to either government forces of "unidentified assassins."

2/1/82-2/28/82: Twenty-nine persons, including women and children, are reported to have been abducted by uniformed and non-uniformed security agents and to have disappeared. (Commision de Derechos Humanos de El Salvador. No. 11, 4/10/82)

3/2/82: Two Christian Democratic Party officials are taken from their homes and found dead following day. (Socorro Juridico, 3/5/82)

2/17/82: Four Dutch journalists are killed by gunfire in Chalatenango. Contradictions later arise between government accounts and those of a special team of Dutch investigators, prompting the Dutch government to suggest the four were victims of a government ambush. (W Post, 4/15/82)

3/20/82-4/23/82: Socorro Juridico reports 751 non-combatant deaths at the hands of government forces and unidentified assassins.

4/21/82: At least 48 persons in village of Barrios are taken from their homes by army soldiers and shot, according to neighbors and relatives of the dead. A list prepared by survivors of the attack show that 25 of the victims were children younger than 12 years of age. (NY Times, 4/22/82)

4/24/82-5/14/82: Socorro Juridico reports 290 non-combatant deaths at the hands of security forces and unidentified assassins.

5/12/82-6/1/82: Twelve Christian Democratic leaders are reported murdered by unidentified assassins, presumably at the hands of rightwing political rivals. Six peasants between the age of 19 and 30 who were dragged from their homes in vicinity of San Salvador are found beheaded in El Playon. (NY Times, 6/1/82)

6/12/82: A massacre of approximately 200 Salvadoran refugees, mostly women and children, is reported to have taken place near the Rio Sumpul between El Salvador and Honduras. Written and taped testimony from 166 survivors and information given by relief workers, indicate joint participation by Honduran and Salvadoran government forces. It is the third major border massacre involving joint operations by the two countries in two years. (AIP, 6/24/82. NY Times, 7/4/82).

CHRONOLOGY OF NUNS' INVESTIGATION SINCE DECEMBER 13, 1981

12/13/81: The Salvadoran judge in charge of the case pronounces the investigation "at a dead end" (N.Y. Times, 12/14/81). The brother of one of the victims, William Ford, a Wall Street lawyer, charges that the State Department is either "unbelievably incompetent" or "uninterested" in its pursuance of the inquiry. (N.Y. Times, 12/14/81)

12/31/81: Congress approves certification requirement as a precondition for continued U.S. aid to El Salvador, setting Jan. 28 as the deadline for delivery.

1/15/82: Two weeks before certification must be made, the Salvadoran ambassador to the U.S. announces that charges will be filed against suspects in the case "within a month." (Cleveland Plain Dealer, 1/16/82)

1/21/82: The State Department and FBI are reported to be seeking a witness who claimed to have seen the nuns' murders. According to sources, the witness could implicate members of the Salvadoran oligarchy. (Plain Dealer, 1/22/82)

1/21/82: The Reagan administration states its satisfaction with the progress of the 13-month-old investigation. Embassy spokesman says the case is closer to resolution than two months earlier. (Diario Las Americas, 1/23/82)

1/27/82: Associated Press reports the accused will go on trial within several days.

1/28/82: Salvadoran Defense Minister Guillermo Garcia announces the completion of a report by a special three-member commission charged with examining the case, and that accused will soon be presented in the courts. (W Post, 1/29/82)

2/7/82: A Salvadoran judge from Zacatecoluca, Mario Alberto Rivera, resigns from his responsibility as legal head of the case, citing medical reasons. He is the second judge to quit the case and to pronounce it at a "dead end." (Boston Globe, 2/8/82)

2/8/82: A suspect arrested in the case, a former member of the National Guard and born-again Christian, confesses his direct participation in the murders. His confession was described as being sufficient to bring to trial 6 of 8 suspects under arrest. (W Post, 2/9/82)

2/10/82: Salvadoran government spokesman describes the case as "practically cleared up" (Agence-France Press, 2/10/82). Salvadoran military authorities surrender six low-ranking National Guardsmen to civilian court, and the judge has 72 hours to decide if sufficient evidence exists to bring them to trial. (NY Times, 2/11/82)

2/13/82: Five of six detained suspects are indicted for felonious assault, and the sixth is released. Announcement of indictment is made by law clerk in Zacatecoluca and by President Duarte, but the judge responsible for case is not available for comment. Reports indicate that nagging suspicions persist about the involvement of higher authorities, based in part on an overhead radio transmission at the time of the arrival of two of the victims at Cuscatlan Airport the day of the murders. (W Post, 2/16/82)

2/14/82: Acting Archbishop Rivera y Damas voices his doubts on how "a sergeant [one of the detainees] could give orders unless before hand, at least in a general form, someone has opened the door for decisions of this nature to be taken." (NY Times, 2/15/82)

2/17/82: Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders informs the families of victims that no trial will be held for at least 6 months to a year.

5/16/82: Contents of a State Department report show that the FBI still lacks crucial evidence in the case. Fingerprints of two of the original six suspects have not been delivered by the Salvadoran government, so that they may be matched to prints found on the churchwomens' van. (W Post, 5/17/82. Plain Dealer, 5/17/82)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield such time as he may need to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I submitted Senate Joint Resolution 208 concerning this same subject, which is identical to House Joint Resolution 494. We are considering today House Joint Resolution 494 because the House moved a little more rapidly than we did. In order to save time, so we do not need to send a Senate version back over for House approval, I am very glad to support House Joint Resolution 494.

Mr. President, last year Congress conditioned the continuation of United States aid to El Salvador on that Government's progress on a number of important issues. That progress is to be certified to the Congress by the President every 6 months. One of the most visible and personal issues in our relationship with El Salvador is the unresolved murders of six American citizens.

Two of the four women murdered were from my home State of Ohio, so I have followed this case very, very closely from its onset.

Present law requires that the President certify, only in his first certification, that "he has determined that the Government of El Salvador has made good-faith efforts both to investigate the murders of the six United States citizens in El Salvador in December 1980 and January 1981 and to bring to justice those responsible for those murders." Mr. President, I believe we all hoped that these cases would have been thoroughly investigated and those responsible brought to justice by this time. Unfortunately, as far as I am aware, no significant progress has been made on any of those cases since the Presidential certification in January of this year. I believe that the brutal murders of the Americans should not be allowed to drop from our consciousness nor be downrated in the context of our bilateral relationship with El Salvador. I believe the families of the murdered Americans deserve the persistence of their Government in seeing that the deaths of their loved ones are fully investigated; I believe the American people expect no less. The certification required tomorrow will insist that the Government of El Salvador be demonstrated to be making progress in protecting the human rights of its own citizens. What about the human rights of the Americans? What about justice for their memory? Do they deserve less? The purpose of the resolution is simple—to keep the unresolved investigations of the murders of the six Americans and the unexplained disappearance of another, the journalist John Sullivan, a priority issue in our bilateral relationship with El Salvador.

The House has approved this measure by a vote of 399 to 1. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, nearly fully assembled, approved it with but a single objection. The administration has stated that they have no objection to the resolution. The resolution serves to insure that the Salvadoran Government and the American people both understand that this Government is still vitally interested in and concerned about progress in these cases, thus I urge my colleagues to give House Joint Resolution 494 the full measure of support it deserves.

Mr. President, when this comes up for a vote, I would ask that we have the yeas and nays. I do not object to stacking that vote to a later time this afternoon, which has been suggested. That is fine with me. I would like to have the yeas and nays on this and I ask for them at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second at this time.

Mr. GLENN. We will wait for more Members to be on the floor. I wish to be on record and I wish the staff to note that I want the yeas and nays on this vote.

Mr. PELL. That is an excellent idea.

I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to associate myself with the remarks made by the Senator from Ohio. Frankly, I cannot understand why there has been a problem getting this simple and just resolution to the floor for full Senate consideration.

Two weeks ago I raised this issue with Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders during a special hearing on El Salvador which I had requested. At this hearing I asked Secretary Enders if the State Department would support a resolution to include information on the six slain Americans in the upcoming certification report. And he said the State Department would support such a resolution. In fact, he said that they were going to be gathering the information anyway.

Mr. President, we must not lose sight of the underlying issue. We are talking about the murders of four American churchwomen—defenseless women of peace. No one, no one can dispute that. They were killed in December 1980. Over 18 months ago. No trial date has been set. We are talking about two American agricultural experts who were in El Salvador to assist in the land reform program. Men of peace and support. They too were killed, their murderers have not been brought to justice.

I can think of few other more important votes, than for the Senate to go on record in support of this resolution, to do what we can to investigate these deaths, and punish the culprits.

Mr. President, of course this issue goes beyond the death of the nuns.

According to Monday's Washington Post, the Reagan administration has new and clear-cut evidence that police in El Salvador have inflicted torture on Salvadoran citizens in recent months. We are not talking now about lower level security forces, random violence. We have evidence that a volunteer from the Green Cross, a leading humanitarian agency, was tortured over several days in a secret section of the national police headquarters in downtown San Salvador. Downtown San Salvador.

Mr. President, let us be clear about this certification. On both the issue of the Catholic nuns and the general condition of human rights in El Salvador, the administration seems to be telling us that, yes, there are problems, but that these problems, these abuses are found in the lower levels of the military, done by rural civil defense and other security forces. Recently, Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders assured me that the military high command has pledged to end abuses and has issued orders to that end. Secretary Enders says:

It is a fact that reports of torture and execution of prisoners and the participation of individual members of the security forces in right-wing terrorist activity continue, and in some cases are credible. This is particularly true at lower levels of the military and civil defense.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at what happened in the case of the volunteer for the Green Cross. He was taken to the national police headquarters, and tortured on three separate occasions. All of this "for distributing medicines received through international channels to displaced persons * * *."

If the President certifies that there has been progress in human rights in El Salvador, all I can say is that he has a different definition of human rights than I do. In the past few days I have received report after report citing human rights abuses which continue to go on in El Salvador. Amnesty International, the Nobel Prize winning human rights group found that in recent months, there has been no improvement in the human rights situation. The American Civil Liberties Union and the Americas Watch Committee asserts that none of the conditions for certification have been met. Specifically, certification requires that military assistance or sales must stop unless the President certifies that the Government of El Salvador "is making a concerted and significant effort to comply with internationally recognized rights."

Mr. President, from what I have read and hear, there has been no progress in El Salvador—no progress in meeting those most basic conditions—security of the person—that would allow for the peaceful resolution for the problems in that country. How much will the American taxpayer be asked to bear, how much will we have to pay to make up for this "lack of progress" in El Salvador? The American public will not be fooled about this certification, and will be skeptical about the never-ending requests for more and more money to this poor, war-torn nation.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, at the outset, let me commend my colleague from Rhode Island as well as our chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator PERCY, I also want to commend Senator GLENN. It was Senator GLENN's resolution in the Senate which was offered on this issue some weeks ago. In an effort to expedite the matter, the committee recently approved the House resolution in order to have this become law before the 28th of July, the date when certifiction is required.

Mr. President, before getting into the substance of my remarks, I think it might be helpful to put this resolution in some sort of historical perspective.

In April 1981 when I wrote the certification bill and presented it to the Foreign Relations Committee, I included a one-time certification with regard to the investigation and prosecution of those responsible for the deaths of the churchwomen and the labor advisers.

It never occurred to me in April 1981 that I would be standing on the floor of the U.S. Senate in July of 1982 still pursuing that particular issue. It certainly did not occur to me in September of 1981 when the measure came before the Senate and was approved as an amendment to the foreign aid bill. It certainly did not occur to us in December of 1981 when the House and the Senate completed their conference on that bill. It certainly did not occur to us in the latter part of December when the President signed the legislation.

In fact, it was the assumption, I think, of all of us that by July of 1982 this matter would be successfully concluded. The fact that it is not, I think, speaks louder than any words that can be uttered on the floor of the Senate this morning in support of this resolution.

Mr. President, I will be brief in my remarks concerning the pending resolution.

To be sure, it is not a complex measure. It involves six names. Six individuals. Six Americans. A common ending. A common fate. And they share a common epitaph: Death in El Salvador. There is a seventh victim. "Disappeared" is how they refer to him. In life they were four churchwomen, two labor advisers, and a freelance journalist.

In many respects they represented the best that America has to offer. No, they were not attached to the official U.S. community, the Embassy. They were not members, as we say, of "the country team." And yet each of them, in a humble sort of way, represented the United States, our best traditions, our highest ideals, and what we stand for as a nation.

Death came to the four churchwomen on the evening of December 2, 1980, on a dirt road near the town of Rosario de la Paz. They were savagely assaulted and then executed gangland style, each with a bullet through the head, by members of the Salvadoran National Guard. Two days later their bodies were discovered in a makeshift grave not far from the San Salvador Airport.

A month later, January 3, 1981, the two American labor advisers met a similar fate. While seated in the coffeeshop of the fashionable Sheraton Hotel in downtown San Salvador two unidentified assassins approached their table, drew automatic pistols, and in a barrage of sudden gunfire brutally took their lives. Rodolfo Viera, head of the Salvador land reform program, unfortunately sat with his American colleagues that evening. He, too, fell victim to the assassins' bullets.

The freelance journalist? Who knows? The record, what there is of it, simply indicates that he "disappeared" from his San Salvador hotel room sometime in December of 1980. There has been no further word. Whereabouts unknown.

Tragic, brutal, senseless. These cases accurately reflect the firestorm of political violence that has become the hallmark of Salvadoran society. During the past 2 or 3 years, it is estimated that nearly 35,000 Salvadorans, mostly civilians, have perished. The ugly truth is that nobody really knows for sure how many have been assassinated. But what we know is that the human loss and the human tragedy virtually defy description and, frankly, it is totally beyond our comprehension 35,000, most of them civilian deaths, in a country of 5 million people would be comparable to 1,500,000 civilian deaths in our country. And no less incomprehensible is the fact that the Salvadoran Government, the Salvadoran judicial system, the Salvadoran authorities—none of them has been able to produce one single solitary conviction.

If 1½ million people in this country were to lose their lives in 3 years and if there was not one conviction, think of the outrage that would be expressed. And yet we are standing before this body as we will in the next few days with the administration coming forward and saying, "We can certify. We can certify. Things are improving in El Salvador."

Mr. President, in El Salvador death stalks the land and, it is the living who are on trial. Death to the subversives. Death to the churchwomen, to the journalists, the labor advisers. Their crime was to challenge the old order, to question the status quo and to attack the repression and injustice on which that country has been built for too many years.

These seven and others like them, we are told, are El Salvador's subversives. Helping the have-nots, helping the downtrodden, the politically forgotten people of El Salvador—this is how the powers that be in El Salvador define subversion. Helping to educate the illiterate, helping to feed the malnourished, helping to cure the sick, helping to clothe the ragged, helping to house the homeless, helping to sustain the destitute—subversive activities, one and all, we are told.

In El Salvador, this kind of subversion is a crime. It is a capital crime. Were it possible, just ask the four churchwomen. Just ask the two labor advisers; ask the journalist. And certainly, if we could, we ought to ask the thousands of Salvadorans themselves.

Death is a way of life in that unhappy land. It will remain so, I am afraid, until deep-seated and fundamental changes are made in its economic, social, and political landscape. Our aid and our assistance must be dedicated to those changes. That dedication, that commitment, certainly can be no less than the dedication and the commitment made by those who have been struck down by an assassin's bullet, be they American, Salvadoran, Dutch, or Mexican.

The task before us, Mr. President, is to do all we can to insure that they did not die in vain. In a broader sense, then, Mr. President, this is the message contained in the resolution before this body. It should be adopted without any further delay.

I yield back the floor.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, this measure, does not support the praiseworthy moral sentiment which it purports to represents. All Senators should desire to see justice done in the cases enumerated in this resolution. All Senators abhor the killing of innocent civilians by unknown assassins. But that is not the issue here.

The issue at stake today, Mr. President, is the foreign policy priorities of the Government of the United States. At this very moment, armed revolutionary groups roam the urban and rural regions of El Salvador, destroying the basic means of transportation, of sanitation, or work and production, and of sustenance of the Salvadoran people. Their stated aim is to intimidate the people of El Salvador into capitulation to guerrilla revolution. Murder, especially mass murder designed to intimidate their foes among the helpless peasants, is their most heinous weapon.

Mr. President, the people of El Salvador need only to look at neighboring Nicaragua to see how meaningless are the promises. How hollow are the slogans, of the glorious revolution. The Salvadoran people have resisted the guerrillas with all their might, most recently by defying the threats of death and retribution which the guerrillas promulgated before the March 28 elections. Happily, Mr. President, the people of El Salvador went to the polls in massive numbers to resoundingly renounce the guerrillas and everything they stand for.

In the light of this, Mr. President, one must wonder, what is the purpose of the resolution we see before us today? It does not mention the atrocities of the guerrillas; it does not mention the thousands of deaths which are directly attributable to the terrorists avowed aim of destruction and intimidation. It does not mention the millions of dollars of damage which the guerrillas have wrought on the Salvadoran economy. It does not mention the intimidation which millions of Salvadorans must face daily, merely to get out of bed and go to work in the morning, in defiance of guerrilla threats.

The measure properly addresses the unresolved deaths of six American citizens in crimes committed under a former government, and the more recent disappearance of an American journalist.

Mr. President, Senator HELMS has addressed the gravity of those crimes, and the corresponding role of the certification process, in his views which are attached to the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations to Senate Joint Resolution 208.

Mr. President, my only further comment concerns the amazing lack of proportion in the efforts of those who so strongly urged upon us the certification requirements for El Salvador in the first place. On the one hand, they never tire in their demands for improvement on the part of the Salvadoran Government. But what about the guerrillas? All we hear is, that the United States should treat them like civilized democrats, give them the seal of approval, the legitimacy of peaceful political parties who are just seeking reform.

Mr. President, there should be added to this legislation, and to this debate, a condemnation of the wanton violence of the terrorism and criminality which has convulsed El Salvador in recent years. Can there be only words of kindness, of conciliation, and democratic approval for the guerrillas? Must we save all our condemnation, our concern, and the force of our moral criticism for the Government of El Salvador? Of course it is imperfect; but it is our ally in fighting an insidious, lethal, and totally lawless terrorist force. Must be criticize our ally, and continually lend credibility, respectability, and the implication of normal human virtues to the depraved terrorists who have targeted that country?

Mr. President, if the Congress continues to send the message to the world that we are insensitive to the atrocities, the murders, the program for chaos and destruction, and the wanton violence which is the substance of the revolutionary guerrilla movement in El Salvador, then the world can only assume that history is on the side of the terrorist guerrillas, as far as this Congress is concerned.

That is the message with which I do not concur, Mr. President, and I must therefore oppose the resolution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the additional views of Senator HELMS be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the additional views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR JESSE HELMS OF NORTH CAROLINA TO SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 208.

On its face, S.J. Res. 208 would appear to be an initiative that no one could reasonably oppose. It certainly seeks an end which we all support, the ultimate resolution of the tragic deaths of the three American nuns, one other woman religious worker, and two AIFLD representatives, all of whom were killed in El Salvador in December of 1980. Also, one American journalist is missing. Amidst all the violence which has been wrought upon the people of that tragic country, these deaths shock the conscience of our own citizens and emphasize the horror of the conflict in El Salvador.

It goes without saying that I fully support the desire of the American people to see justice done in these matters. But I do not believe S.J. Res. 208 will be helpful in that regard.

The resolution was reported on July 14 by the Committee on Foreign Relations for no more than five minutes as an unscheduled adjunct to a Committee vote on the nomination of George Shultz to be Secretary of State. In fact, S.J. Res. 208 was scheduled for the following day, Thursday, July 15, at noon. Thus the committee devoted almost no discussion to it and, in fact, precluded reasonable discussion of S.J. Res. 208 when the legislation was precipitiously called up for a vote and approval without a dissenting vote.

A number of the Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are said to have misgivings about S.J. Res. 208—not about its stated goal, which I reiterate, we all share, but about unduly and perhaps unwisely inhibiting the certification process. Nonetheless, the Committee, in unseemly haste and with scarcely any consideration, voted out a bill which deserved careful consideration.

Proponents of the measure were obviously eager to rush its approval without any discussion at all; therefore, they were willing to forego the most nominal of courtesies by informing the Chairman of the Committee of their intention to bring it up virtually until they did so. Nor did they bother to inform the Chairman of the relevant Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, who was managing a bill on the Senate floor in his role as Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, even though they were surely aware that he desired to participate in the discussion.

There is, however, a more fundamental concern about this legislation: If the Committee had been given a chance to discuss the merits of this legislation, it would have been pointed out that S.J. Rse. 208 rests on a very questionable framework, namely, the certification process. Senators should bear in mind that the original legislation for this process passed the Senate by a mere four-vote margin. There were considerable apprehension, so evident in that close vote, that the certification requirements would not achieve their goal—that they would, instead, impede the policy of the United States as applied to the critical strategic situation in Central America.

I submit that events have borne out that apprehension. For, while the certification has the appearance of merely stipulating certain desiderata, the fact is that no such legislative prescription is needed. The Administration and Congress have made clear their shared support for the development of democracy in El Salvador and our contempt for excessive military violence.

It is worthy of mention, however, that the certification requirements make no reference whatever of atrocities committed by the terrorist guerrillas, even though these guerrillas in El Salvador are engaging in a brutal campaign of intimidation, terror and extermination of innocent people in El Salvador. Nonetheless, the same voices which urged us to adopt the certification requirement last year are now demanding that our Government require the Salvadoran Government to deal with the terrorists as equal partners in political negotiations. This is an incredible contradiction—that is given continued credibility by the pecularities of the certification process and the distortions which it introduces into American foreign policy.

Furthermore, we are now seeing millions of U.S. taxpayer dollars spend to prop up a once/prosperous economy in El Salvador, an economy which is now on the verge of collapse. And what led to this collapse? Will anyone pretend that the economy of El Salvador has not been devastated by the programs of nationalization which have ravaged the banking, export and agricultural functions in that country? Indeed, there is precious little El Salvador's economy left to expropriate. Any yet, the certification process has elevated the so-called "reform" process—which is really a process of revolutionary expropriation and nationalization—to the level of an unchangeable and permanent symbol, written in stone, defiant of all the historical realities which reflect its basic weaknesses and contradictions.

One further question: What about the democratic elections urged by the certification process? On March 28, El Salvador's citizens emerged in unanticipated numbers, twice as many as the most optimistic predictions, to elect a government to replace the self-proclaimed Revolutionary Junta. It was this Junta—an unelected handful of oligarchs—which initiated the "reforms" immediately after seizing power, thus effectively putting the most productive lands and industries, and vertually all the country's financial resources, under the control of the government. Here I use the term "oligarch" advisedly, because it refers to the rule by the few, which is precisely what the Revolutionary Junta was. And so it was the "few" within the Junta, along with an understaffed, but overzealous U.S. Embassy contingent, which orchestrated the so-called reforms which ground El Salvador's economy to a halt.

Nonetheless, on March 28, 1982, the people of El Salvador went to the polls to elect a truly representative government, and the results were impressive. But the proponents of the certification requirement for democratic progress in El Salvador were silent, after this victory for El Salvador's democracy and for American aims in this Hemisphere. Were they embarrassed by the remarkable turnout of El Salvador's voters? Are they now embarrassed by the functioning democracy and the Constituent Assembly, merely because it appears to be "conservative"?

It must not be overlooked that the Constituent Assembly is searching for ways to return El Salvador to the ranks of productive, free enterprise countries whose products can compete in the international marketplace. There are clear indications that the Constituent Assembly will probe the corruption and inefficiency of Revolutionary Junta's nationalization of banks, the export industry and the prime agricultural lands—actions which enriched certain insider groups under the Revolutionary Junta.

Would not such a proof constitute "progress"? Shouldn't the United States welcome efforts in El Salvador to make its economy efficient and free, so that American taxpayers will not be asked to prop up socialism, inefficiency and corruption?

There are many, many specifics which Americans would like to see achieved in El Salvador. We would like to see a victory over terrorism and guerrilla violence. We would like to see free markets which would give all Salvadorans more opportunity for work and for production. We would like to see real progress in the fight against socialism and corruption.

But these items are not included in the certification legislation. Thus, while they are far more fundamental than most of the items included in the certification statute, they take the back seat, both in the Government of El Salvador and in the U.S. State Department.

It is for this reason that I originally questioned the adoption of the certification legislation. Time has shown how ill-advised the certification process has been.

Instead of the strategic threat to the United States in the Central American region, or trying to formulate a policy to counter such a threat, the limited manpower of the U.S. Government is consumed in meeting deadlines for the submission of reports—red tape, in all candor, which becomes the launching pad for emotional dispute. Note, for instance, the events of the past few days concerning report data required in the certification due on July 28.

Admittedly, precise assessment of circumstances in Central America is ofter impossible. U.S. efforts to help bring stability to that region are too often frustrated by self-appointed experts who, while no doubt unwillingly, nonetheless lend comfort to the forces of terrorism. I am reminded of the recent capture by the guerrillas of the Assistant Defense Minister of El Salvador, Colonel Castillo. Castillo, when first captured, had though that his guerrilla captors were actually regular army units, because they were dressed in army uniforms. If Colonel Castillo could not distinguish the guerrillas from the army units they pretended to be, how could everyday observers, especially the international press corps, pretend to distinguish among all the perpetrators of violence within that country?

One thing seems clear. It is the stated policy of the guerrillas to wreak havoc in El Salvador, it is the policy of the El Salvadoran Government to extinguish the guerrilla threat and restore peace and harmony to the people of El Salvador in a democratic environment. But no certification requirement can adequately address that goal—only the common sense of legislators dealing with the day-to-day situation through policymakers in our country and abroad can do so adequately.

Had all the Senators in this body assembled all their desires for El Salvador and put them into a list embodied in certification requirements, the Governments of the United States and El Salvador would be spending all their time in submitting reports and formulating policies aimed at fulfilling the copious and often contradictory certification requirements alone, instead of the strategic threat in the regions. A few existing requirements have already shown how contradictory the requirements are. For instance, they state the desire for progress toward democratic institutions in El Salvador; in actuality, we have that progress in the results of the Constituent Assembly on March 28. However, the Constitutent Assembly, taking stock from the devastation wrought in the economy by the expropriations, is seeking ways to restore confidence in the agricultural sector, and as the same time to preserve the rights of new landowners to land along with the rights of former owners to compensation. But that move, insofar as it embodies a move away from socialism and toward free enterprise, is opposed by many who clamored for the certification process. El Salvador can have any government it wants, they imply, so long as it is socialist. Must the United States demand not only that the Salvadorans vote but that they vote the way we want them to, before they can expect our support?

Let me reiterate, in conclusion that the desire for the speedy resolution of the tragic matters, mentioned at the outset of these Additional Views, is a desire held by every Senator and, no doubt, by all Americans familiar with the situation in El Salvador. However, that desire does not automatically lead prudent legislators to a bureaucratic certification process as a best means of achieving such a goal. In fact, to incorporate such a requirement into existing legislation would serve only to distort further American policy toward El Salvador, a signal that would ill serve this body, or our country.

I sincerely believe that the Senate should reject S.J. Res. 208.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I believe this question is of such importance that we should have a rollcall vote.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator withhold asking for the yeas and nays? Then I shall cooperate with him.

Mr. PELL. I withhold that, Mr. President.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I think there can be no argument and there is no argument on the part of this Senator for the surface appearance of this resolution. It has a praiseworthy sentiment. There is no Member of the Senate who does not desire to see justice done in the cases enumerated in this resolution. There is no one who does not abhor the killing of innocent civilians by unknown assassins. But I wonder, Mr. President, if that is the real issue here.

The issue, I think Mr. President, may involve the credibility of the U.S. Government. At this very moment, armed revolutionary groups roam the urban and rural regions of El Salvador, bent on the destruction of the basic means of transportation, of sanitation, of work and production and of sustenance to the Salvadoran people.

Their obvious aim, their express aim is to intimidate the people of El Salvador into capitulation to guerrilla revolution. Murder and especially mass murder designed to intimidate their foes among the helpless peasants is their most callous weapon. My problem with this resolution, Mr. President, is that it does not address that aspect. In a moment, I am going to seek to correct that.

Mr. President, the people of El Salvador need only to look at neighboring Nicaragua to see how empty are the promises, how hollow are the slogans of the glorious revolution. The Salvadoran people have resisted the guerrillas with all of their might, most recently by defying the threats of death and revolution which the guerrillas promulgated before the March 28 election. Happily, Mr. President, and to the astonishment of many, the people of El Salvador went to the polls in massive numbers to renounce resoundingly the guerrillas and everything they stand for.

Yet what does the pending resolution have to say about these guerrillas, financed and nurtured and supported by Marxists? The distinguished occupant of the chair knows precisely what I am talking about. He knows who is exporting this revolution throughout Central America. He knows that it comes from the Soviet Union to Cuba to Nicaragua to El Salvador, the intent being to subject Central America—all of it—to Communist domination. Yet this resolution is silent about all of that.

Once in a while, I have some American say to me, "Well, what is in it for us regardless of what happens in Central America?" I shall tell you, Mr. President, what is in it for us. If we stand back, do nothing to support our anti-Communist friends in Central America—indeed, if we take action to intimidate these admittedly imperfect friends—then Central America will be taken over by the Marxists. And I daresay we shall have a repeat in Central America of precisely what happened in Cambodia and Vietnam, when we allowed that area to be taken over by Marxism. An estimated 10 percent of the population of those countries was willing to climb upon leaky boats to escape the tyranny of communism. Thousands died, nobody knows how many. But they did not want to live under the subjugation of communism.

Bear in mind that 10 percent figure, Mr. President, because let us apply it to the 100 million people who live between the Rio Grande and the Panama Canal—Central America.

If we, by not doing all that we can do to support our anti-Communist friends, allow Central America to become subjugated, then we can expect that not 10 percent but 15, 20, 25 percent—who knows what the percentage will be?—will try to escape. And they will not have to use leaky boats, Mr. President. They will walk north. They will walk over the borders. They will not be boat people, they will be feet people.

I ask my friends, what will the United States then do? Because there are more persons guarding this Capitol of the United States today than guard our entire southern border. What will we do with 10 million additional aliens—who do not speak English, who do not have jobs, who do not have homes, who do not have schools, who have nothing? Mr. President, if you think the economic difficulties now confronting this Nation are bad, wait until that happens.

That is the fault I find with this resolution. It addresses nothing about the Communist terrorists in El Salvador. It is totally lacking in balance and proportion.

Mr. President, I returned from North Carolina just a few minutes ago, and I learned, to my surprise, that, by unanimous consent, no amendment to this resolution will be in order. I ask the Chair if that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HELMS. I am saddened by that, but I want to give my friends an opportunity to let the Senate speak totally on the question, the additional question, I am raising. The yeas and nays have not yet been obtained; therefore, the amendment is subject to modification, I presume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator should be advised that there is no amendment. The vehicle before the Senate is a House joint resolution.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. Did I use the word "amendment"? I meant resolution. The resolution would be subject to modification?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that there is no way the House joint resolution can be modified at this time.

Mr. HELMS. Except, of course, by unanimous consent.

Well, let me put it this way, Mr. President. Let me read what I propose, and then perhaps my friend will accord me the courtesy of vitiating the unanimous-consent agreement of which I was unaware. It is a simple amendment I propose, and I will read it:

At the end of the joint resolution proposed with regard to Presidential certifications on conditions in El Salvador, add at the end thereof the following: "The third certification required under this section and all subsequent certifications may be met only if they include a determination by the President that the government of El Salvador has made progress in its efforts to control and defeat the terrorist guerrilla forces that have waged a war of violence, intimidation, murder, and lawlessness against the people of El Salvador and their democratically-elected government.".

Mr. President, I do not see why anybody would object to the control and defeat of the terrorist guerrilla forces. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the previous agreement, of which I had no knowledge, that no amendments would be in order, be vistiated so that I can offer this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PELL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to yield so that I may say why I object.

There is nothing wrong with the proposal of the Senator from North Carolina as a separate matter.

What we are trying to do here is to focus on the murder of these American citizens, and that alone. We are trying to put a spotlight on it.

There is no question that there are many other problems in that part of the world, but the focus of this resolution is a narrow one. If we amend it now, it will mean that it will have to go back to the House; whereas, as it is now, it takes effect without any further action by the House.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I must say, with all respect to my friend, that I am astonished. I am not attempting to divert nor am I even suggesting that the spotlight be diverted one iota from the crimes enumerated in this resolution. All I am saying is, let us meet head-on an equally if not worse crime involving infinitely more deaths, more slaughter. Let us look at the whole matter in perspective.

I also propose implicitly that we address the peril of Central America falling to the Communists, and every member of the Foreign Relations Committee knows of that peril.

What if it does take a couple of days to send it back to the House of Representatives? What if it does? I see no harm in a small delay. So I am astonished that I am not accorded the courtesy of vitiating a unanimous-consent agreement to which I would not have agreed had I been here. I was told that my rights would be protected and that I would have time to speak.

But let the record be clear, as it will be clear, as to what has been objected to. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is objecting to the simultaneous consideration of the crimes against the Americans and the crimes against the Salvadoran people. I am astonished that the Senator has objected to consideration of encouragement of the freely elected Salvadoran Government's attempts to control and defeat the Marxist terrorists seeking to abolish human rights in El Salvador.

Mr. President, in the light of the objection—which I genuinely regret and which surprises me—I see no point in further consuming the time of the Senate, except to raise this question: What is the purpose of the resolution we have before us? It does not mention the atrocities of the guerrillas; it does not mention the thousands of deaths which are directly attributable to the terrorists' avowed aim of destruction and intimidation. It does not mention the millions of dollars of damage which the guerrillas have wrought on the Salvadoran economy. It does not mention the intimidation which millions of Salvadorans must face daily, merely to get out of bed and go to work in the morning, in defiance of guerrilla threats.

The measure properly addresses the unresolved deaths of six American citizens, in crimes committed under a former government, and the more recent disappearance of an American journalist.

Mr. President, I have addressed the gravity of those crimes, and the corresponding role of the certification process, in my views which are attached to the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations to Senate Joint Resolution 208, and I ask unanimous consent that they be included printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, my only further comment at this time concerns the amazing lack of proportion in the efforts of those who so strongly urged upon us the certification requirements for El Salvador in the first place. On the one hand, they never tire in their demands for improvement on the part of the Salvadoran Government. But what of the guerrillas? All we hear is, treat them like civilized democrats, give them the seal of approval, the legitimacy of peaceful political parties who are just seeking reform.

Mr. President, is there no place in any of this legislation, or in the debate, for that matter, for a condemnation of the wanton violence of the terrorism and criminality which has convulsed El Salvador in recent years? Can there be only words of kindness, of conciliation, and democratic negotiations for the guerrillas? Must we save all our condemnation, our concern, and the force of our moral criticism for the government of El Salvador? Of course it is imperfect; but it is our ally in fighting an insidious, lethal, and totally lawless terrorist force. Must we criticize our ally, and continually lend credibility, respectability, and the implication of normal human virtues to the depraved terrorists who have targeted that country?

Mr. President, if Congress continues to send the message to the world that we are insensitive to the atrocities, the murders, the program for chaos and destruction, and the wanton violence which is the substance of the guerrilla movement in El Salvador, then the world can only assume that history is on the side of the terrorist guerrillas, as far as this Congress is concerned.

That is a message with which I do not concur, Mr. President, and therefore I cannot support the resolution. I do support the goal of obtaining justice for the victims of the crimes mentioned in the resolution, but I cannot support a resolution which isolates an unfortunate tragedy and elevates it out of the larger tragedy which has been taking place. I therefore intend to vote "present" on this resolution.

Mr. President, an article in today's Washington Times by Daniel James helps to put the El Salvador certification issue in perspective. Mr. James examined 51 articles by Raymond Bonner which appeared in the New York Times between January 11 and June 30 of this year in an effort to ascertain what kind of a message Mr. Bonner and the New York Times were presenting to the American people. What they show is the same kind of one-sided bias against the Salvadoran government and the Salvadoran people as is evident in the certification process of the present resolution.

As the Washington Times says,

Media image-making has all but supplanted public discussion of substantive issues in the Salvadoran crisis. Instead of debate over whether El Salvador is or is not moving towards some kind of democracy, there are unresolvable disputes over how many noncombatants have been killed in the raging civil conflict. This is the deliberate work of a worldwide disinformation campaign to persuade the United States to stop helping the Salvadoran government.

The effort to push this new certification through, although laudable on its face, is part of this campaign to present an unbalanced image of the efforts of the Salvadoran people to preserve their freedom and to ward off socialism and communism.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Daniel James, "El Salvador certification: disinformation blurs issue," in the Washington Times of July 27, 1982 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks as exhibit 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR JESSE HELMS OF NORTH CAROLINA TO SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 208

On its face, S.J. Res. 208 would appear to be an initiative that no one could reasonably oppose. It certainly seeks an end which we all support, the ultimate resolution of the tragic deaths of the three American nuns, one other woman religious worker, and two AIFLD representatives, all of whom were killed in El Salvador in December of 1980. Also, one American journalist is missing. Amidst all the violence which has been wrought upon the people of that tragic country, these deaths shock the conscience of our own citizens and emphasize the horror of the conflict in El Salvador.

It goes without saying that I fully support the desire of the American people to see justice done in these matters. But I do not believe S.J. Res. 208 will be helpful in that regard.

The Resolution was reported on July 14 by the Committee on Foreign Relations for no more than five minutes as an unscheduled adjunct to a Committee vote on the nomination of George Shultz to be Secretary of State. In fact, S.J. Res. 208 was scheduled to be considered at a special hearing scheduled for the following day, Thursday, July 15, at noon. Thus, the Committee devoted almost no discussion to it and, in fact, precluded reasonable discussion of S.J. Res. 208 when the legislation was precipitously called up for a vote and approved without a dissenting vote.

A number of the Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are said to have had misgivings about S.J. Res. 208—not about its stated goal, which I reiterate, we all share, but about unduly and perhaps unwisely inhibiting the certification process. Nonetheless, the Committee, in unseemly haste and with scarcely any consideration, voted out a bill which deserved careful consideration.

Proponents of the measure were obviously eager to rush its approval without any discussion at all; therefore, they were willing to forgo the most nominal of courtesies by informing the Chairman of the Committee of their intention to bring it up virtually until they did so. Nor did they bother to inform the Chairman of the relevant Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, who was managing a bill on the Senate floor in his role as Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, even though they were surely aware that he desired to participate in the discussion.

There is, however, a more fundamental concern about this legislation: If the Committee had been given a chance to discuss the merits of this legislation, it would have been pointed out that S.J. Res. 208 rests on a very questionable framework, namely, the certification process. Senators should bear in mind that the original legislation for this process passed the Senate by a mere four-vote margin. There was considerable apprehension, so evident in that close vote, that the certification requirements would not achieve their goal—that they would, instead, impede the policy of the United States as applied to the critical strategic situation in Central America.

I submit that events have borne out that apprehension. For, while the certification has the appearance of merely stipulating certain desiderata, the fact is that no such legislative prescription is needed. The Administration and Congress have made clear their shared support for the development of democracy in El Salvador and our contempt for excessive military violence.

It is worthy of mention, however, that the certification requirements make no reference whatever of atrocities committed by the terrorist guerrillas, even though these guerrillas in El Salvador are engaging in a brutal campaign of intimidation, terror and extermination of innocent people in El Salvador. Nonetheless, the same voices which urged us to adopt the certification requirement last year are now demanding that our Government require the Salvadoran Government to deal with the terrorists as equal partners in political negotiations. This is an incredible contradiction—that is given continued credibility by the peculiarities of the certification process and the distortions which it introduces into American foreign policy.

Furthermore, we are now seeing millions of U.S. taxpayer dollars spent to prop up a once-prosperous economy in El Salvador, an economy which is now on the verge of collapse. And what led to this collapse? Will anyone pretend that the economy of El Salvador has not been devastated by the programs of nationalization which have ravaged the banking, export and agricultural functions in that country? Indeed, there is precious little of El Salvador's economy left to expropriate. And yet, the certification process has elevated the so-called "reform" process—which is really a process of revolutionary expropriation and nationalization—to the level of an unchangeable and permanent symbol, written in stone, defiant of all the historical realities which reflects its basic weaknesses and contradictions.

One further question: What about the democratic elections urged by the certification process? On March 28, El Salvador's citizens emerged in unanticipated numbers, twice as many as the most optimistic predictions, to elect a government to replace the self-proclaimed Revolutionary Junta. It was this Junta—an unelected handful of oligarchs—which initiated the "reforms" immediately after seizing power, thus effectively putting the most productive lands and industries, and virtually all the country's financial resources, under the control of the government. Here I use the term "oligarch" advisedly, because it refers to the rule by the few, which is precisely what the Revolutionary Junta was. And so it was the "few" within in Junta, along with an understaffed, but overzealous U.S. Embassy contingent, which orchestrated the so-called reforms which ground El Salvador's economy to halt.

Nonetheless, on March 28, 1982, the people of El Salvador went to the polls to elect a truly representative government, and the results were impressive. But the proponents of the certification requirement for democratic progress in El Salvador's democracy and for American aims in this Hemisphere. Were they embarrased by the remarkable turnout of El Salvador's voters? Are they now embarrassed by the functioning democracy and the Constituent Assembly, merely because it appears to be "conservative"?

It must not be overlooked that the Constituent Assembly is searching for ways to return El Salvador to the ranks of productive, free enterprise countries whose products can compete in the international marketplace. There are clear indications that the Constituent Assembly will probe the corruption and inefficiency of Revolutionary Junta's nationalization of banks, the export industry and the prime agricultural lands—actions which enriched certain insider groups under the Revolutionary Junta.

Would not such a proof constitute "progress"? Shouldn't the United States welcome efforts in El Salvador to make its economy efficient and free, so that American taxpayers will not be asked to prop up socialism, inefficiency and corruption?

There are many, many specifics which Americans would like to see achieved in El Salvador. We would like to see a victory over terrorism and guerrilla violence. We would like to see free markets which would give all Salvadorans more opportunity for work and for production. We would like to see real progress in the fight against socialism and corruption.

But these items are not included in the certification legislation. Thus, while they are far more fundamental than most of the items included in the certification statute, they take the back seat, both in the Government of El Salvador and in the U.S. State Department.

It is for this reason that I originally questioned the adoption of the certification legislation. Time has shown just how ill-advised the certification process has been.

Instead of the strategic threat to the United States in the Central American region, or trying to formulate a policy to counter such a threat, the limited manpower of the U.S. Government is consumed in meeting deadlines for the submission of reports—red tape, in all candor, which becomes the launching pad for emotional dispute. Note, for instance, the events of the past few days concerning report data required in the certification due on July 28.

Admittedly, precise assessments of circumstances in Central America is often impossible. U.S. efforts to help bring stability to that region are too often frustrated by self-appointed experts who, while no doubt unwillingly, nonetheless lend comfort to the forces of terrorism. I am reminded of the recent capture by the guerrillas of the Assistant Defense Minister of El Salvador, Colonel Castillo. Castillo, when first captured, had thought that his guerrilla captors were actually regular army units, because they were dressed in army uniforms. If Colonel Castillo could not distinguish the guerrillas from the army units they pretented to be, how could everyday observers, especially the international press corps, pretend to distinguish among all the perpetrators of violence within that country?

One thing seems clear: it is the stated policy of the guerrillas to wreak havoc in El Salvador; it is the policy of the El Salvadoran Government to extinguish the guerrilla threat and restore peace and harmony to the people of El Salvador in a democratic environment. But no certification requirement can adequately address that goal—only the common sense of legislators dealing with the day-to-day situation through policymakers in our country and abroad can do so adequately.

Had all the Senators in this body assembled all their desires for El Salvador and put them into a list embodied in certification requirements, the Governments of the United States and El Salvador would be spending all their time in submitting reports and formulating policies aimed at fulfilling the copious and often contradictory certification requirements alone, instead of the strategic threat in the regions. A few existing requirements have already shown how contradictory the requirements are. For instance, they state the desire for progress towards democratic institutions in El Salvador; in actuality, we have that progress in the results of the Constituent Assembly on March 28. However, the Constituent Assembly, taking stock from the devastation wrought in the economy by the expropriations, is seeking ways to restore confidence in the agricultural sector, and at the same time to preserve the rights of new landowners to land along with the rights of former owners to compensation. But that move, insofar as it embodies a move away from socialism and towards free enterprise, is opposed by many who clamored for the certification process. El Salvador can have any government it wants, they imply, so long as it is socialist. Must the United States demand not only that the Salvadorans vote, but that they vote they want we want them to, before they can expect our support?

Let me reiterate, in conclusion that the desire for the speedy resolution of the tragic matters, mentioned at the outset of these Additional Views, is a desire held by every Senator and, no doubt, by all Americans familiar with the situation in El Salvador. However, that desire does not automatically lead prudent legislators to a bureaucratic certification process as a best means of achieving such a goal. In fact, to incorporate such a requirement into existing legislation would serve only to distort further American policy toward El Salvador, a signal that would ill serve this body, or our country.

EL SALVADOR CERTIFICATION

(By Daniel James)

Last month, the American Ambassador to El Salvador, Deane R. Hinton, charged that The New York Times correspondent in that country, Raymond Bonner, was practicing "advocacy journalism" in his reporting from there. The newspaper's foreign editor, Craig R. Whitney, retorted that "Mr. Bonner has been reporting the situation in El Salvador in a fair and objective manner." Who is right?

I have examined closely 51 articles by Bonner which The New York Times published between Jan. 11 and June 30 of this year. Here are my findings, grouped according to the subjects that seemed to interest Bonner most.

Three articles resulting from two weeks Bonner spent in territory held by the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN), embracing five guerrilla factions, revealed a preference for calling the guerrillas "peasant fighters." Most frequently he calls them "rebels," but never "Marxists" or "Marxist-led" although the FMLN leadership is self-admittedly Marxist.

"I have always stayed away from calling groups Marxist-led," Bonner later confessed in a West Coast symposium, "because I don't know exactly what that means."

Even "calling them guerrillas has negative connotations," he worried. For that matter, "Calling them leftists . . . has negative connotations."

This attitude colors Bonner's reporting on El Salvador.

It leads him to portray the "peasant fighters" as the salt of the earth. In their territory, he finds "schools for children, health clinics and hospitals," while "Peasants are cultivating corn, sugar cane, beans and other crops." The local people dote on them: "a woman baked tortillas" for them, a storeowner "gave them bananas," and "refused to accept money" for soap, cigarettes and flashlight batteries they purchased.

Bonner can find only negative things to say about the guerrillas' foe, the Government's several armed and security forces.

Thus on Jan. 11, he found that they were "torturers," and also charged U.S. military advisers with participating in their "torture classes." The sole source of his story was a 21-year-old Salvadoran Army deserter who had peddled the same story to other U.S. media, which refused to swallow it. So obviously biased was it that New York Times publisher Arthur Ochs Sulzberger admitted it had been "overplayed."

Bonner nevertheless continued to depict the Salvadoran forces as depraved killers of innocents. On April 22 for example, he charged they had killed 48 peasants in the village of Barios. His source? Local guerrillas and sympathizers.

A companion theme Bonner develops in his articles is that these indiscriminate killers are also ineffectual. There are he says, "increasing doubts that they can defeat rebel forces even with more United States aid" (Feb. 17). His source? Anonymous "diplomats."

On the other hand, "the guerrillas are stronger today than when the civil war began two and a half years ago" (June 27). His source this time? Not even anonymous "diplomats." Rather, he speaks vaguely of "cumulative evidence" without producing a shred ot it.

Bonner wrote eight major pieces on human rights violations allegedly committed by the Salvadoran armed and security services. All were based on doubtful sources.

In one, on Jan. 28, he charged the Army had committed a "massacre" in the village of El Mozote. Though it inhabitants totalled only 300, Bonner's "body count" ranged up to 926, a figure supplied by the Human Rights Commission of El Salvador. The HRC, he added, to endow it with respectability and authority, "works with the Roman Catholic Church"—a falsehood.

In the Mozote and subsequent articles, Bonner relied almost exclusively upon the HRC and two companion groups, the Legal Aid Office and the University of Central America, for figures for alleged government killings of noncombatants ranging as high as 16,276 for last year. Neither Bonner nor the New York Times ever told their readers these facts:

1. The key group, the Legal Aid Office, which Bonner repeatedly referred to as "of" the Salvadoran Catholic Church, wad disavowed three times, officially, between May 31, 1981 and Jan. 6, 1982, by the Church.

2. The Episcopal Conference, the Salvadoran Church's highest body, accused the LAO of disseminating "confusing information . . . abroad" or "simply [distorting it] for political reasons or partisan interests."

3. The Apostolic Administrator, Bishop Arturo Rivera y Damas, had charged the LAO's reports on human rights violations "have yet to attribute a victim to the guerrilla forces though the guerrillas claim some deaths themselves."

4. Neither the LAO nor the HRC possesses the minimum human, technical or material resources for the enormous task of investigating human rights violations throughout a country torn by civil strife. (During a personal visit to those groups in March, the writer saw only a handful of people in a tiny office bereft of such equipment as copying machines or computers and found the HRC person officiating at a rough-hewn table in the open air.)

5. The University of Central America is clearly linked to the guerrillas. (See below.)

Bonner wrote 17 pieces on the March 28 Salvadoran election for a constituent assembly, finding something positive to say about it only once: it was "probably the country's most democratic election" (Apr. 4).

In the same story, however, he gloomily predicted it would only result in "more bloodshed." To prove that true, he then wrote (Apr. 25) of an "increase" in violence since the election. Another New York Timesman in El Salvador, Richard Meislin, however, found violence "has fallen off sharply . . . since the elections" (May 6).

By early June, Bonner and his paper discovered the election had been "fraudulent." He said the Central Elections Council president, Dr. Jorge Bustamante, had "conceded that there might have been a 10 percent error" in the balloting, but Bustamante charged he was "misquoted." He wrote The Times, "I told your reporter that in any country—especially one without sophisticated electoral technology—an error of as much as 10 percent might be expected," but turned out to be "much less."

The Times did not publish Bustamante's denial.

Bonner next quoted a University of Central America magazine, Central American Studies, as charging "there are serious indications that lead to the confirmed reasonable conclusion that there was massive fraud."

He added the magazine had also reached the "conclusion that there was a pact between the United States, El Salvador's political parties and the army high command to respect the proportionality of the votes" notwithstanding the "fraud." The pact's purpose, "above all," was to "prove the fundamental thesis that the Salvadoran people were against the guerillas" (June 4) to Bonner, an unthinkable notion.

On June 14, Bonner produced a study by the magazine's parent body, the University of Central America, repeating the fraud charge but acknowledging 500,000 more people had actually voted than its publication had said.

Neither Bonner nor his paper checked their sources' reliability, or they would have discovered that:

1. UCA is a member-observer of the Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR), the guerrillas' polictical arm.

2. FDR's president, Guillermo Ungo, had been a UCA editor.

3. An FDR-FMLN leader, Salvador Samayoa, had also been a UCA editor.

4. A top guerrilla leader, Roberto Roca, had been a Central American studies writer.

Nor did The Times or Bonner check their "fraud" findings with untainted professional sources such as Freedom House, whose own report on the March election found it "was not marred by gross fraud."

Finally, in six articles on El Salvador's land reform, Bonner tried to prove it was "blocked" by the right-wing Constituent Assembly the elections had produced. AID's Rural Development Division in the country issued a point-by-point rebuttal of many inaccuracies in his central piece, May 24, but not of it was printed in The Times.

The conclusions emerging from an examination of Bonner's 51 articles on El Salvador published in The New York Times from January though June 1982, are:

1. They contain few hard facts and much partisan opinion.

2. They rely heavily upon doubtful, even discredited, and often anonymous sources; they reflect little or no checking with other sources.

3. They fail to report criticisms—such as the Church's—or differences with preferred sources, and often camouflage the latter.

4. They reveal a basic sympathy with the Marxist-Leninist guerrillas while disingenuously refusing to characterize them.

5. They reveal, on the other hand, a deep prejudice against the Salvadoran Government which impedes objective or fair evaluation of it or its policies.

6. They add up to advocacy journalism, while parading under the guise of objective, or traditional, journalism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island controls the remaining time. Who yields time?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I strongly support this resolution and am an original cosponsor of its Senate counterpart, Senate Joint Resolution 208. The administration won the support of the Congress for military and economic assistance to El Salvador because we recognize the importance of this nearby country to our foreign relations, and because we hoped to encourage the emergence of a democratic government there through support for moderate, reformist elements against extremists of the right and left. But because the Congress seeks to support progress, not reaction, in El Salvador, we required the President to certify progress concerning certain troubling conditions in El Salvador before disbursing U.S. aid. This certification must be made to the Congress every 6 months.

However, the original amendment required that only the first Presidential certification address whether the Government of El Salvador had made good faith efforts to investigate the murders of six American citizens, and to bring their murderers to justice. Frankly, it was not anticipated that the question of these horrible murders would remain unresolved for so long.

Much to my consternation, apparently little progress has been made in these cases, and it is reported that the attention of the Government of El Salvador to these slayings is diminishing. That Government's failure to resolve this important concern to all Americans makes it imperative that Congress reintroduce this matter into the aid certification process. That is the central purpose of this resolution. It also expresses the concern of the American people, about the disappearance of a seventh American, a journalist named John Sullivan, who has not been heard from since January of 1981. There has been no trace of Mr. Sullivan, who resided in New Jersey, since the day he checked into his hotel in El Salvador. I have been told that there is little reliable evidence as to his whereabouts, although the American Embassy has received letters claiming responsibility for his kidnapping.

Mr. President, the American people have a right to know what happened to their fellow citizens in El Salvador. They have a right to expect that those responsible for the loss of these fine Americans to their friends and communities will be brought to justice. The condition placed on aid to El Salvador is the best way we have of telling the El Salvador Government that we expect reciprocity in our relations with them. We cannot allow them to ignore the murder of Americans. Further we expect support for the rule of law from a government which we have shown our willingness to support with aid and friendship.

Mr. President, I went along with some aid to El Salvador as the least-worst alternative in an effort to bring about peace, reform, stability, and democratic government in that small ravaged country. The support of El Salvador's people for the democratic process, demonstrated by the heavy election turnout last March, was a high note in the history of the development of democratic institutions. It encourages me to hold out hope for a near-term peace in that country. Since March the signals from the new government on human rights and social progress have been disappointing, but I am willing to wait and hope a little longer because the stakes are so high.

However, the fate of these seven Americans is important to all of us and important in a determination of future aid. Progress on the investigation of what happened to them and the punishment of those who killed them, in the case of the nuns and the labor organization workers, has been a condition of American aid until now, and should remain so. Mr. President I believe that the American people demand it, and so I hope we can pass this resolution today unanimously as a strong message to the Government of El Salvador.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the vote on this resolution will occur at 2 p.m.

Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. PELL. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until 2 p.m. this afternoon.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 11:59 a.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. LUGAR).

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 494) was ordered to a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Chair state the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate will now vote on House Joint Resolution 494 relative to the Presidential certifications on El Salvador.

The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HELMS (when his name was called). Present.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 95, nays 2, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Cannon Tsongas

So the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 494) was passed.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BALANCE BUDGET—TAX LIMITATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending business.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 58) proposing an amendment to the Constitution altering Federal fiscal decisionmaking procedures.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FORD addressed the Chair.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, could we agree on a time limtation on this resolution.

Mr. FORD. I would be delighted to agree on a time limit.

Mr. THURMOND. What time does the Senator want?

Mr. FORD. Whatever time the Senator from South Carolina wants.

Mr. THURMOND. Twenty minutes evenly divided.

Mr. FORD. That will be suitable to me. I understand there are some other Members of the Senate who would like to speak. If that is agreeable to them, I shall be more than happy to agree to 20 minutes evenly divided.

Mr. THURMOND. I make the request, Mr. President.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object. The Senator from New York and the Senator form Massachusetts have been trying to get the floor for some period of time. If we could have maybe 2 minutes prior to the beginning of this discussion.

Mr. THURMOND. Is it on this subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized. The Chair wishes to impose the normal procedures.

Mr. THURMOND. I ask unanimous consent for 20 minutes to a side equally divided, if there is no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. THURMOND. Is it on this subject?

Mr. BRADLEY. No, it is not. It is on the previous vote. I would like to have a statement printed.

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I wish to extend the courtesy to the distinguished Senator from New York, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. So let us make it 25 minutes so we can give 20 minutes to each side, and 5 minutes to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Senator does not mean that the Senator has to use the entire 10 minutes. He can give the time to anyone he wishes.

Mr. FORD. He can do anything he wants.

Mr. THURMOND. The Senator is agreeing to 20 minutes to a side, but 5 minutes additional to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FORD. Equally divided.

Mr. THURMOND. Five minutes for the two Senators or 5 minutes each?

Mr. FORD. Five minutes between the two.

Mr. THURMOND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum call is in progress.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DECONCINI. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Arizona object?

Mr. DECONCINI. I withdraw my objection.

Without objection, the quorum roll was rescinded.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as I understand it, the agreement is for 20 minutes, equally divided, and 5 minutes in addition, equally divided between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FORD. That is my understanding with the Senator from South Carolina, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. THURMOND. With the time to be controlled by the managers of the bill on each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, would the distinguished Senator from South Carolina be agreeable to an up and down vote on the amendment by Mr. FORD? It seems to me that when we are trying to offer amendments to as important an action of the Senate as passing a constitutional amendment which will require years to ratify and which, equally, would require years to modify or repeal, we should have up and down votes on the amendments.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, to save time, I will agree to an up and down vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina include that in his request—the request for an up and down vote, as part of the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. THURMOND. It will be up and down, unless somebody makes a motion to table, and I have not made a motion to table.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object. I hope the Senator will add the up and down vote to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. THURMOND. I will be glad to include it, if there is any question about it. I will include it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I yield myself 2½ minutes.

I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that an amendment is not in order at this time, until all time has expired on the first-degree amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I beg to correct myself. That is a Senate resolution, not an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to consideration of a resolution at this time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I object. I do not understand what we are doing. We have an amendment pending.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it is the purpose of the senior Senator from Massachusetts and myself to speak 2½ minutes each to a separate matter and then to move on to the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from New York submitting the resolution for consideration at this time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Not for consideration at this time.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I did not understand that the Senator was going to speak on something else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has been recognized for 2½ minutes——

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Which are rapidly expiring.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (continuing). On the pending amendment. The submission of a resolution is not in order at this time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to submit this resolution at this time and that we be permitted to use the 3 minutes remaining for discussion of it. We do not intend to ask for Senate action on the resolution at this time.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I will agree to that, on that condition.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not understand. I inquire whether this resolution is relevant to the constitutional amendment that is pending.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. No, it is not. It is a matter several colleagues and I have been trying to bring before the Senate today. We have arranged these diminishing 5 minutes in order to do so. We merely wish to have the resolution introduced, so that it may be printed and distributed to the Senate.

Mr. DOMENICI. I object. I think they can have it printed and talk about it. I do not think it should be submitted. I do not even know what is in it. I do not know why we should agree to a unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator has a right to send to the desk a resolution, does he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator, during morning business, may send a resolution to the desk for appropriate referral. It would take unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time.

Mr. KENNEDY. But does the Senator not have the right to send a resolution to the desk at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It takes unanimous consent to submit a resolution for referral, unless the Senate is in morning business.

Mr. MOYHIHAN. Mr. President, I would like to say for the record that this resolution is a proposal for a Senate response to the egregious and shameful behavior of the Secretary of the Interior whose inference of dual loyalty to a major American religious group has recently come to light. The response of most Americans has ranged from outrage to disappointment—the latter being the official White House response.

Mr. Watt's insensitivity has been denounced in the strongest terms in the press of this country for the last few days. I am not surprised that we are being denied an opportunity to discuss the matter on this floor for even 5 minutes.

Let there be no mistaking our intentions: We will be back.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield 1 minute?

Mr. THURMOND. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do not think that is a fair statement by the Senator from New York, if his remarks are directed at this Senator. I did not even know what was in the resolution.

The egregious whatever it is is probably Jim Watt, now that I hear the Senator from New York, because he has spoken of that all over the country.

I have not denied you anything. There is pending before this body a constitutional amendment, with an amendment by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. FORD). That is the pending business. You can speak on whatever you like, when you have time.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. It was agreed for us to have 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to my good friend that if this Senator is going to agree to anything like that, I would like you to think about what you have said about the Senator from New Mexico, who did not know anything about what is in your resolution.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I did not say he knew anything and I did not say he did not.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am the only one who objected, and I continue to object, and I regret that you would say that I am denying anyone an opportunity to speak to the issue you have referred to in such eloquent terms, without yet mentioning what it is.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. If I gave offense, I am sincerely apologetic. It was not my intention to cast asperations on the motives of the Senator from New Mexico. His motives are ever only honorable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have 2½ minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from New Mexico that in the earlier part of the day, I had requested that the Senator from New York and I have the opportunity to be able to present this resolution with a brief time period, at 2 o'clock. There was an agreement, to satisfy both caucuses, to move to an immediate vote at 2 o'clock. Both the Senator from New York and I, at least, hoped that we would be able to have the opportunity to offer our resolution at this particular time, for a very brief time, to be able to submit it to the Senate.

But I do wish to indicate to the Senator from New Mexico as well as to the Senator from New York that we did inquire of the Republican policy committee whether it be appropriate to try and to be able to introduce the resolution. There was notification. I do not think they inquired as to the details of it. But there was notice that was provided to that side of the aisle that there would be such a resolution.

I realize that we were hopeful of getting this disposed of prior to the time of the pending amendment, and we have been here for a series of hours to try and do that.

The Senator from New York and I were trying to see if we could get some time before that, and I think there is more of a misunderstanding really than anything else.

But I do wish to say in probably the last 45 seconds, if I could have them, that I strongly support this resolution for the reasons that I have outlined in my statement and I would hope that the Senate will have an opportunity to address this issue on an up- or down-vote.

I think it is extremely important for us to go on record on this particular issue.

I also thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me an additional minute to address a question to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask for the attention of the Senator from New Mexico.

In the light of what he has heard would he agree that no personal reference of any kind was intended. We have been, from the first part of today, trying to get nothing more than this resolution sent to the desk, and no personal inference of any kind was intended, as I already said. I wonder if I could hear him say that he has heard me say that.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I heard what the Senator said. I appreciate his remarks.

It is my understanding that morning business in the Senate is for the exact purpose that the Senator from New York contends he desires, and I do not understand how he has been denied an opportunity when we had morning business. We will have morning business again before the day is out. I suggest he talk to the leaders, not to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if there is any time remaining, I wish to respond.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, has anyone yielded time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I still have some time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have been here now for some 20 years, and if we are going to start invoking the rules denying individuals the right to put statements in the RECORD, I hope that that is going to be applied by the leadership on both sides now because that is an entirely different precedent. I respect the precedent of morning business, but I have been around here long enough that when there are matters of urgency and importance about which Members of this body feel strongly, the courtesy has been extended to them, and this is a matter that Members feel strongly about. To be denied that opportunity, I just wish to make clear—if that is what is going on, and is the rule we are going to abide by—that it is important to mark the time and the date because it has not been the rule we applied from the time I have been here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, first I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 30 seconds to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I yield a half minute to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am sure no one has misunderstood the Senator from New Mexico. I am sure that the Senator from Massachusetts did not intend to say what he said.

This Senator has nothing to do with what statements the Senator makes. My objection was to the submission of a resolution for consideration by this body with an amendment pending to a constitutional amendment, not to the Senator saying whatever he wishes, and I think he knows that. I just wish to make sure that the record is clear.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment being offered by the able Senator from Kentucky. It is a sincere effort, I am sure, to make the process of achieving a balanced budget a joint effort between the Congress and the President. I am sympathetic with that objective. This amendment is too. Section 1 states:

> The Congress and the President shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

There is a clear intention in that language to make the President exercise every effort to achieve a balanced budget. We should not, however, bind the President into a situation that we are not willing to bind the Congress into, and by that I mean the ability of Congress to exceed a balanced budget by a three-fifths vote. Congress can vote if it so desires to have a deficit. The language of the Senator from Kentucky does not permit that exception for the President.

The President, under the constitutional provisions of article II has the power to recommend and to veto. Of course, we could pass legislation requiring the submission of a balanced budget, but I question the wisdom of putting such a requirement in the Constitution through the amendment process.

If the President, any President, were required to submit a balanced budget, and could not honestly do so, what alternatives does he have? Does he refuse to submit a budget saying he can only by law submit one that is balanced?

Mr. President, we must face the facts. Congress has put this country in debt and it is up to the Congress to reverse that situation. This amendment seeks to do that fairly and in a flexible manner. The President is not ignored. He must insure that outlays do not exceed those set forth in the statement. That is a difficult job in its own right.

I oppose the amendment and will vote against it.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield such time as the distinguished Senator from California may need to speak in favor of the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator.

How much time does he have remaining?

Mr. FORD. We have 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, a number of editorial writers and journalists have strongly criticized the wishful thinking underlying Senate Joint Resolution 58. Many of these writers are conservatives who strongly condemn the spending and tax policies of past administrations, among them are the Wall Street Journal, George Will, and Robert J. Samuelson.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of the commentaries be printed in the RECORD at the outset of my remarks.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 21, 1982]

SOME SUMMERTIME READING

President Reagan journeyed up to the Hill the other day to put in a strong plug for the balanced budget/tax limitation amendment now wending its way through Congress. The Marine Band played stirring airs, the President gave a stem-winder of a speech and the assembled throng cheered its heads off.

Now there has been a lot of argument back and forth about the merits of the amendment. Would it indeed force the Congress to put its fiscal house in order? Or would our boodling classes find ways around the amendment, in order to continue taxing and taxing, spending and spending, electing and electing?

For ourselves, we have been asking what would happen if the amendment passed and the budget still wasn't balanced. Would the Supreme Court order the President and Congress to jail for 30 days on bread and water?

What's needed here, obviously, is a little serious discussion. So we looked up the text of the said amendment, to discover, among other things, that it's only slightly longer than the first five amendments to the Constitution, wherein such presumably important liberties as freedom of speech and religion, protection from unreasonable searches, and due process under the law are enshrined. But we guess serious matters like balancing the budget just don't lend themselves to such elegant and pithy expression. Judge for yourself:

Section 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are no greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths of the whole number of both Houses shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject. The Congress and the President shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

Section 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year, unless a majority of the whole number of both Houses of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

Section 3.The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

Section 4. The Congress may not require that the States engage in additional activities without compensation equal to the additional costs.

Section 5. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing and total outlays shall incude all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

Section 6. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.

Everybody who thinks this will instantly render Congress fiscally responsible, please let us know. All others, please go to the polls in November.

BALANCED BUDGET HOAX

(By George F. Will)

God, preparing condign punishment for hot air emitted in support of humbug, turned the temperature up to 90 the day the President addressed a rally for a constitutional amendment to require balanced budgets. The rally to make government—that questing beast—obedient to "the People" was for people with tickets. A ticket to a rally for an amendment to "require" balanced budgets calls to mind the invitation a Lady Colfax issued, after the First World War, to a luncheon to "meet the mother of the Unknown Warrior."

But members of the sainted public could get tickets. Red tickets were for employees of the Republican National Committee and high-level employees of the—if you'll pardon the expression—government. They got to sit smack in front of the President. Blue tickets allowed lesser government employees to sit farther back from himself. White tickets, handed out on the streets, put plain people, to whose salvation the rally was dedicated, at the rear.

Behind the President, stewing like prunes in their juices, were congress-persons and senators, some of whom sincerely support the amendment for which they were rallying. Legislators who did not feel ill-used obviously were properly used as applauding props.

Washington's air this season is thick with humidity and hoaxes, such as nuclear "freeze" that won't freeze anything, and "flat rate" tax programs without flat rates. So what is one more hoax among friends? This hoax—this trivialization of the constitution—is, simultaneously, a confession of political incompetence and an assertion of intellectual mastery—mastery not noticeable in the results of recent economic policies.

At precisely the moment when economists are especially bewildered by the inability of their theories to encompass events, politicians, running for cover from the electoral consequences of their activities, are proposing to constitutionalize an economic doctrine. They would graft something evanescent onto something fundamental.

Under the amendment, Congress would be required to adopt, prior to each fiscal year, a statement of receipts and outlays, the latter not to exceed the former. But such economic numbers are estimates made of warm taffy, all gooey and stretchable.

Neither clairvoyance nor candor can be counted on in Congress or the Office of Management and Budget. So who will enforce what on whom if—when—the numbers are significantly wrong? Will the president control outlays by impounding appropriated funds? Will courts superintend the appropriations process?

If the latter, will every taxpayer have standing to sue? No one can know until courts speak. And they will speak, because the amendment does not stipulate that controversies under it are not reviewable by courts. Were that stipulation made, the amendment would become a recipe for paralysis and lawlessness.

The amendment says that total receipts in any fiscal year may not be set to increase at a rate faster than the rate of increase of national income in the previous calendar year. The implication of this is that whatever else the government has recently got wrong, the current ratio of federal spending to national income is just about right.

But, then, the amendment would allow Congress to change this ratio by a simple majority vote. And by a three-fifths vote, Congress could authorize a deficit—which is what Congress has been doing for generations. So, to enable current incumbents to strike a pose some incumbents want to clutter the Constitution with an amendment that might be, in practice, 98 percent loophole. It would be that, unless the political culture and congressional mores changed substantially, in which case the amendment would be beside the point.

The amendment is long, but should be longer. It depends on Congress making precise projections, so it should contain 1,000 more clauses, four of which are:

Floods, hurricanes and other acts of God that wish to occur during the next fiscal year must register with OMB six months before the fiscal year begins, so Congress can know that relief-spending shall occur.

Agricultural commodities covered by price supports must inform the Agriculture Department if they are planning to materialize in inconvenient quantities in the next fiscal year.

Anyone planning to need unemployment compensation in the coming fiscal year must notify the Labor Department.

Before causing crises, tiresome foreigners must notify the U.S. Defense Department of any effects their crises will have on U.S. defense spending.

And . . . oh, yes; I love lobster, and own elm trees. Could Congress please require lobsters to grow on elm trees?

Sorry; I digress. It must be the heat.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—SO YOU WANT A BALANCED BUDGET . . .

There is so much impassioned support for the balanced budget amendment—fiery rhetoric in Congress, a presidentially led rally on the Capitol steps—that you have to assume both the president and Congress really wish that such a constitutional mandate were already in force. (Surely they wouldn't wish something on their successors that they're not willing to live with themselves? The question, then, is this: what would happen if Congress were to pass the amendment, and 38 state legislatures, eager to support this noble cause, rushed into special session and ratified it?

Well, look out. Closing the deficit would require cutting spending—or raising revenue—by at least $260 billion over the next three years, and possibly much more. This would be in addition to the $380 billion in deficit reduction measures that Congress is already painfully trying to enact just to get the deficit headed downward. Let's look at some of the choices Congress would have to make.

The easiest part of the budget to cut is usually the so-called "discretionary" domestic programs. These are mostly grants-in-aid to states for things such as pollution control, education, health and urban development. But these programs recently took huge cuts and are slated for $35 billion in further reductions over the next three years. In any case, the proposed constitutional amendment prohibits placing new fiscal burdens on states, so it's not clear that it would allow even the cuts in these programs that are already planned.

Another way to save the needed money is called "going after the entitlements." These are programs that more or less assure certain people, such as the poor or aged, of certain benefits. The trouble is that the programs that most people wouldn't mind cutting—welfare and food stamps—are small items in the budget, and they are already due for very big cuts.

That still leaves the big pension programs—Social Security, Medicare and military and civil service pensions. But Congress already plans politically risky curbs on all of these except Social Security. Even if Congress were to work up the courage to cut Social Security benefits, you'd have to cut benefits almost in half to get the needed savings. Not only is this out of the question, but, since Social Security is funded by an earmarked payroll tax, the funds shouldn't be used to cover other programs anyway.

That leaves defense. Even with the cutbacks voted in the budget resolution, it's worth noting that planned increases in defense spending will absorb all of the growth in general revenues over the next few years—and then some. This is why the deficit is so big even with cuts in other programs. But Congress has been busy in recent weeks voting for every big-ticket item the Pentagon wants so that there is little reason to expect it would be willing or able to make hard choices in this area.

As for raising taxes, Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole has found little enthusiasm—and only a bare margin of Republican support—even for going after tax cheats.

This is why there is a day-dreamish quality about the current enthusiasm for a balanced budget amendment—a childish wish by Congress that if it were just forced by some outside power to do "what's right," all the real and urgent difficulties would fade away. That's not only foolish; it also distracts attention from the practical efforts being made by congressional leaders to get the deficit under control—efforts that are far more deserving of administration and congressional support than the pious and fatuous hopes embodied in the balanced budget amendment.

THE BALANCED-BUDGET FANTASY—DECEITFUL MEASURE ALLOWS CONGRESS TO EVADE POLITICAL CHOICES

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

Politics is not only the art of the possible, but also the science of symbolism. Government itself does not excite most voters; in the main, it is too detailed and too dull. So politics steps in and creates excitement and drama by finding simpler substitutes for everyday complexities.

When President Reagan plugs the balanced-budget amendment, now being debated by the Senate, he is engaging in this age-old ritual. The fact that the national debt recently passed $1 trillion provides the proposed amendment with a further bit of sumptuous advertising. But this is one case where the real world's complexities overwhelm the symbol's simplicities.

The balanced-budget amendment springs from a political theory of public spending that increasingly diverges from reality. Defense and demographics, mainly the demographics of old age and ill health, are now driving the budget. If public-opinion polls mean anything, this spending (particularly by Social Security) enjoys wide support. The debate over the amendment completely bypasses these realities.

The presumption of the amendment is that, somehow, politics has become so twisted that government spending decisions have precious little to do with popular will. Spending is propelled upward (in this view) by hordes of individual interests that create their own program. Congress pleases individual groups by approving their programs, but doesn't displease the mass of voters by raising taxes. Spiraling deficits result.

If it's broke, fix it. To the amendment's supporters, the needed repair is to make deficits unconstitutional. Only by a three-fifths vote—or, during wartime, a simple majority—could Congress override this requirement. The aim is to create a discipline that does not automatically reward higher spending. If Congress wants higher spending, let it vote higher taxes.

Even the mildly cynical will wonder whether this amendment, if adopted, would inspire new levels of evasion. In debate, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) made this suggestion: "We can, of course, resolve this by declaring war every time we see a deficit coming along. We can make an arrangement with perhaps, Iceland. Everytime we saw a deficit coming, we declare war and then pay some kind of recompense to the Icelanders for having done so. . . . It would be something like a Reno divorce. It would not require any real hostilities."

As Moynihan undoubtedly knows, this insults Congress' intelligence. If so inclined, Congress is sufficiently sophisticated to achieve the same result without making itself the object of ridicule. Even Sen. Pete V. Domenici (R-N.M.), who is a supporter of the amendment, acknowledges a long list of possibilities: Use more federal loan guarantees, require private spending through regulation, and create a new "capital" budget with borrowings outside the regular budget.

But these objections really skirt the bigger issue. Does a large, systematic spending bias exist? If the political process is fundamentally skewed, as the amendment's proponents says, then its opponents need to address this defect. If the amendment wouldn't work, what would?

Anyone with even a superficial familiarity with Congress cannot dismiss the notion of a spending bias. Constituents regularly bombard members of Congress with pet projects. Until the late 1970s, actual spending patterns seemed to fit the theory snugly. Programs proliferated, many serving small constituencies.

But it's important to notice what's happening now. In the past three years, Congress has begun to squeeze many of these programs. Since 1979, domestic programs—excluding Social Security, health programs and pensions for government workers—have decreased, following a 20-year period in which they had grown (after adjustment for inflation) nearly 140%.

Apparently, the spending bias is not insurmountable. This history suggests a simpler explanation for spending changes: shifts in the political climate. Until four or five years ago, the climate tolerated—even encouraged—new programs intended for relatively small constituencies. A prosperous country believed in sharing. But rising tax rates, increasing inflation and slowing economic growth destroyed this consensus.

And there's the rub. The remaining programs generally enjoy public support. The budget cutbacks are restricting federal spending responsibilities to a few large areas: defense, the elderly (Social Security, Medicare and nearly half of Medicaid), Civil Service and military retirement, and interest on the debt. In fiscal 1981, these programs constituted roughly 70% of spending; under the 1983 congressional budget, that would rise to 80% by 1985.

This spending contradicts the proposed amendment's political message. Its sponsors suggest a simple solution: If people want more government services, let them support higher taxes; otherwise, let them be content with existing services. Unfortunately, neither life nor budgets are this simple.

As the population ages, and the old live longer, the overall level of spending increases even if individual benefits (adjusted for inflation) remain constant. The same thing happens if health costs continue to rise faster than inflation.

Consequently, constant benefits for individuals are not necessarily consistent with a constant share of government spending as a proportion of the economy's output (gross national product). Depending on the economy's performance, the problem might be small or large in the 1980s and 1990s. But after the turn of the century, when the "baby boom" generation begins to retire, the conflict will become enormous.

For the moment, this measure, posing as an effort to control spending, allows Congress to evade difficult political choices. For the future, it aggravates conflict because the proposed amendment does not mean what it is widely thought to mean. That this contradiction is wrapped in the mantle of the Constitution can only degrade that document's meaning and authority.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I support the amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 58 being offered by my colleague from Kentucky (Mr. FORD) to require the President to submit a balanced budget to Congress.

I do so for two basic reasons.

First, The Senate should be on record, by a vote, whether it wants the President to submit a balanced budget to Congress.

Presidents currently by law are required to submit an annual budget to the Congress. The amendment being offered by Senator FORD would require, in addition, that the President's budget be balanced.

If we want a balanced budget, why not start the process by having the President submit to us a balanced budget?

The amendment, contrary to what its opponents would like to rescue the President from the necessity of submitting a rigorously balanced budget say, does not place the President in a straitjacket.

Under the Ford proposal the President would be free to append recommended modifications to his balanced budget, if he wished.

But his principal budget document would be required to be balanced.

There is absolutely no word—not a single word—in the Ford amendment which would prohibit the President from recommending modifications in an appended document which would put his principal budget out of balance.

Congress and the people, however, would be able to see what the President's balanced budget looked like and at the same time could evaluate his recommendations and reasonings for approving a budget modified so that outlays exceeded receipts or vice versa for that matter.

That does not seem to me to be a straitjacket.

It makes sense if we are to have a balanced budget requirement in the Constitution to have the President involved in the process.

In fact, it would be most desirable for the President to be required to submit a balanced budget to Congress.

Second, the President has access to the best and most complete budgeting information in the Government. That is the underlying reason for the 1924 law requiring him to submit a budget to Congress.

The Chief Executive is the one individual who presumably has an overall, unified, economic, and political program in mind. He speaks with one voice. He resolves questions with one vote. It is his role to provide leadership. If there is to be a constitutional mandate for balancing the budget, Congress should not leave it up to the discretion of the President whether he will submit a balanced budget. He should be required to submit one in the first instance at the outset of the process.

As I have stated, he can submit recommended modifications and deviations from a balanced budget but only after he has first submitted one in balance, and it seems to me we are entitled to see what a balanced budget would be from the person with the best equipment, the best staff, the best computers, the best economists, in numbers available to him, if not always in quality, to submit such recommendations to us.

The President's budget will be the standard against which everyone will measure the balanced budget of Congress.

The economic assumptions of OMB may, as they have in the past, deviate from those used by the Congressional Budget Office. Those differences, which are so vital to the issue of whether a budget will be in balance, should be openly aired so that informed and reasonable judgments can be made about the probability of success in attaining balance.

We ought to have on the record the economic assumptions the President would use in formulating a budget in balance, just as we will have in the case of Congress budget.

Since the President, under the proposal of Senate Joint Resolution 58 will have the duty to insure that actual outlays do not exceed statement outlays, the President should provide Congress with his best and most informed judgment as to what actual outlays will be.

Actual outlays under a balanced budget may differ considerably from actual outlays under a deficit budget.

For many economic reasons, actual outlays under a deficit budget could be less than actual outlays under a balanced budget. It is a simplistic and erroneous notion that a balanced budget necessarily means lower spending totals.

It would be a wise measure of foresight in a constitutional balanced amendment to require the President to project a balanced budget, discover what his spending commitments and fiscal discipline obligations will be, the taxes he will have to ask Congress to raise, and what program priorities he and his administration must forego or emphasize as the case may be.

For example, a President may discover that under a balanced budget, spending for unemployment costs and welfare costs might rise, and the economy stall under the weight of an untimely increase in taxes when cuts might be best prescribed. A balanced budget could present him with far greater spending control difficulties than a deficit budget in which variables in uncontrolled spending were limited through an economic program which promised sound prospects of a healthy economy which would be in balance, although the budget itself would be out of balance.

But such are the vagaries of balanced budgets and balanced economies that they do not necessarily coincide.

Obviously, meeting a constitutional mandate for balancing the budget will require great collaboration between Congress and the President. The best place to begin is by requiring the President to submit a balanced budget.

As I have observed repeatedly, we do not need to require any of this in a constitutional amendment. It can be done by statute.

But I fail to understand the reasoning of those Senators who insist upon a constitutional requirement that Congress adopt a balanced budget but who seem to be tumbling head over heels to rescue President Ronald Reagan from the requirement that he submit a balanced budget to Congress.

It could be that President Reagan does need rescuing from the rigors of attaining a balanced budget.

We all know hard and tough choices are involved.

Our President should be up to those tough decisions.

The thesis of those who urge an amendment to the Constitution is that Congress does not measure up to the toughness required of balancing the budget.

The President, by his record, does not measure up either.

If the reasoning of the supporters of Senate Joint Resolution 58 is correct, they should see the appropriateness of the amendment offered by Senator FORD and support it.

I will support it.

Not because I think this necessarily should be in the Constitution.

I will support the Ford amendment because if there is to be a constitutional balanced budget amendment it should be improved over Senate Joint Resolution 58. And one major necessary improvement is to require the President to submit a balanced budget as his principal budget document. As I have noted, this is not a harsh nor constricting requirement, since the President will be free to recommend reasoned modifications.

I might point out that the President under the Ford proposal is far less constricted than Congress is under Senate Joint Resolution 58.

Mr. President, I call the attention of my colleagues to the interaction of the proposed Ford amendment with the fourth sentence in section 1 of Senate Joint Resolution 58 which requires that the President shall insure that actual outlays do not exceed statement outlays.

I have argued earlier in the debate that this sentence of the resolution confers enormous powers upon the President and seriously erodes the separation of powers under the Constitution.

I will offer and will support modifications to this provision because it is poorly drafted and amounts to an open-ended grant of power to the President.

However, by requiring the President to submit a balanced budget, Congress might have a better understanding of the President's priorities and therefore where he might use his powers under section 1 to eliminate spending for programs and policies personally objectionable to him, although supported by Congress.

Since the President under the terms of Senate Joint Resolution 58 is brought directly into the process of controlling spending, through the use of unrestricted powers, it would appear to be good sense to bring him in at the start by requiring him to submit a balanced budget.

But as long as the President can stand outside the budget process, as he can under Senate Joint Resolution 58, free to jump in whenever it suits his political purposes, Senate Joint Resolution 58 is fatally flawed and should not be adopted for that one reason although, of course, I am convinced there are many other sound and solid reasons to oppose Senate Joint Resolution 58.

I say this to my friends who support Senate Joint Resolution 58: The glaring omission of the President from this resolution is a very serious error. It will lead to grave mischief in the future. It demeans the proposed constitutional requirement that budgets be in balance by excusing the President of the United States from the duty of submitting a balanced budget to Congress.

I urge adoption of the amendment offered by Senator FORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used his 3 minutes.

Who yields time?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I also rise in opposition to the amendment by the Senator from Kentucky.

The budget deficits that we have are not the fault of the President. Congress is to blame for creating these spending programs.

The purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky seems to be to make the President take the heat for the irresponsibility of Congress.

Senate Joint Resolution 58 is designed to correct for the systematic spending bias in our budgetary process. It simply strikes a more reasonable balance between the costs and benefits of the spending programs. Yet it allows for an unbalanced budget in those rare instances in which the prevailing economic conditions would make such a balanced budget undesirable.

Part of the beauty of this resolution is that it allows for fiscal flexibility. It does not lock some particular economic doctrine into our Constitution. It seems rather hypocritical to acknowledge the desirability of allowing such flexibility and to turn around and lock the President into some rigid requirement.

The amendment before us would require the President to submit a balanced budget to the Congress. The Senator from Kentucky seems to believe that this will prevent the Federal Government from imposing specific spending programs on the State governments. The Senator has stated that the effect of Senate Joint Resolution 58 would be the transferral of Federal indebtedness to the States. The Judiciary Committee considered that problem and debated and finally deleted language that would have explicitly prevented any such action by the Federal Government. This language in the original section 4 stated:

> The Congress may not require the States to engage in additional spending activities without compensation equal to the additional costs.

Regarding the allegation that this resolution would allow the Federal Government to saddle States with massive financial obligations, it is our contention, the contention of the sponsors of this constitutional amendment, that any such action by Congress would be a blatant violation of the 10th amendment to the Constitution, as well as the federalist constitutional principles articulated in numerous Supreme Court decisions on this matter.

Why was this section 4 deleted in the final version approved by the Judiciary Committee? It is our contention that this section did not create any new restrictions on the powers of the Federal Government. The committee report states:

> The Committee does not view this section as doing more than making explicit a policy that is already implicit in the institution of federalism created by the Constitution. It is not the intent of this section to modify any relationship conditioned by the Constitution at the time of ratification of the amendment. Specifically, no modification of the 10th amendment is intended.

It is our opinion that it makes no sense to amend the Constitution to prevent Congress from assuming powers that simply do not exist under the Constitution at present. To do so would almost lend credibility to the myth that such powers somehow exist. They do not exist. Since this issue was adequately addressed in committee, I believe that many of the reasons offered by the Senator from Kentucky for his amendment are not pertinent to this discussion.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I must oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, Senator FORD. The Senator's objective—of forcing the President to give Congress a budget plan which calls for a balanced budget—is at first blush a laudable one. After all, it will be essential that Congress have the President's help in achieving the goal of a balanced budget.

But upon a closer look we will see that this amendment would not be a good provision to put in the Constitution. In the first place, it purports to restrain the President's flexibility to make budgetary recommendations he—or she—considers best for the country. I do not think we ought to put this type of constitutional restraint on what a President can recommend. The President should be free to recommend that Congress vote in an unbalanced budget if he believes that would be best for the country. It is Congress, after all, that has the constitutional obligation and power to provide for spending. The President has no independent power of the purse. So the constitutional amendment correctly places the primary responsibility for achieving budget balance squarely where it belongs—on Congress.

Moreover, if the Ford amendment were to become part of the Constitution, it could undoubtedly be circumvented by the President. Our recent experience with a legislative mandate that the President submit a balanced budget shows what would likely happen if the Ford amendment were approved. In April 1979, Senators PACKWOOD and LONG succeeded in amending the debt limit bill to require that the President submit a balanced budget. A few months later, in his fiscal year 1981 budget submission, President Carter complied with the legislative mandate by including a few pages—buried deeply in the back of the budget—explaining all the dire cuts that would have to be made to balance the budget; 99.9 percent of the pages in the budget were devoted to explaining and defending the policies the President recommended. The budget had this to say about the alternative budget that would achieve balance:

To balance the budget in 1981, either taxes would have to be increased or Federal spending reduced below the restrained levels proposed in this budget, or a combination of both actions would be required. Increased taxes or decreased Federal spending would have secondary effects on the economy and therefore on other Federal programs. They would reduce real economic growth and employment and thereby reduce tax receipts and raise unemployment sensitive spending.

Every effort has been made in the 1981 budget and in the previous budgets of this administration to eliminate unnecessary spending.

In this budget, additional savings actions have been proposed . . . substantial operating efficiencies and cost reductions have been achieved and more are proposed. Substantial additional reductions cannot be achieved without further program reductions that would unavoidably cause important national needs to go unmet. For these reasons, the administration does not recommend that the reductions listed above be made. (These quotes are from pages 320 and 325 of the fiscal year 1981 Budget of the U.S. Government.)

The reality is that any President will recommend the budget policies he thinks best—whether or not the Ford amendment is in the Constitution.

My final reason for opposing the Ford amendment is that I think he is getting into an area that should be left to legislation. The adoption of this constitutional amendment will make a difference in the way the President and Congress interact in the development of the Federal budget. The President may need to be required to do some things he does not do now. But we have not yet worked on the implementing legislation. When we do, we will need to take a close look at how and when and in what form the President submits his budget recommendations. Any changes that are needed can be made in legislation and then revised later if experience indicates this is needed.

Later today I expect to call up printed amendment 1986, which is cosponsored by Senators CHILES, PERCY, and several other Senators. That amendment includes sense of the Congress language to the effect that implementing legislation must include defining the relationship between the budget statements to be required by this constitutional amendment and "overall procedures for development and adoption of the Federal budget." I believe we should make very clear legislative history that the President is going to have a lot to do to help Congress carry out this constitutional amendment. I do not think we should modify the amendment as Senator FORD proposes. I urge that the Ford amendment be defeated.

As I view the constitutional amendment before us it is not going to balance budgets. What it is going to do is eliminate at least 25 years of prejudice in favor of overspending, which is a natural consequence in this country of national politicians who overpromise and overcommit. As a consequence we have a prejudice to overspend.

This constitutional amendment, if adopted, will convert that prejudice from one that is overcommitting and overspending to one that is biased toward fiscal restraint and balance. That is why I am for it.

Spending restraint will not happen automatically. That is why my amendment makes it clear that it is by legislative enactment that Congress will implement this constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, the amendment that the distinguished Senator seeks is the kind of thing that should be in the legislation that Congress must adopt in order to implement this amendment. Congress should specify in legislation how the President should submit budgets, when, and what special provisions they should contain if the President recommends an unbalanced budget, and numerous other details.

There is ample reason not to burden the constitutional amendment with such a mandate. There will be times when Presidents will not submit balanced budgets because in their good judgment they tell Congress it should not balance the budget, that it ought to spend more or we ought to do something different than a balanced budget statement would require.

We ought to give Presidents that latitude, but we ought to give Congress complete latitude to draft legislation to implement this constitutional amendment to put the appropriate burden on the Executive with reference to budgets.

If we put the balanced budget mandate in for the President as Senator FORD proposes, we have not only denied him flexibility but, in a real sense, we have denied Congress flexibility in the future.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Montana on the bill 4 minutes.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FORD. How much time is there on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time on the bill available.

Mr. FORD. I did not think there was any on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky controls the time and he has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. FORD. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, as the sponsors of the amendment know I am one of the cosponsors of a balanced budget amendment. I think from what I have heard we are going to have some difficulty in getting some votes to put this over, and I think we are wrong in taking the approach that seemingly is being taken by members of the Judiciary Committee that the amendment is sacrosanct as basically it came out of their committee.

Mr. President, there is nothing whatever wrong with the President of the United States being required to submit a balanced budget. If it is true that we want to have a balanced budget amendment workable, if it is approved by Congress and ratified by a sufficient number of the States, indeed the President of the United States, this President, this morning told me and nine other Senators that indeed he thought the President of the United States should be required in the constitutional amendment process to submit a balanced budget.

The President of the United States, being a Governor for 8 years, has had a great deal of experience in budget making. Certainly the statements that have been made by the able Senator from California with regard to the fact that there is no one in the Federal Government who has the resources at his command to come up with a balanced budget better than the President of the United States are indicative of this fact.

It seems to me that if we are really sincere about this effort, we would not raise objections to what I think is a very simple but very meaningful amendment that is being offered by my friend from Kentucky.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FORD. As I understand it, Mr. President, I have the remainder of the time on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The time situation is this: The Senator from South Carolina's time has expired, and the Senator from Kentucky has 3 minutes remaining on the amendment.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, let us just get down to the facts. The question here is this: Should it be up to Congress and Congress alone to balance the budget or should the President be included with Congress in explicit terms as an equal partner? Should the President be included as an equal partner?

I would suggest to those who are so rigid that they will not accept any amendments, that they may be taking this amendment down. I suggest that if we ever have a balanced budget, it can only be accomplished by a Congress and a President working together.

I hope the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and the distinguished Senator from Utah will listen one more time. At the 11 o'clock meeting today, this President of the United States, when asked about the Ford amendment, said he did not object to it; that the Ford amendment was a good idea; that he submitted a balanced budget when he was Governor of California; 21 other State Governors have to do it, and it is nothing unusual for him, and he would be delighted to do it.

Now, if you are going to turn around and say the President does not know what he is talking about, that he should not have to submit a balanced budget, you go ahead and vote this one down. You will get another chance before you get through to vote on another one, and another one, and another one, until I guess we get cloture and then we will have 100 hours and we will have a little fun with it.

But let me tell you, contrary to all expectations and prior indications, the President of the United States proposed the largest deficit in the history of this Nation. Of course, they like to point to others that caused it. He likes to point the finger at Congress. And the way we are going now Congress will have all the blame.

If we had been submitted an unbalanced budget of $188 billion, it would be our responsibility under this amendment, to cut it $188 billion.

Now, I have listened to my distinguished friend from New Mexico and he said Congress was prejudiced toward an unbalanced budget. Let me just say this: You go back to Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan, and every one of them had submitted an unbalanced budget. So there is nothing any more prejudiced toward an unbalanced budget than the President of the United States. Why not put us under the same umbrella and let us go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana may have 4 minutes.

Mr. FORD. Is this for or against my amendment?

Mr. THURMOND. It is against the amendment.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 4 additional minutes.

Mr. THURMOND. That will be all right.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that both sides have 4 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is for 4 additional minutes of time on both sides. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. I yield such time out of the 4 minutes as he may require to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, on the surface of the amendment offered to the Senate by the Senator from Kentucky, it seems to go in the same direction as Senate Joint Resolution 58; that is, to move toward a balanced budget.

But there are basic constitutional issues. The major difficulty with this amendment is that it puts into the Constitution the President's budget proposal authority. Presently, this authority is derived only from statute.

By "constitutionalizing" this process, it is unclear what the new relationship is between the President's budget and the congressional budget. Under present law, the President submits an informal budget and Congress is free to accept this budget, free to reject this budget, free to amend this budget, and free to ignore this budget.

Under Senator FORD's amendment, it seems to be the case that there would be but a single budget or statement. This budget or statement would be drawn up by the President for consideration by the Congress. A number of questions arise: Is Congress obligated to start off with the precise budget submitted by the President? Is it obligated to affirmatively approve changes in that budget? Is the burden of proof upon Congress to justify changes in the President's budget?

In other words, this amendment would sharply transform the nature of the budget process, and transform the relationship between the Presidential budget and the congressional budget. What is now simply a relationship based upon statute would be transformed into a constitutional relationship. There would be but a single budget, a budget proposed by the President under this amendment and a budget enacted by the Congress.

It would have to follow that budget. The implications of this change are potentially enormous. What are the implications for the impoundment authority of the President? What are the implications for item-veto authority? What are the implications for the existing separation-of-powers balance between the President and the executive? What are the implications for the congressional and the presidential roles in the budget process. Whereas Senate Joint Resolution 58 would leave this basic relationship unchanged, Senator FORD's amendment could open up enormous questions as far as the relationship between the executive and the legislative branches. The power of the executive branch would be enhanced in potentially enormous fashion.

I ask my colleagues to carefully consider the uncertainties of this amendment. I further observe that this amendment is strongly opposed by the leadership of this amendment in the House—both Republican and Democrat. If it is passed by the Senate, it poses a risk of harm to the passage of this proposed constitutional amendment.

Perhaps this same issue concerning the President's budget should be addressed in enabling legislation following passage and ratification of this proposed constitutional amendment.

I thank the chairman for yielding me that time. I reserve the remainder of whatever time might be remaining of the 4 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from South Carolina have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 35 seconds remaining.

Mr. FORD. And I have 4 minutes remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. FORD. I promise the distinguished Senator from Arizona that we are going to get to a vote very soon.

Let me just say this in closing. My amendment would allow the Congress to fully evaluate the President's recommendations for a balanced budget and incorporate this information into the decisionmaking process of Congress. In terms of political philosophy or political psychology, the effect may be somewhat greater. Instead of saying "yes" to every group, which would put an even heavier burden on Congress, the President would be forced to make some hard choices and to give less and, yes, in some cases, say "no," to allow us to view what tradeoffs the President would make each year between competing programs to a balanced budget.

Mr. President, we are going to be faced with three amendments. I have no particular disagreement with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and his amendment, but one of his amendments directly affects the relationship between Congress and the President. They are willing to accept that one, but will not accept mine. We have to go up or down.

Well, Mr. President, the administration has an amendment to this constitutional amendment and I understand the Judiciary Committee does not want to accept that one. Well, if they do not want to accept that one, maybe the administration will come down against this amendment before final passage.

I hope that we could get this country to a balanced budget. Twenty-one Governors in this country must submit a balanced budget. I was there. I had to do it. I had to say no. It is not easy, but it can be done. And this is what the country needs. If it is what the country wants, we better have both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue on the same wavelength.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. THURMOND. I believe we have 35 seconds remaining. I yield that time to the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, our distinguished friend and colleague, Senator DECONCINI has sent out an excellent "Dear Colleague" letter on this particular amendment. I think he makes some compelling points, as did the distinguished Senator from Montana (Senator MELCHER) in his statement today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DECONCINI's "Dear Colleague" letter, dated July 22, 1982, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D.C., July 22, 1982.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: On Friday, July 23rd, I expect votes to be taken on an amendment or amendments that would have the effect of requiring the President to submit to Congress an annual balanced budget, without exception. I would oppose amendments of this nature for the following reasons:

Whereas S.J. Res. 58 is flexible enough to permit Congress to submit a deficit budget if ⅗ of its members believe that such a budget is warranted, this type of amendment would require the President to submit a balanced budget without exception. It would permit no circumstances under which the President could submit a deficit budget. The result would be excessive inflexibility and an increased tendency toward dishonest budgetary practices.

This type of amendment is superfluous in the sense that its requirements are largely implicit in S.J. Res. 58. If Congress is under a general responsibility to balance its budget, the President will be under a similar responsibility with respect to proposing a budget. Any President who submits something other than a balanced budget either has the burden of demonstrating to ⅗ of Congress why it is necessary, or else risks losing influence in the process.

This amendment would elevate to the Constitution for the first time an Executive obligation to submit any budget. This is currently the subject matter solely of statute, and Congress can if it wishes pass statutory language mandating the submission to it by the president of a balanced budget.

I believe that amendments requiring the President to submit a balanced budget could upset the carefully-crafted political balance that currently exists in the proposed Constitutional amendment. I urge you to oppose it.

Sincerely,

DENNIS DECONCINI,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute and 10 seconds remaining.

Mr. FORD. I yield 1 minute and 10 seconds to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, Senator EXON.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. President, I have been listening with great interest to what I think are not very logical explanations of why we should not adopt this amendment. The Senator from Montana would cloud the issue seemingly by saying that we are giving the President more power. Certainly, the amendments that have been offered and, I understand, accepted by the managers of this bill, spell out very clearly what the Constitution has always held—that it is the Congress that has the right and the duty to pass a budget.

We are not changing that in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. What we are simply saying is that we think we should work together as Governors and State legislatures have for a long, long time to meet the requirements of a balanced budget.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that those who are taking the position that we should not insist that the President give us a balanced budget are wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY A DELEGATION OF PARLIAMENTARIANS FROM THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Mr. HAYAKAWA. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to present the distinguished delegation of Parliamentarians from the Republic of Korea: The Honorable Jong Chan Lee, the floor leader or the majority leader of the Democratic Justice Party; the Honorable Chung Soo Park, an independent; the Honorable Joong Yeon Cho, senior whip of the opposition party; the Honorable Duwan Pong, an independent; and the Honorable Churl Soon Yim, a member of the Democratic Justice Party and also of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

They are visiting our Nation's Capital on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the Korean-American Friendship Treaty.

A 2-day conference organized by the Center for Strategic and International Studies will highlight the delegation's week long visit to Washington. Their visit during this centennial year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries is another example of the cooperation and mutual understanding that exists between us. I look forward to our continuing friendship during the next 100 years and we welcome them.

RECESS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for 1 minute so that Members might meet our friends from Korea.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 3:11, recessed until 3:12 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. COCHRAN).

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 58).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 53, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 259 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—2

Cannon Tsongas

So Mr. FORD's amendment (No. 1933) was rejected.

Mr. THURMOND, Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I Move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1986

(Purpose: To make clarifying changes in the proposed balanced budget constitutional amendment)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I call up my printed amendment No. 1986 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), for himself, Mr. CHILES, Mr. PERCY, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. JOHNSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 1986.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 3, insert before the comma, ": First".

On page 3, line 21, after the word "shall" insert the following: ", pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles,".

On page 4, line 2, strike "last calendar year ending" and insert in lieu thereof "year or years ending not less than six months nor more than twelve months".

On page 4, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation." and renumber the remaining section.

Add after the last section of the constitutional amendment: "Second, that it is the sense of Congress that legislation to implement this article shall include, but not be limited to, procedures for the development and adoption of the statement required by section 1, the relationship between the statement and the overall procedures for development and adoption of the Federal budget, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, definitions and methods to implement section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures. The statement of the sense of the Congress expressed in this paragraph shall not be submitted to the States as part of the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.".

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I desire the floor in order to have a dialog with the Senator from New Mexico on his amendment. Will the Senator agree to that?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the reason I ask for a quorum call is the Senator from New Mexico has to leave the Chamber for about 5 minutes and the distinguished Senator from Idaho was going to watch the floor for me. When I return I will be delighted to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I will wait.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the amendment that is pending was originally cosponsored by myself, Senators CHILES, BENTSEN, PERCY, and JOHNSTON.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator EXON be added as a cosponsor at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I made a lengthy floor statement almost 2 weeks ago, on July 13, in which I outlined a number of clarifying changes that I believed were needed in the balanced budget constitutional amendment. Also, on July 13, I sent out a "Dear Colleague" letter summarizing the changes I was proposing.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of that letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, D.C., July 13, 1982.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: As you know, the Senate yesterday began floor consideration of S. J. Res. 58, the Constitutional Amendment to Balance the Budget. All Senators need to examine carefully this important resolution. This Constitutional Amendment would have considerable impact on the budget process and on federal macroeconomic policy. Because S. J. Res. 58 is such an important piece of legislation and because it will have a major impact on the future of the budget process, I am taking this opportunity to share with you my views on this amendment and my plans for offering several floor amendments to clarify it.

I have called for balanced federal budgets my entire political career. As Chairman of the Budget Committee I have worked as hard as I know how to achieve this crucial goal in order to strengthen the American economy. As a means to achieve this goal I have looked at many proposed Constitutional Amendments and joined as a cosponsor of S. J. Res. 58.

Today I made a lengthy floor statement expressing my hope that I will be able to vote for S. J. Res. 58. In my statement I set forth the concerns I have about the amendment and explained the changes I will seek before the Senate approves it.

Although I endorse the idea of a Constitutional Amendment, close examination of S. J. Res. 58 and careful analysis of how it will affect the budget process in the future reveals several potentially serious problems. I have developed several perfecting amendments to correct these problems and help assure that the Constitutional Amendment will achieve its objectives. A marked up copy of S. J. Res. 58 indicating these proposed changes is attached. I hope you will join me in sponsoring at least some of these perfecting amendments.

One of my concerns relates to enforcement. S. J. Res. 58 states that "the Congress and the President shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement." I believe that this sentence is dangerously vague and will likely lead to conflict over impoundment powers between the President and Congress. The Judiciary Committee's report on S. J. Res. 58 states "there is no intention to alter the division and separation of powers now characteristic of the relationship between the Congress and the President". (Report No. 97-151, p. 47.) My first amendment would add the words "by legislation" after the word "shall" and thereby make it clear that outlay control is to be established through legislation.

My second amendment deals with the voting requirements in S. J. Res. 58 and is designed to make the balanced budget amendment more consistent with other provisions of the Constitution. S. J. Res. 58 requires three-fifths "of the whole number" to pass an unbalanced budget and a majority "of the whole number" to pass a tax bill which will cause receipts to exceed the norms established by the amendment. The only other place in the Constitution that contains similar language is in the procedure used by the Senate to select a vice-president when the electoral college is deadlocked. My amendment would simply strike the phrase "of the whole number", thereby making the two voting requirements percentages of those present and voting.

My third amendment will be to strike the phrase "in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year," from section 2. This phrase creates considerable uncertainty over how to measure receipt growth under the amendment. Because actual receipts in the current fiscal year will have to be established at the time the statement is being drafted for the next year, considerable controversy over which estimates to use is inevitable. In another amendment I intend to make it clear that procedures to be used to measure revenue growth shall be established by legislation.

My fourth proposal adds the words "or national emergency" after the word "war" in section 3. This change, similar to that recommended by David Stockman in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, will allow the Congress the flexibility to deal with emergencies short of war. A definition of "national emergency" will be included in the implementing statute.

My fifth proposal would add a catch-all paragraph on matters to be covered in implementing legislation. Many uncertainties will still exist about the effect of S.J. Res. 58 even with my amendments. However, it is far better to include most of these matters in legislation rather than crowd the Constitution with technical formulas. This final amendment will read: "Congress shall by legislation provide for the implementation of this article, including, but not limited to, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, the methods of implementing and terminating waivers under section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures." I intend to introduce and hold extensive hearings on an implementing bill starting in September.

My goal in offering amendments to S.J. Res. 58 is to make the Constitutional Amendment workable. It is not my purpose to weaken or side-track the amendment. Amendments to the Constitution are extremely important and quite difficult to change once ratified. We must make sure that we are doing everything possible to make S.J. Res. 58 an effective vehicle.

Please contact me or my Senate Budget Committee staff if you have any questions relating to the amendments.

Sincerely,

PETE V. DOMENICI.

S.J. RES. 58—BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT (STAR PRINT) WITH CHANGES PROPOSED BY SENATOR DOMENICI

(Deletions in brackets, additions in italic)

"SECTION 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are no greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths [of the whole number] of both Houses shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject. The Congress and the President shall by legislation ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

"SECTION 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income [in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year,] unless a majority [of the whole number] of both Houses of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

"SECTION 3. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war or national emergency is in effect.

"SECTION 4. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing and total oulays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

"SECTION 5. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.[".]

"SECTION 6. Congress shall by legislation provide for implementation of this article, including, but not limited to, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, the methods of implementing and terminating waivers under section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures.".

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in the time since I made my floor statement, my staff and I have had many discussions with other Senators and their staffs to seek understanding and support for the changes I propose. The managers of the resolution and other Senators have been very responsive to the concerns I have expressed, and have helped me improve the amendments I have just offered and had the clerk read.

Last week, on July 19, I presented to the Senate my revised plans with respect to the amendments. I indicated in that second statement I would drop two of the five amendments I had originally discussed and proceed with the other three changes at the proper time.

Last week Senators CHILES, PERCY, and I circulated a second dear colleague letter discussing these amendments.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the July 21 letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET
Washington, D.C., July 21, 1982.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: During the past week the Senate had been debating S.J. Res. 58, the Balanced Budget Constitutional Amendment. On Tuesday, July 13, Senator Domenici made a floor statement in which he outlined several potential problems in implementing S.J. Res. 58 and proposed several amendments to alleviate these problems.

The floor managers of S.J. Res. 58 and several other senators have reviewed and commented on Senator Domenici's proposals. We have now made changes in these proposals in cooperation with the managers of the bill who have indicated they will support our package of amendments as revised. Attached is a copy of S.J. Res. 58 indicating the changes to be made by the three amendments.

Our first clarifying amendment would add the words, "pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles," after the phrase "The Congress and the President shall" in the last sentence of section 1. The purpose of this amendment is to make it absolutely clear that no change in relationships between Congress and the President, including the question of impoundment power, is being made by the last sentence of section 1.

Our second amendment will strike the phrase "last calendar year ending" from section 2 and insert in lieu thereof "year or years ending not less than six months nor more than twelve months". The purpose of this change is to allow Congress flexibility to select a period longer than one year as the base period for establishing the maximum rate at which federal receipts will normally be allowed to grow. The change will also permit the federal fiscal year to be made concurrent with the calendar year should Congress at some future date deem that change to be appropriate.

Our third proposed amendment encompasses the enforcement amendment introduced by Senator Chiles on July 1, and would add the following new section 5: "Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation." Language similar to this has been included in most recent constitutional amendments. We believe that detailed implementing legislation is an essential adjunct to this Constitutional Amendment and such language should be included.

In conjunction with the new section 5 language on implementing legislation to be included in the Constitutional Amendment itself, we believe it is necessary to establish very strong legislative history on the anticipated content of the implementing legislation. To accomplish this, we intend to seek adoption of the following language:

"It is the sense of the Congress that legislation to implement this article shall include, but not be limited to, procedures for the development and adoption of the statement required by section 1, the relationship between the statement and the overall procedures for development and adoption of the Federal budget, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, definitions and methods to implement section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures. The statement of the sense of the Congress expressed in this paragraph shall not be submitted to the States as part of the Resolution proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

If you have questions about the above or are interested in co-sponsoring these amendments, please have your staff contact Bob Fulton (4-1458) or Terry Lyons (4-0542) of Senator Domenici's staff or call Rick Brandon (4-0836) of Senator Chiles' staff.

Sincerely,

LAWTON CHILES,
PETE V. DOMENICI,
CHARLES H. PERCY.

S. J. RES. 58

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein): First, That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the States for ratification:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are no greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths of the whole number of both Houses shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject. The Congress and the President shall, pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles, ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

"SECTION 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in the year or years ending not less than six months nor more than twelve months before such fiscal year, unless a majority of the whole number of both Houses of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

"SECTION 3. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

"SECTION 4. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing and total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

"SECTION 5. Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation.

"Second, that it is the sense to the Congress that legislation to implement this article shall include, but not be limited to, procedures for the development and adoption of the statement required by section 1, the relationship between the statement and the overall procedures for development and adoption of the Federal budget, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, definitions and methods to implement section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures. The statement of the sense of the Congress expressed in this paragraph shall not be submitted to the States as part of the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"SECTION 6. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.".

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution altering Federal budget procedures.".

LIST OF AMENDMENTS TO SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 58 TO BE OFFERED BY SENATOR DOMENICI

1. Add the words "by legislation" in the last sentence in section 1 which requires Congress and the President to "ensure" that actual outlays do not exceed the budget plan. This change will eliminate any implications that the amendment gives the President unilateral impoundment powers. The Judiciary Committee Report states that no change in existing relationships between the President and the Congress is intended.

2. Strike the words "of the whole number" in section 1 and 2, so that a vote to have an unbalanced budget will require a "yes" vote by three-fifths of those voting and a vote to raise taxes faster than national income will require a "yes" vote of a majority of those voting. These changes will make the amendment conform with other voting requirements contained in the Constitution.

3. Strike the words "in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year," from section 2. This change retains the basic principle of limiting the growth of revenues to the growth of national income, but provides flexibility to use a longer or different base period than the last calendar year. The amendment as written is unclear as to how the revenue ceiling will be calculated and would prevent moving the fiscal year to January 1-December 31.

4. Add the words "or national emergency" after the phrase "in which a declaration of war" in section 3. This amendment would broaden the waiver provision in order to allow the Congress flexibility to respond to emergencies short of declared war. The definition of a "national emergency" and procedures for initiating and terminating waivers will need to be included in implementing legislation. David Stockman recommended a similar change in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee.

5. Add a new catch-all implementing section that states "Congress shall by legislation provide for the implementation of this article, including, but not limited to, procedures for calculating the maximum increase in total receipts pursuant to section 2, the methods of implementing and terminating waivers under section 3, and definitions of terms and accounting procedures." This change clearly gives to Congress the power to implement this Constitutional Amendment. This implementing legislation will cover the detailed procedures that do not properly belong in the Constitution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased that Senators BENTSEN, JOHNSTON, and EXON have joined Senators CHILES, PERCY, and me as cosponsors of this amendment. I believe, in fact, there is widespread support for the changes this amendment will make.

Let me describe the four parts of the amendment and explain briefly why I think each of these changes is necessary. My first proposal is to make clear that outlay control is to be achieved through legislation. The first change we propose is to the last sentence of section 1 of the proposed constitutional amendment. We propose to insert in that sentence the words "pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles."

This will make it crystal clear that, in charging Congress and the President with the responsibility for insuring that actual outlays do not exceed outlays provided for in the budget statement approved by Congress, the constitutional amendment will not give the President or Congress any authority they do not already have except as may be specified by legislation adopted subsequent to the approval of the constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, there has already been considerable expression of concern here on the Senate floor during the earlier debate on this resolution about the question of whether this constitutional amendment would confer upon the President new powers to impound funds. The managers of the bill have stated their view that the constitutional amendment would give the President no impoundment powers that he does not already have, but they have acknowledged there is room for debate on the question of whether the President could claim a constitutional obligation to hold up spending of Federal money in order to keep actual outlays from exceeding the budget.

In a situation in which Congress was unable or unwilling to act either to revise the budget statement or keep spending from exceeding statement, I believe there could be room for confusion over the President's powers and obligations if the constitutional amendment were adopted as it is now worded.

With the change being offered, by myself and the distinguished cosponsors I have just described, we will have absolute protection against an interpretation that a President at some future time might claim that a Congress is being irresponsible and that he has a unilateral right and obligation to stop Federal spending—in areas he selects—in order to keep outlays from exceeding the budget statement then in effect.

Let me hasten to add that I personally believe Congress may find it necessary to give the President both some new powers and some new obligations in order for the objectives of this constitutional amendment to be achieved. The uncertainties of budgetmaking are such that actual spending will be very hard to keep within the approved budget plan—even if increased obligations are imposed legislatively on the President to monitor outlay experience and make progress reports to Congress, and even if the President is given greater powers to restrain spending.

But I feel the way to assign those duties and grant those powers to the President is through carefully developed, detailed legislation that cannot possibly be part of a constitutional amendment.

We have now had considerable experience with the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, including title X which establishes procedures for rescissions and deferrals. These impoundment control procedures have worked, but certainly they have not worked perfectly. We need some revisions to them, in my opinion, after nearly 8 years of experience with them. I am sure if Congress grants the President additional powers for rescission or deferral or, perhaps, some new type of power to control the growth of entitlements which, incidentally, is a very challenging kind of idea and which I predict will come one of these days, Congress will want to look within a few years to see whether it has gone too far or not gone far enough.

By making clear that subsequent legislation is necessary on the important matter of how actual outlays will be kept within the totals in the budget statement, we will preserve the prerogatives of Congress. It must be made eminently clear, once this constitutional amendment is adopted, that Congress either has given the President the requisite powers to control outlays or has retained them, in which event one or the other is going to be clearly responsible. I believe the people take the constitutional amendment seriously, and as the national Government changes from the prejudice of spending in the past 30 years toward a more rational approach to fiscal restraint, that the people will demand and get accountability from their elected representatives.

They will know wherein the power lies because Congress will have the prerogative to give the President the authority, or to keep it itself; to give the Presidents of the future either a lot of power or very little.

As I said in my initial floor statement 2 weeks ago, I intend to produce shortly, in due course, a bill that will spell out the implementing procedures that I think are needed to enable the Federal Government to operate under this amendment. In that bill I will propose some changes in the impoundment powers. That will be not an amendment to this constitutional amendment but a bill, legislation.

My proposal, and those of other Members, will be fully debated, I am sure. Legislation to implement this constitutional amendment must be carefully crafted in all its detail before it becomes the law of the land.

The changes I am proposing to section 1 in this amendment will preserve the opportunity for a full debate on the outlay control issue and will assure that we are not putting something in the constitutional amendment that we will later regret.

My second proposal modifies the base period for measuring national income growth in section 2. It modifies the procedure by which the maximum growth of receipts will normally be established. Section 2 now provides that, unless Congress specifically adopts a law raising taxes, the level of receipts provided for in budget statements adopted by Congress shall not provide for a rate of growth faster than national income grew in the last calendar year ending prior to the fiscal year to which the budget statement applies.

The change that we are proposing would eliminate the reference to the last calendar year, and insert in its place a provision that receipts provided for in budget statements shall not normally increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in "the year or years ending not less than 6 months nor more than 12 months" before the fiscal year to which the budget applies.

There are at least three problems with the section 2 language as it now stands that are to be corrected by the amendment that the Senator from New Mexico and his cosponsors suggest. The first problem is that there may be distortions caused by using national income growth in a single calendar year as the general rule for measuring the permissible growth in receipts. There can be freakish twists in the economy in a single 12-month period that, in turn, would indicate inappropriate fiscal policies for an upcoming fiscal year.

For example, let us suppose that there was a brief, but very deep, recession in a calendar year, similar to what happened in 1980. Then let us further suppose that we had a prompt economic recovery and the economy showed signs of overheating. If this situation existed, the use of the change in national income in a single calendar year to establish maximum receipts would point to a fiscal policy of little or no growth of receipts and indeed to a cut in taxes. This would be precisely the wrong medicine for an overheating economy.

I understand very well that the Congress could overcome this problem by adopting a bill increasing taxes by votes of the majority of the whole number of both Houses. However, both bodies would have to agree on the tax provisions and the President would have to have his veto rights over the bill. So, I do not think we ought to put into the Constitution a rigid limit on the time period over which national income is to be measured in order to determine how fast revenues can grow without a change in the law.

My own view is that it would make sense to use 3- or 5-year average growth in national income, rather than a single 12-month period. But, in any event, it is advisable to provide Congress and the President with flexibility on this question so that if the period initially selected turns out to have been too long or too short it can be changed after some experience has been gained.

We need to establish a very clear history, however, that we do not intend or expect that Congress will change willy-nilly the base period for calculating growth of national income. If the Congress were to get into a pattern under which it changed the base period for national income growth each year, so that it could permit more growth in revenues, it would be on the way to undermining the effectiveness of this constitutional amendment.

(Mr. MATTINGLY assumed the chair.)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from Iowa. I think the issue I am on is one he is concerned with.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I only wish to take the time of this body, to compliment the Senator for the statement that he just made. I think he has made it very clear that it is not his intent, in giving some leeway to the Congress to adjust the fiscal year, that this be used as a subterfuge to undermine the purpose and spirit of this resolution. Does the Senator agree with my analysis of his amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes; I agree with the Senator. I knew that he was concerned about that.

The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Senator HATCH, has inquired and will have a colloquy with the Senator from New Mexico on the same issue.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is most welcome.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Will the Senator from New Mexico give an example as to how that not less than 6 months nor more than a year would work?

Mr. DOMENICI. If the fiscal year was October 1, then you would go back 6 months to April, and you could use a 12-month period or a longer period prior to that. If more time between the base period and the start of the new fiscal year were considered necessary, Congress could end the base period as much as 12 months before the start of the fiscal year—on September 30 of the prior year, if the fiscal year started on October 1.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Or you could go back 1 year, did the Senator say?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Not more than 1 year or not less than 6 months?

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That seems reasonable. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will yield in just a moment. I say to the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia that he might note that in my original proposal I prescribed even greater flexibility. In no event has it been my intention to allow Congress to change the base period willy-nilly. But I have agreed with the sponsors of the amendment that, while we want some flexibility, we ought to put some parameters around it so we do not have picking and choosing. It is fairly rigid, yet the needed flexibility is there.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. It seems to me what the Senator worked out is reasonable.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from New York for a question.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank my distinguished friend for doing so.

May I first say that I rise to congratulate him on the provisions of his one amendment, which were introduced at first as three separate provisions. I am particularly pleased to see he perceives the need for greater flexibility in the revenue formula in section 2 of the resolution before us, in which the rate of increase in receipts is to be limited by the rate of increase in national income in the preceding calendar year. He now proposes to amend this provision.

As the Senator knows, it is my view—and I do not think I am alone in this matter—that one of the great problems of this constitutional amendment is the problem of definition. The Senator spoke eloquently to this matter on the first day of debate. It must be determined, "What do we mean by this, and what do we mean by that?"

Absent clear and explicit definitions in the amendment—now, I do not want to put words in the Senator's mouth—but he contemplated resort to the courts will be made, as he contemplated. This is the normal practice of American law, and of constitutional law not the least, when a question of interpretation of terms arises. What is due process? What is a "person" under the law? Recall the 14th amendment's long history of definitions.

The Senator refers to national income, and the period from which we will calculate its rate increase under this amendment. Does he, then, have in mind a definition of national income?

Modern economics offer at least four major propositions about what is national income. It has been debated from the very first time the idea appeared. Economists do not agree precisely where the idea first appeared in a general form. Certainly, it was present in Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations." As a quantified proposition, it begins with the work of Simon Kuznets in the 1930's, in his development of the category of gross national product and his effort to quantify gross national product.

The notion of national income is deeply embodied in Keynesian economic doctrine; yet it always has been one open to the wide range of interpretations that economists can bring to very general ideas.

For example, an elementary course in economics almost invariably will explore the dimensions of net national product, which is closely related to national income. Now, the services of a housewife do not get counted in the net national product, while those of a housekeeper do. Therefore, if a man marries his housekeeper, the net national product may go down. Or, if a wife arranges with her neighbor for each to clean the other's house in return for $5,000 a year, the net national product would go up by $10,000. You inevitably enter into endless yet reasonable questions of definition.

Does the distinguished Chairman have in mind a specific definition of net national product or of national income?

Mr. DOMENICI. I did not think the Senator would ever get around to asking the quesiton.

Let me say to my good friend it is not terribly relevant what the Senator from New Mexico thinks the definition should be because the report that the Judiciary Committee submitted with this resolution, on page 49, says it right, although I would intend by additional history we establish here on the floor to make it even more certain.

On page 49 of the Judiciary Committee report, the following statement appears in the first full paragraph:

> The precise concept of national income is intended to remain subject to the discretion of the Congress. Currently reported concepts include Gross National Product, Net National Product, National Income, Personal Income, Disposable Personal Income, and Gross Domestic Product. Any of these may be chosen, as might some new measure determined by the Congress.

I say to my good friend, that is not the only definition that we are going to have to come up with to implement this constitutional amendment and to make it effective for the American people, the great American economy, and national fiscal policy.

I do have as part of my amendment, I say to my good friend from New York, a sense of the Congress resolution that clearly indicates that it is our collective sense that legislation to implement this article shall include, but not be limited to—and it proceeds to say—"definitions of terms and accounting procedures."

While I do not intend to burden this constitutional amendment with as many words on implementing legislation as I originally proposed, there is a sentence that I do propose to add as an amendment with reference to Congress implementing this constitutional amendment by legislation. I think that is what the question goes to. I do not think this is going to be all that easy, but neither do I think it should mean that we will not have a good series of laws passed. If the American people go through the trouble, as prescribed in that document called our Constitution, to amend it as proposed in this constitutional amendment, then I submit that Congress is not going to take that charge lightly. The first episode in drawing a statute, which includes definitions, the period of time, what national income is, what is a receipt, what is an outlay—all of those things and more will be under extreme scrutiny by the American people. The adversary process that takes place in this body and the other, and a President in years to come who will be watching when we adopt implementing legislation with his right to inject his prescription by way of veto, if he does not think Congress is doing it right.

So I am not terribly frightened by the fact that Congress has to provide definitions. As I said earlier today when the Senator was not here, I believe the purpose of this exercise in constitutional restraint is to change the bias that has existed for at least 25 years. I did not say congressional or Presidential. I said the National Government's bias for overcommitting and overspending. This constitutional amendment will shift the bias if the people go through the trouble of adopting it. There will be a prejudice in favor of restraint and concern for budget balance. That is why I think that at this time in history it is important that we adopt it.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a brief question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have a few more comments to make, but I will yield, yes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I have seen the Senator from New Mexico struggling in this direction, and must ask him as an attorney—and a distinguished one—would he not agree with me that, where a phrase is entered into the Constitution, the U.S. courts are free to declare what that phrase means, and routinely do so—and frequently in the course of doing so, declare a contrary statutory interpretation by the Congress as unconstitutional? Does it not follow that, no matter what implementing legislation we may later enact, we have thrust the budget into the courts?

I do not ask the Senator to answer the last question; but I do ask him as an attorney, is it not the case that since Marbury against Madison, the courts have held that it is their right to decide what the Constitution says. And that they frequently do say the Constitution says something quite different from what the Congress by statute has interpreted it to say?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to my good friend from New York that he is far too complimentary of the Senator from New Mexico in terms of my legal expertise. While I am a lawyer, in all fairness I have had limited constitutional experience. I have however, discussed the matter of judicial review with the distinguished Senator from Washington, Senator GORTON, who will address this issue at length in a subsequent amendment. It appears to me that the U.S. Supreme Court has, from time to time, changed its views on what is a political decision and what is constitutional. But it is the understanding of the Senator from New Mexico that what Congress intends is that the Supreme Court certainly would interpret to see whether we have faithfully implemented this amendment. When it comes to substituting the Court's interpretation for ours on a definition, or what is a fiscal year, or what are receipts, and what is the content of the statement, then I believe that it would be chaos for this country if those kinds of issues end up being determined regularly by any court. I am confident that is not going to happen.

I do not know that I am going to support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Washington, but I do think he will raise the issue and talk very seriously about what we have learned in the past 8 or 10 years about the Supreme Court and its putting itself into legislative issues in ways that many did not contemplate when other amendments to the U.S. Constitution passed.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I just conclude by thanking the Senator. I look forward to Senator GORTON solving this problem, as I have now heard the Senator from New Mexico declare that if the Court begins to interpret these terms, chaos will result.

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe that could happen.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Chaos, indeed, is what we are going to get under this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. But that does not mean we should stop amending the Constitution. The Supreme Court has become involved in interpretation that Congress did not contemplate when it approved many of the earlier constitutional amendments, but that does not mean that Congress should not have passed them.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa for a question.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I think that the discussion that we just witnessed raises some very relevant points. Even if the Supreme Court were to be involved in defining national income or in establishing the base unit for measuring growth of national income, the important thing is that that specific measure be used consistently. I do not believe that the Supreme Court will be involved in this matter to any great extent.

But even if the Supreme Court were to make such determinations, the critical point is that these measures are not manipulated by a future Congress. It does not matter whether the time unit is 1 year or 2 years or 3 years. It is imperative that once that determination is made that Congress measure against that benchmark on into the future—I think that is the important consideration.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to my good friend that the fact is that Congress is going to have to pass some very difficult enabling legislation to carry out the purposes of this amendment. Congress could indeed attempt to get around it by the laws that it passes—and the Senator and I would acknowledge that that may be the case. We certainly cannot stand here and say they will not, that that is not a possibility. I do not think that means, as some are saying in the country, that perhaps we ought not to pass it. That is what a democracy is about. The people of this country are going to know, from the first set of enabling laws we pass on this, whether or not we are playing games or are serious.

If we choose to have more than 1 year as the measure of a budget, are we doing it with some consistency or some real goal or objective of getting control over the expenditures of our Government or not? That is going to be, in the best sense of the word, a true test of the legislators of this country either doing what people have asked or seeking to avoid it. I do not think people of this country collectively are going to let us get away with anything but a sincere effort in trying to put into effect the laws to carry this amendment out, once the people of America have adopted it.

I know my friend from Florida wants to speak. I have about 5 minutes, then I shall be through and yield the floor. For purposes of measuring my time, Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to myself.

A second problem with section 2 of the constitutional amendment as it now stands is that the formula for calculating revenue growth is not a complete formula. Section 2 establishes how to obtain the percentage by which revenues will normally be permitted to grow. It does not specify what estimate of receipts for the current fiscal year the growth percentage will be applied to in order to establish the maximum revenues for the upcoming fiscal year.

In the report of the Judiciary Committee, a sample formula is presented which indicates that it was the intent of the drafters that the receipts provided for in the latest budget statement for the current fiscal year be the starting base for calculating maximum receipts for the coming fiscal year. I do not believe it is likely that Congress would be willing to establish the ceiling on receipts in the way the Judiciary Committee report suggests.

Let us take our most recent experience as an example on this point. Last year, in the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1982, Congress established a revenue floor of $658 billion for fiscal year 1982. In the budget resolution passed just last month, the fiscal year 1982 revenue figure was revised downward to $628 billion, a reduction of $30 billion from the estimate approved last year. Had the constitutional amendment been in effect, I do not believe Congress would have been willing to calculate fiscal year 1983 growth in receipts using an estimate of fiscal year 1982 revenues that was 1 year old and rendered inaccurate by later events.

What I am suggesting is that it is necessary to pin down by statute which estimate of revenues for the current fiscal year will be used in calculating the maximum revenues for the upcoming fiscal year. By amending section 2 in the way we are doing and having this discussion here on the floor, we are laying the ground work for having procedures for establishing the permissible growth of receipts spelled out in the implementing statute in a somewhat different way than the Judiciary Committee report contemplated.

The third problem with section 2 as it now stands is that it would preclude Congress from changing the Federal fiscal year to correspond to the calendar year. Senator ROTH and others have proposed that that be done. I see some merit in the idea given the fact that Congress is more and more on a 12-month schedule.

I am sure the drafters of Senate Joint Resolution 58 did not intend to preclude shifting the fiscal year to a calendar year. The reason the amendment would do that is a fairly technical one but is real nevertheless. The constitutional amendment as it now stands states that the growth of national income in the last calendar year ending prior to the fiscal year for which the budget is being prepared shall be the basis for growth of receipts in the coming fiscal year. The calendar year of course ends on December 31. If the fiscal year began on January 1, it would be literally impossible to have available the actual national income data for the last calendar year at the time the budget was being prepared. After the constitutional amendment is ratified, the budget statement for the upcoming fiscal year will need to be prepared several months prior to the start of the fiscal year—much as the first budget resolution is now. At that time, nothing but rough estimates of the national income growth in the current calendar year is available. If the fiscal year and the calendar year were the same, it would be a physical impossibility to carry out the terms of the amendment as it now stands.

The change we are proposing will replace the reference to "last calendar year" with provision for using the average annual increase in national income in the "year or years ending not less than 6 months nor more than 12 months" before the fiscal year for which the budget statement is being prepared. This will leave the flexibility to adopt any fiscal year Congress and the President may decide is appropriate, as well as flexibility on choice of the period for measuring national income growth. The only limitation is that the period must end not more than 12 months and not less than 6 months prior to the beginning of the fiscal year for which the budget statement is being prepared. This is to make it clear that the period to be used must be a recent one, but not so close to the upcoming fiscal year that good actual data are not available.

The change to section 2 included in the amendment I have offered will resolve satisfactorily all three of the problems I have described.

The third of my amendments addresses the need for recognizing that implementing legislation is essential. The third change proposed by the pending amendment is the addition of a new section—section 5—stating simply: "The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation."

The Judiciary Committee recognized that implementing legislation would be necessary since the constitutional amendment sets out broad principles and would not be self-executing. The Judiciary Committee felt it was unnecessary to state in the constitutional amendment itself the requirement for implementing legislation since Congress and the President already have the constitutional obligation to see that all of the Constitution's provisions are carried out.

The distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) and I feel very strongly that it is important to state in the constitutional amendment the requirement that there shall be implementing and enforcement action by Congress. Provisions have been included in many recent constitutional amendments confirming the power of Congress to enforce the provisons by appropriate legislation. Confirmation that Congress must enforce and implement is essential in this case because of the fact that detailed implementing legislation and procedures will be an essential supplement to the constitutional amendment.

I initially thought it prudent to include in the provision to be added to the constitutional amendment specific mention of the key areas in which implementing legislation would be needed. I have become convinced that this is not necessary so long as very strong and very clear legislative history is established about the minimum content of implementing legislation.

To help provide that very strong and very clear legislative history, the pending amendment would add to Senate Joint Resolution 58 a sense of the Congress provision. This provision would be in the resolution, but would not be part of the constitutional amendment. It would not be submitted to the States for ratification.

This provision specifies five areas in which implementing legislation will be necessary, and makes clear that these are not necessarily the only aspects of implementation on which there will need to be legislation.

Let me mention each of the five areas and comment briefly on why implementing legislation is needed in each of them.

The first area in which legislation will be needed is in spelling out procedures for development and adoption of budget statements. It will be necessary to establish a timetable for preparing budget statements, to prescribe the content of the statements, to provide procedures for amending the statements, and to flesh out numerous other details.

A second area in which legislation will be needed is in defining relationships between the budget statements and overall procedures for development and adoption of the budget. It will be necessary to specify in legislation how the President's budget proposals will feed into the process of developing the congressional budget statement. Likewise, the way the budget statement fits into the overall congressional budget process, the relationship to reconciliation procedures, and the interactions between the development of the budget statement and the authorizing and appropriations processes will all need to be specified in implementing legislation.

A third area in which implementing legislation must flesh out the details is the procedure for establishing the maximum receipts which may be included in a budget statement without a change in the tax laws.—It will be essential to spell out in legislation the definition of national income to be used in implementing the constitutional amendment. Likewise, the period of time to be used in measuring national income growth will need to be specified in legislation.

A fourth area to be covered in implementing legislation is the waiver procedure under section 3. For example, how do the revenue growth and balanced budget requirements operate when a declaration of war is terminated? The report of the Judiciary Committee suggests a way of determining the base periods for national income and revenue growth when a waiver is terminated. I believe this should also be addressed in implementing legislation.

A fifth area also to be covered in implementing legislation are definitions of terms and accounting principles to be used in implementing the constitutional amendment. For instance, consistent with section 4 of the constitutional amendment it will be necessary to have clear definitions of the Federal activities to be scored as outlays and the income to be counted as receipts. Even the fiscal year to be used will be subject to redefinition by legislation. Growing numbers of both Houses are now calling for a 2-year budget and appropriation cycle. That debate could very well lead to a decision to change—or even to lengthen—the Federal fiscal year.

Mr. President, with the changes I have outlined I will be an enthusiastic supporter of the pending constitutional amendment. I will not repeat now the reasons I have decided to support this amendment. I laid those out in my July 13 floor statement. With the changes I and the other cosponsors of this amendment are now proposing, I am convinced that the constitutional amendment will be workable and that it will make a big difference—for the better—in the shape of future Federal fiscal policies. I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, I note that the distinguished senior Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) is in the Chamber. It is obvious from my statements here today that he is one of the prime cosponsors of the three amendments and the language of resolution indicating what we intend by way of implementing legislation.

I thank him for his kind help in preparing the amendment and in gaining support for it and for his support on other issues we have had with reference to the constitutional amendment up to this point.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator DOMENICI in offering this amendment. I compliment him on the work he has done, because I think the amendment makes important improvements in Senate Joint Resolution 58, the constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

I say to my good friend from New Mexico that it is in anticipation of passing this amendment that I have decided to become a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 58.

Mr. President, I want to start off by complimenting the managers of the bill—Senator THURMOND, Senator HATCH, and Senator DECONCINI—who have shepherded it along to this point, where amending the Constitution to require a balanced budget has become a reality rather than a distant goal. They performed a service to the Nation that will long be remembered. I would also like to thank them for working with us to come to agreement on this amendment. I think we all agree that it makes some significant improvements while retaining the overall structure of Senate Joint Resolution 58.

I would like to highlight the enforcement provision of our amendment, which was drawn from the amendment which I introduced earlier. I believe that omission of an enforcement procedure was the major flaw of Senate Joint Resolution 58 as originally drafted. The public has had too many empty promises about balanced budgets, and I think they are fed up with those promises.

Some people have argued that under the "necessary and proper clause" (article 1, section 8), Congress has the overall authority to enact legislation to implement the constitutional provision, and that Senate Joint Resolution 58 adds the duty to balance the budget. All too often, however, Congress has failed to meet its duty. We have sufficient authority right now to produce a balanced budget, but we do not have the political will to do so. That is why we believe the extra discipline of a constitutional amendment is required.

Our amendment, therefore, adds a new section 5. It says, simply and directly, "Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation." Not "should enforce," or "may enforce," or "shall have the power to enforce," but "shall enforce and implement."

The phrase "shall enforce and implement" was drawn carefully.

Implementing the article refers to setting out definitions and procedures for the annual requirement of adopting a statement of outlays and receipts.

Enforcing the article refers to tying the levels of outlays and receipts in the statement to the actual spending and taxation decisions which Congress makes each year. We make this clear in the section of the resolution added after the constitutional amendment. We say there that the legislation to implement this article shall include both procedures for developing and adopting the statement of receipts and outlays, and also procedures concerning "the relationship between the statement and the overall procedures for development and adoption of the Federal budget." That makes it clear that we must "close the loop" and make our entire budgetary process consistent with the requirement for a balanced budget and reduced level of taxation set forth in the constitutional amendment. The amendment will no longer be open to the objection that Members can vote for the principle of a balanced budget, then vote against the laws necessary to make it happen. I would also like to clarify that this new section 5 does not expand the powers available to Congress under the Constitution. Rather, it insures that these powers will be brought to bear on conforming the budget process to the overall strictures of this article. The key to enforcement is to enforce these limitations upon the multitude of spending and taxation decisions made by Congress and its committees.

Mr. President, to clarify the legislative record, I would like at this point to engage in a brief colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on the Constitution, Senator HATCH, who has played a key role in developing Senate Joint Resolution 58 and guiding it toward passage.

First, I would like to ask if the distinguished Chairman, agrees that by adding the new section 5, we require Congress to adopt legislation both to implement the balanced budget procedures, and to enforce that its actual budgetary decisions regarding taxes and spending conform to the levels set forth in the annual statement of receipts and outlays, and conform to the tax limitation guidelines of section 2?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I believe that the distinguished Senator from Florida, who has played an important role in the development of these provisions, is correct. Under article I, section 8 of the Constitution, Congress has the general authority to enact laws necessary and proper to carry out its specific constitutional authorities. The new section 5 specifies, further, that Congress is expected to exercise its authority under article I, section 8 to establish means for the effective implementation and enforcement of the proposed amendment. This clarifies and punctuates what I believe is implicit in sections 1 and 2 of the amendment. It makes as clear as we possibly can that there is a heavy burden upon Congress to insure that this amendment is given genuine effect. The Senator from Florida is also correct, in my opinion, when he emphasizes the importance of both the words "implement" and "enforce". Congress will be under clear obligation to conform its budgetary procedures with the requirements of the new constitutional provision. While the President will have similar responsibilities derived from article II of the Constitution, Congress will clearly be required, in my view, to establish by legislation how it proposes to abide by the dictates of the amendment.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the chairman.

I wish to ask the chairman to also confirm my understanding of the change our amendment makes to section 1.

The Judiciary Committee report stated that no new Presidential power with regard to impoundment of funds for spending control was created by Senate Joint Resolution 58. However, the last sentence of section 1 seemed to open the door to such an expansion of Presidential power. Does the chairman agree that the language we have added clarifies that actions by Congress and the President to insure that actual outlays do not exceed outlays in the statement, shall only be in the form of legislation or other existing powers such as the President's veto authority? Since the Supreme Court has previously ruled that the Constitution provides no implicit impoundment authority, the reference to "exercise of their powers under the first and second article," does not imply any impoundment authority.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is absolutely correct. There has never been any intent on the part of the drafters of this amendment to establish impoundment authority of any kind in the executive.

My friend from Florida and others, however, have felt that this issue was so important that it should be further clarified. I respect their judgment in this regard and support this clarifying change.

I repeat again—it is the intent of this amendment that the President not be invested with impoundment authority by its provisions but only that the President be possessed of whatever authority he derives from article II of the Constitution, no more and no less.

The Senator from Florida, my good friend and colleague, is to be commended for his attention to this important issue, I personally express my gratitude to him for working as hard as he has on these amendments so that we can clarify some of these issues that have bothered a significant number of our colleagues.

Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. I add my thanks to the expressions of the Senator from Utah. I felt in working on this in the Judiciary Committee it was clear, but many of us do get too close to the forest to see the trees perhaps, and I think the Senator's amendment indeed clarifies it. There never was and certainly could not be spelled out any more distinctly that there is no impoundment authority vested here implied or otherwise.

I thank the Senator from Florida and agree with his observation.

Mr. CHILES. I thank both the distinguished chairman and the ranking minority member and compliment both of them again on their service to the Senate and the Nation in developing this vital amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. President, let me say that the last thing the country needs now is another constitutional crisis like the one we had back in the early 1970's when President Nixon tried to claim an implicit constitutional power to impound funds. It took years of litigation to resolve some of the legal disputes and many programs were disrupted in the mean time.

We clearly need some greater controls on spending and I am going to outline my proposed legislation later in this statement. Some people have proposed giving the President greater authority to withhold funds. I happen to disagree with that approach, and I will propose other methods which I think will be far more effective. But whatever approach we take ought to be carefully worked out in legislation. We ought not to put some pregnant phrase in the Constitution from which later officials may attempt to extract some progeny we did not clearly conceive. With the Domenici-Chiles amendment, we have narrowed the final sentence of section 1 to restrict Congress and the President to their current powers over spending and taxation.

I believe this colloquy with Senator HATCH and Senator DECONCINI has clearly established that Senate Joint Resolution 58 as amended makes no change in the current relationship among the three branches of Government.

Mr. President, while giving the President impoundment authority may seem appealing at first glance, I do not think many people have really thought through what impoundment would do to our democratic process.

There is a popular image Congress sitting here voting money for one or another special interest, for some fatcat lobby, while the President stands aloof and protects the national interest. While certainly there are some special interest votes, that is not mostly what goes on here. Mostly, Members of Congress, particularly those of us on the Budget and Appropriations Committees, spend many hours hearing local people tell us what programs are working and which can be cut. We meet with local school board members, citizens concerned about particular road or bridge projects, farmers who tell us what is happening with certain plant and animal diseases. Congress is the route for the average citizen to be heard on how the Federal Government spends their taxes. The staff of the OMB, or of the executive agencies' budget offices do not have those kinds of meetings. Yet that is who really determines impoundments. Those of us on the Appropriations Committee know that the major decisions, the ones that go to the President's desk, like the MX missile or social security, are not subjects of impoundment. Impoundments mostly deal with $10 million, $50 or $100 million decisions. While these are significant sums of money, they are far from the multibillion-dollar decisions on tax cuts, social security, and national defense which really determine what the deficit will be.

I have therefore opposed giving the President impoundment authority, because to do so would cut the public out of the decisionmaking process on Federal spending and go against what the founders of our country had in mind when they gave Congress the power of the purse in our Constitution.

Mr. President, I would like to add at this point that while I found the previous amendment by Senator FORD very appealing, I voted against it because of my concern to preserve our constitutional system of checks and balances. Right now, Congress has the preeminent role in taxing and spending, subject to the President's powerful veto authority. The President's budget is not now a constitutional matter—it is a proposal to Congress, submitted pursuant to legislative mandate. The Ford amendment would have given the President's budget a preeminent constitutional status. I believe that is something that we should not do, and I believe that when we adopt the implementing legislation to enforce this constitutional amendment, then we should require the President to submit a balanced budget, like we did back in 1979, but that should remain a matter of statute, not of constitutional authority.

Mr. President, I also wish to comment on some other aspects of Senate Joint Resolution 58 and our amendment to it.

The tax limitation provisions of section 2 are a critical part of the amendment. I have long been in favor of tax limitation. The Nunn-Chiles-Bellmon tax and spending reduction amendment to the 1978 tax bill was the first multiyear tax cut to pass the U.S. Senate. However, we made each year's tax cuts dependent on balancing the budget and holding outlays to a declining percent of gross national product. Senate Joint Resolution 58 made a major improvement over earlier proposed constitutional amendments which would have allowed the budget to be balanced by inflating up tax revenues. However, I have been concerned with writing a specific annual percent tax limitation formula into the Constitution.

In particular, under many circumstances, the particular formula specified in Senate Joint Resolution 58 could have been procyclical on the tax side. That is, it would cause tax receipts to be raised during a recession, aggravating unemployment. Conversely, it would require tax revenues to be cut during the year of rapid growth that typically follows a recession, which would aggravate inflationary pressures. I am sympathetic to the committee's desire to move away from economic projections, which introduce uncertainty and provide a temptation to juggle the numbers. The Domenci-Chiles amendment therefore keeps the system of basing the annual allowable percentage of revenue increase on actual prior-year data. However, we allow the use of several years of data, which would average out the effects of the economic cycle, and give a more stable base to the revenue guidelines.

Another concern that has been raised is whether the language of Senate Joint Resolution 58 opens up the possiblity of taxpayers' lawsuits, giving the judiciary a new role in directing budgetary activity. The committee report speaks at great length about the difficulty of obtaining standing to sue under this amendment, and the likely reluctance of the courts to take on political issues, stating that, "the amendment will be largely self-enforcing and self-monitoring." I would like to point out that our amendment, by requiring that "Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation," Makes it even more clear that we expect enforcement and implementation to be the job of Congress and legislation, not of courts and lawsuits. Coupled with our amendment to the last sentence of section 1 which restricts the President's role to that of executing legislation adopted by Congress, this amendment should make it clear that we do not intend to make any changes in the existing separation of powers among the three branches of Government.

PROPOSED ENFORCEMENT METHODS (BUDGET ACT AMENDMENTS)

Mr. President, there are many different ways that the Budget Act could be amended to enforce the new constitutional requirement for a balanced budget at a limited level of taxation. I have introduced one set of amendments to achieve this goal: I am sure other Members will introduce their own suggestions. I want to briefly describe my package of amendments at this point, so that Members and the public can see that enforcement is possible.

The key provisions of my package are:

First, require budget resolutions to show a balance of outlays and revenues;

Second, require a "payback" surplus to pay back any deficits incurred during a recession or other time that the waiver provision is involved. This will prevent the tendency to squeeze in permanent new spending programs when a recession makes a waiver necessary and keeps the national debt from being increased.

Third, require a temporary tax surcharge in the year after any "unanticipated deficits." This will offset the temptation to balance the annual statement by overoptimistic economic or estimating assumptions;

Fourth, codify "reconciliation" on the first budget resolution as a "deficit reduction bill";

Fifth, require that any year for which the current law outlays exceed current law revenues, there shall be a "deficit reduction bill" of sufficient magnitude to eliminate the deficit;

Sixth, define a method for limiting taxes and outlays as a percent of gross national product;

Seventh, prohibit offbudget spending;

Eighth, make 5-year budget limits binding, to prevent new entitlement spending from being adopted at a low cost, then ballooning in later years.

These provisions are consistent with the provisions of Senate Joint Resolution 58, and I hope the enforcement requirement which we have added in our amendment will give us the impetus to move ahead in the coming year. I think it would certainly be a good idea for Congress to get used to new procedures before the constitutional amendment actually takes effect.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I have listened with great respect and attention to the statements by the Senators from New Mexico and Florida. I rise not in opposition to anything they have said, because I have already stated I will vote for this amendment. It attempts to deal with defects and difficulties that I believe are insuperable. But at least it does recognize certain defects and at least attempt to deal with them.

Mr. President, this goes to the question of what we actually do know and can know about economics. As I have said before, this amendment incorporates algebra into the Constitution. But it does far more than that. It requires us, under pain of constitutional avoidance or violation, to make statements which a responsible person concerned with the political economy simply cannot make.

Some little while ago—January 24 of this year—Mr. Walter Wriston, the distinguished chairman of Citibank and one of the leading bankers of our country, appeared on the television program "Face the Nation." He offered this definition of the budget deficit:

> The budget deficit, as you know, is the intersection of two guesses a year out-in-time. Insofar as I know, no one has ever hit a Federal deficit within a few billion dollars. When you get out 2 years they are almost useless, because a lot of things will happen between now and then.

Mr. President, just as an example of some of the things that might happen, I take the liberty of quoting from the highly regarded and widely renowned American political commentator, Mr. George F. Will. Mr. Will suggested a number of other amendments to add to this already too-long amendment in order, in his view, to have it make any sense; I quote him. He said:

> Floods and hurricanes and other acts of God that wish to occur during the next fiscal year must register with OMB 6 months before the fiscal year begins so Congress can know that relief spending shall occur.

Next he said:

> Agricultural commodities covered by price supports must inform the Agriculture Department if they are planning to materialize in inconvenient quantities in the next fiscal year.

Next he said:

> Anyone planning to need unemployment compensation in the coming fiscal year must notify the Labor Department.

And finally he said:

> Before causing crises, tiresome foreigners must notify the U.S. Defense Department of any effects their crises will have on U.S. defense spending.

Now, this is meant in the high and happy tradition of irony, but it speaks to the most profoundly serious matter. It says:

> Do not tamper with something so fundamental to the Republic as the Constitution. Do not require of the Congress that which the Congress cannot do—which is to make accurate forecasts with respect to these matters.

It is not within our powers to know the future, and it is the future that controls the precise levels Federal receipts and Federal outlays—which this amendment would bring to precisely balance.

Mr. President, just this morning our good friend and distinguished congressional servant—and I am sure she would recognize that as the term of honor it is intended to be—Dr. Alice Rivlin, presented the Congressional Budget Office's new preliminary forecasts for the budget deficits for fiscal years 1982 through 1985.

As Senators know, the first budget resolution for fiscal 1982 estimated a 1982 budget deficit of $76 billion. The CBO has now reestimated it at $111 billion.

The first budget resolution for fiscal 1983 projected a deficit in 1983 of $103.9 billion; the new CBO estimate is $141 billion to $151 billion, a range of $10 billion being the most narrow the Budget Office would attempt at this time.

Finally, for fiscal 1984—for which the first budget resolution we recently adopted projects a budget deficit of $60 billion—the CBO's current deficit estimate is $143 billion to $158 billion, a $15 billion spread and more than $80 billion more than we projected less than 2 months ago.

Clearly these deficits suggest a crisis in American fiscal management. Clearly, they require us to address matters such as monetary policy, as well as fiscal policy, and our recent budget resolution proposed that we do. But just as clearly it states to us that we are involved here in an effort which the Washington Post described this morning as having a dreamlike quality.

We did not come to the U.S. Senate to be dreamy about the Constitution. Some persons use harder language. Mr. George F. Wills' column is entitled "Balanced Budget Hoax." He refers to the fact that this amendment comes to us from an administration that has neither produced a balanced budget nor at this point even contemplates one in the course of its elected term. Instead, it has proposed the highest deficits in our Nation's history.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Wills' column be printed in the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post editorial on the constitutional amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 25, 1982]

BALANCED BUDGET HOAX

(By George F. Will)

God, preparing condign punishment for hot air emitted in support of humbug, turned the temperature up to 90 the day the president addressed a rally for a constitutional amendment to require balanced budgets. The rally to make government—that questing beast—obedient to "the people" was for people with tickets. A ticket to a rally for an amendment to "require" balanced budgets calls to mind the invitation a Lady Colfax issued, after the First World War, to a luncheon to "meet the mother of the Unknown Warrior."

But members of the sainted public could get tickets. Red tickets were for employees of the Republican National Committee and high-level employees of the—if you'll pardon the expression—government. They got to sit smack in front of the president. Blue tickets allowed lesser government employees to sit farther back from Himself. White tickets, handed out on the streets, put plain people, to whose salvation the rally was dedicated, at the rear.

Behind the president, stewing like prunes in their juices, were congresspersons and senators, some of whom sincerely support the amendment for which they were rallying. Legislators who did not feel ill-used obviously were properly used as applauding props.

Washington's air this season is thick with humidity and hoaxes, such as nuclear "freezes" that won't freeze anything, and "flat rate" tax programs without flat rates. So what is one more hoax among friends? This hoax—this trivialization of the Constitution—is, simultaneously, a confession of political incompetence and an assertion of intellectual mastery—mastery not noticeable in the results of recent economic policies.

At precisely the moment when economists are especially bewildered by the inability of their theories to encompass events, politicians, running for cover from the electoral consequences of their activities, are proposing to constitutionalize an economic doctrine. They would graft something evanescent onto something fundamental.

Under the amendment, Congress would be required to adopt, prior to each fiscal year, a statement of receipts and outlays, the latter not to exceed the former. But such economic numbers are estimates made of warm taffy, all gooey and stretchable.

Neither clairvoyance nor candor can be counted on in Congress or the Office of Management and Budget. So who will enforce what on whom if—when—the numbers are significantly wrong? Will the president control outlays by impounding appropriated funds? Will courts superintend the appropriations process?

If the latter, will every taxpayer have standing to sue? No one can know until courts speak. And they will speak, because the amendment does not stipulate that controversies under it are not reviewable by courts. Were that stipulation made, the amendment would become a recipe for paralysis and lawlessness.

The amendment says that total receipts in any fiscal year may not be set to increase at a rate faster than the rate of increase of national income in the previous calendar year. The implication of this is that whatever else the government has recently got wrong, the current ratio of federal spending to national income is just about right.

But, then, the amendment would allow Congress to change this ratio by a simple majority vote. And by a three-fifths vote, Congress could authorize a deficit—which is what Congress has been doing for generations. So, to enable current incumbents to strike a pose, some incumbents want to clutter the Constitution with an amendment that might be, in practice, 98 percent loophole. It would be that, unless the political culture and congressional mores changed substantially, in which case the amendment would be beside the point.

The amendment is long, but should be longer. It depends on Congress' making precise projections, so it should contain 1,000 more clauses, four of which are:

Floods, hurricanes and other acts of God that wish to occur during the next fiscal year must register with OMB six months before the fiscal year begins, so Congress can know that relief-spending shall occur.

Agricutural commodities covered by price supports must inform the Agriculture Department if they are planning to materialize in inconvenient quantities in the next fiscal year.

Anyone planning to need unemployment compensation in the coming fiscal year must notify the Labor Department.

Before causing crises, tiresome foreigners must notify the U.S. Defense Department of any effects their crises will have on U.S. defense spending.

And . . . oh, yes; I love lobster, and own elm trees. Could Congress please require lobsters to grow on elm trees?

Sorry; I digress. It must be the heat.

[From the Washington Post, July 27, 1982]

SO YOU WANT A BALANCED BUDGET . . .

There is so much impassioned support for the balanced budget amendment—fiery rhetoric in Congress, a presidentially led rally on the Capitol steps—that you have to assume both the president and Congress really wish that such a constitutional mandate were already in force. (Surely they wouldn't wish something on their successors that they're not willing to live with themselves?) The question, then, is this: what would happen if Congress were to pass the amendment, and 38 state legislatures, eager to support this noble cause, rushed into special session and ratified it?

Well, look out. Closing the deficit would require cutting spending—or raising revenue—by at least $260 billion over the next three years, and possibly much more. This would be in addition to the $380 billion in deficit reduction measures that Congress is already painfully trying to enact just to get the deficit headed downward. Let's look at some of the choices Congress would have to make.

The easiest part of the budget to cut is usually the so-called "discretionary" domestic programs. These are mostly grants-in-aid to states for things such as pollution control, education, health and urban development. But these programs recently took huge cuts and are slated for $35 billion in further reductions over the next three years. In any case, the proposed constitutional amendment prohibits placing new fiscal burdens on states, so it's not clear that it would allow even the cuts in these programs that are already planned.

Another way to save the needed money is called "going after the entitlements." These are programs that more or less assure certain people, such as the poor or aged, of certain benefits. The trouble is that the programs that most people wouldn't mind cutting—welfare and food stamps—are small items in the budget, and they are already due for very big cuts.

That still leaves the big pension programs—Social Security, Medicare and military and civil service pensions. But Congress already plans politically risky curbs on all of these except Social Security. Even if Congress were to work up the courage to cut Social Security benefits, you'd have to cut benefits almost in half to get the needed savings. Not only is this out of the question, but, since Social Security is funded by an earmarked payroll tax, the funds shouldn't be used to cover other programs anyway.

That leaves defense. Even with the cutbacks voted in the budget resolution, it's worth noting that planned increases in defense spending will absorb all of the growth in general revenues over the next few years—and then some. This is why the deficit is so big even with cuts in other programs. But Congress has been busy in recent weeks voting for every big-ticket item the Pentagon wants so that there is little reason to expect it would be willing or able to make hard choices in this area.

As for raising taxes, Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole has found little enthusiasm—and only a bare margin of Republican support—even for going after tax cheats.

This is why there is a day-dreamish quality about the current enthusiasm for a balanced budget amendment—a childish wish by Congress that if it were just forced by some outside power to do "what's right," all the real and urgent difficulties would fade away. That's not only foolish; it also distracts attention from the practical efforts being made by congressional leaders to get the deficit under control—efforts that are far more deserving of administration and congressional support than the pious and fatuous hopes embodied in the balanced budget amendment.

TELL IT TO THE JUDGE

A number of sound arguments have been raised against the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget besides the fact that no one (see above) has a clue how to achieve this noble goal. The amendment does not permit the flexibility government needs to adjust to different economic conditions. It tends to discourage honest budgeting and gives Congress and the administration an incentive to phony-up the numbers, so they can say there is no deficit when in fact there is. And there is the irony that this amendment is proposed by a president who has been unable to present a budget that is balanced for this year—or for any year in the foreseeable future.

But for those who find these arguments unpersuasive, let us advance another, in the hope that it might lead them to show the caution that is appropriate when alterations in the Constitution are proposed. It is this: the constitutional amendment purporting to require a balanced budget would be an open invitation to the courts to intervene in the budgetary process—a process that even the most activist courts heretofore have left pretty much alone.

To understand why the courts would intervene, consider some of the language in the amendment, and ask whether or not reasonable people might interpret it differently:

"Prior to each fiscal year, Congress is required to adopt a statement . . . in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts." Economists and budget analysts will always disagree on what should be counted as "outlays" and "receipts"; remember the fuss last year when David Stockman proposed that certain "off-budget" items should be included in the budget? If the amendment is ratified, such disputes might end up in court.

"The Congress and the president shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement." Who is supposed to enforce this? The local sheriff? There is undoubtedly a federal judge somewhere willing to try.

"Total receipts . . . shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income." National income is an even more elusive concept than government outlays or receipts. It is determined by statistical methods, about whose validity reasonable people can and do differ. Perhaps taxpayers who feel that the government's receipts and their own taxes have increased more rapidly than this clause allows would have standing to sue. Could a court then order taxes lowered? Which taxes? By how much?

"The Congress may not require that the states engage in additional activities without compensation equal to the additional costs." Anyone familiar with the assiduousness with which states lobby for greater federal aid and sue when they have the slightest hope of getting more will recognize that this clause will be the subject of hundreds of lawsuits. States will argue again and again that their "compensation" is not equal to "additional costs" or that activities are "additional." The courts will decide whether they are right.

We find it odd that so many conservatives who have inveighed against judicial activism are supporting a constitutional provision that would spawn so much litigation over undeniably political issues—how the government raises and spends money. We wonder if they have reflected on the fact that most of the sitting federal judges were appointed by President Carter, and that there are among their number many whom conservatives would consider dangerous judicial activists. It is possible to imagine misguided lower court decisions that, though ultimately overturned, could in the meantime change congressionally established policy on taxes, defense and domestic spending. Is this what the president and others who rejoiced at the results of the 1980 election want?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I particularly call the attention of the distinguished Members of this body to the second part of the editorial, entitled "Tell It to the Judge."

Mr. President, there will be no way for our high courts to avoid interpretating the extraordinarily disputed, ambiguous and necessarily difficult terms of this amendment.

I hope we will show prudence. I hope we will recognize that the Congress must produce a balanced budget out of its own internal determination of the national need, and that only political will can bring it about. We cannot conjure it up through language. In the process of trying to do so, we will not only confuse and debase the Constitution, we also will further embroil the courts of our Nation with the executive and legislative branches. And in ways that threaten not just chaos—and "chaos" is the term chosen by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico—but stalemate as well, which is as dangerous.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, has noted, the amendment that he is now offering has been developed in conjunction with the floor managers of the proposed constitutional amendment. I will dwell at greater length with the substance of this amendment momentarily, but I would like to express my admiration to the principal proponents of this amendment, the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida, Senator CHILES, for their efforts in its behalf. Although there has been some disagreement on whether or not the matters addressed in this amendment were already adequately addressed in Senate Joint Resolution 58, there has been absolutely no disagreement on the policies reflected by the amendment. Because the amendment deals with matters of paramount importance—impoundment, implementation—the managers of Senate Joint Resolution 58 have concluded that it is important to clarify these as well as possible. I believe that the immediate amendment achieves that clarification, and I rise in support of it.

I do, however, have one serious reservation about the structure of the proposed amendment, as opposed to its substance. The amendment would not only effect changes in the body of the proposed constitutional amendment, but it purports to add a separate resolution to the body of the pending joint resolution. I believe that there may be both parliamentary, and even constitutional, difficulties with doing this.

Under article I, section 7 of the Constitution, all legislation—including all joint resolutions—must go to the President for his signature. There is one important exception to this rule—joint resolutions which propose amendments to the Constitution. Under article V of the Constitution, such joint resolutions do not go to the President, but go directly to the States for ratification. See Hollingsworth against Virginia, 3 U.S. 378 (1798). What is being proposed here is that something other than a constitutional amendment proposal be placed in a joint resolution not going to the President. I am not sure that this is appropriate.

In effect, the proposed floor amendment would combine a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment with what is either a regular joint resolution or else a simple concurrent resolution. In either event, I believe that this is an impermissible marriage. Not only would we be combining a resolution requiring a two-thirds vote with one simply requiring a majority vote, but we would be combining a resolution that goes directly to the States under article V, with one that goes directly to the President.

I would emphasize to the Senator from New Mexico that there is no disagreement on my part with the substance of the resolution. The resolution would clarify some of the matters with which Congress must eventually deal in the form of implementation legislation if the balanced budget amendment becomes part of the Constitution. There is no disagreement that the resolution lists some of the matters that will have to be part of that resolution. Although I would recommend that we divide the proposed floor amendment, I want it to be clear that the only reason that this would be done would be because of parliamentary problems, not because of disagreement with the substance of the resolution. I would respectfully suggest this course of action to the distinguished chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to modify my amendment in a way that has nothing to do with his amendment. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from California would have an objection. I was on my feet and did not address the Chair quickly enough.

Mr. CRANSTON. I am glad to agree to a unanimous consent to set mine aside momentarily so we could do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico still has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair. I am sorry to have bothered the distinguished Senator from California.

Mr. President, Senator HATCH has raised an important concern. As I understand it, he agrees that implementing legislation will be essential, and that the subject areas mentioned in the sense of the Congress section of the Domenici-Chiles amendment must all be dealt with in the implementing statute.

What the distinguished Senator from Utah is concerned about is whether this type of sense of the Congress language is properly included in a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment.

I certainly do not want to place any clouds over Senate Joint Resolution 58 in regard to its standing under the Constitution. My intent in proposing to include the sense of the Congress language was to establish the strongest possible legislative history on congressional intent about the need for and content of a comprehensive implementing statute. I believe we can accomplish the same objective by modifying the amendment to delete the sense of the Congress language and at the same time making it clear that the substance of what was in that portion of the Domenici-Chiles amendment is indeed the expectation and intent of the Senate with respect to implementing the legislation.

AMENDMENT NO. 1986, AS MODIFIED

If the manager of the resolution would agree that to be the understanding, I would modify my amendment and send a modification to the desk.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I want to thank the Senator for interrupting me for such a very fine and noble purpose. I think that improves his amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 1986) as modified, is as follows:

On page 3, line 21, after the word "shall" insert the following: ", pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles,".

On page 4, line 2, strike "last calendar year ending" and insert in lieu thereof "year or years ending not less than six months nor more than twelve months".

On page 4, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

"SECTION 5. The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation." and renumber the remaining section.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico a few questions with respect to the proper interpretation of proposed amendments.

First, would the Senator agree that Congress would be under an obligation to establish an appropriate based period under section 2 and maintain that base period? Congress could not appropriately establish a variable base period or periodically change the base period in order to artificially maximize levels of growth? It would have to be consistent, would it not?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct. The purpose of my changes to section 2 is to allow the Congress flexibility in establishing a base period. This flexibility should not be construed to mean that Congress can shift the base period in order to avoid the restrictions of section 2. Such an effort to move the base period in order to artificially maximize allowable receipt growth would clearly be contrary to the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Second, would my friend from New Mexico agree that the concept of "rate" as used in section 2 continues to refer to the average, annual rate of economic growth?

Mr. DOMENICI. I agree with the Senator that the definition of the term "rate" in section 2 is not changed by my amendment. Even if the Congress chose to use a multiyear base period, the growth rate would have to be annualized.

Mr. HATCH. Third, would my friend from New Mexico agree that the base period in section 2 would have to consist of a relatively recent period of years? In other words, while we limit the expiration date of the period, we are silent on the outset date. Would the Senator agree that the period cannot consist of an unreasonably lengthy period of years?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct. It is important that the base period be a reasonably recent period of years. The purpose of my change to section 2 is to allow the base period to be a number of years if Congress decides that is appropriate. I would suggest that 3 or 5 years should be sufficient. I do not believe a base period longer than several years will be necessary.

Mr. HATCH. Finally, would the distinguished Senator from New Mexico agree that nothing that we are attempting to do in these amendments, either considered separately or together, is to affect the basic separation-of-powers equilibrium between the legislative and the executive branches? Each would continue to be possessed of their current constitutional powers, no more and no less. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator has stated my feelings exactly. The entire purpose of my amendment to section 1 was to make crystal clear that nothing in this amendment alters the separation of powers between the Congress and the President. In particular, in relation to the issue of impoundments, I do not believe this amendent creates any unilateral power for the President to impound.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, since the outset of this present amendment effort more than 4 years ago, we have tried to maintain this as a genuine consensus effort. We have gone through a long and difficult process in which we have tried to develop a proposed amendment that would have as broad support as possible among Members of Congress.

I believe that we have largely done this with Senate Joint Resolution 58. In an effort, however, to accommodate some recent concerns that have been raised by several Members of Congress, the managers of this bill have worked closely with Senator DOMENICI and Senator CHILES to fine tune some of the present language of the proposed amendment. The Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON) has also played an important role. The language that is proposed by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) is the product of these discussions and, as such, I recommend that the full Senate adopt these changes.

As a participant in the effort to develop these amendments and further promote the amendment consensus, I would briefly like to explain my own understanding of these amendments. I believe that these views are shared by the distinguished Senators from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), and South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND). I hope that this discussion will supplement the legislative history of the amendment established by the committee report.

The proposed amendment to section 1 would clarify that the authority of Congress and the President to conform actual and planned levels of outlays is one derived from "legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles" of the Constitution.

This amendment arises in response to the concern that the proposed amendment might inadvertently extend impoundment power to the Executive. Although I believe that the committee report is clear in its rejections of such power, I am nevertheless sensitive to the fact that there are a number of Senators who have been concerned about this issue. The purpose of this first amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 58 is to absolutely clarify this point by making explicit that the source of any Executive power to enforce levels of outlays under this amendment will be derived from one of two sources—either throught legislation duly enacted by Congress, or through the exercise of authority under article II of the Constitution relating to Executive power. If there is no impoundment authority under article II—and I do not believe that there is—then the proposed amendment would clearly not invest the President with any such new authority.

I would emphasize then that the over-riding purpose of this first amendment is to clarify that no new substantive powers are granted to the Executive by the language of Senate Joint Resolution 58, but simply that the President is invested with new constitutional obligations in pursuit of which he is to exercise his article II authority. The drafters of Senate Joint Resolution 58, as well as the drafters of the proposed amendments, totally and absolutely reject any suggestion that the proposed amendment is designed to invest impoundment authority in the President of the United States.

At the same time, however, that we intend to make clear that Senate Joint Resolution 58 is not intended to affect the existing allocation of constitutional powers between the executive and legislative branches in favor of the executive, we also intend to make clear that we are not denying to the executive any authorities of which it may be possessed stemming from the second article of the Constitution.

While some may see the inclusion of the concept of "by legislation" as being redundant with the concept of article I authority, I believe that this language can be explained in the sense that there are various authorities derived explicitly or implicitly from article I that may arguably be outside the scope of a narrow definition of the concept of "legislation." These might include the authority of Congress to override a Presidential veto, congressional oversight and investigative authority, possible legislative veto authority—if that is determined to be constitutional—and so forth.

The amendment to section 2 would alter the definition of the base period established to determine the rate of national economic growth. This rate of growth is important in the formula by which we determine the presumptive level of budget for the forthcoming fiscal year. The proposed amendment would strike the reference to "the last calendar year ending" before the fiscal year in question, and substitute language that would allow some measure of congressional flexibility in establishing the proper base period. Congress would not be precluded from establishing a 2-year or 3-year or other period in determining the proper national economic growth rate.

At the same time, the proposed amendment would insure that nothing in Senate Joint Resolution 58 precludes Congress from adopting a calendar-year fiscal year. If they did so, Congress would not be required to use economic growth data—probably not even available at the outset of the calendar year—from the immediately preceding calendar year. Under Senate Joint Resolution 58, they would not be precluded from using data from the second preceding calendar year or any other year ending not less than 6 months and not more than 12 months prior to the fiscal year in question.

While I would personally prefer to maintain the present language of the amendment, again I understand and appreciate the concerns of my colleagues. I believe that the amendment to section 2 would retain what is most important about that section—the development of a known and certain figure of economic growth that can be used to determine permissible tax and spending levels for the forthcoming fiscal year. It is important in my view to retain a specific, historic base period, rather than having to involve Congress in the difficult and uncertain process of estimations.

Let me make a few general observations that I believe are implicit in the proposed amendment: First, it is clear that Congress must rely on a recent base period in measuring economic growth. The period cannot have ended more than 12 months before the fiscal year being planned and, although it is not explicitly stated, it is consistent with the purposes of the amendment that the base period not be an unreasonably long one. The specific period is to be fashioned by Congress in legislation structured so as to minimize any procyclical impact of the amendment.

Second, while this change in language accords Congress slightly more flexibility in planning levels of spending and receipts, it is not its intention to encourage evasion or inconsistency on the part of Congress. Under the amended section 2, Congress will have the duty to set forth a clear and consistent rule for measuring national income growth and setting receipt levels. It would not, in my view, be appropriate for Congress to use, for example, a 1-year base period for measuring economic growth one year and a 3-year base period for measuring it the next year. Congress must choose an appropriate base period as a regular part of its procedures for adopting the statement called for by section 1 and adhere to that base period in subsequent years. Clearly, any mechanism by which Congress sought to manipulate the measurement of economic growth through a shifting base period or similar device would be directly contrary to the principle of accountability that lies at the heart of Senate Joint Resolution 58. Such manipulation would not be in compliance with this constitutional mandate. It is the simple and direct obligation of Congress to choose a base period that accurately reflects levels of national economic growth, and to conform its budget procedures under this amendment accordingly, on a regular and consistent basis.

Third, I would emphasize that the use of the term "rate" in section 2 is not affected by this amendment and that it continues to mean an average, annual rate of increase. It would continue to mean this whatever the specific length of the base period chosen by Congress.

The final amendment, proposing a new section 5, would add a new provision establishing an obligation in Congress to "implement and enforce" the provisions of the amendment. This obligation was not expressly established by the committee because it was felt to be implicit in the specific obligations set forth in section 1. Specific responsibilities being imposed upon Congress in that provision, I believe that it is clear that Congress would be obligated to exercise its authority under the "necessary and proper" clause of article I, section 8 to carry out those responsibilities. I do not believe, however, that the proposed amendment creating a new section 5 is harmful and believe, indeed, that it represents a positive addition if it serves to clarify the important obligations imposed by this amendment upon Congress.

I would only emphasize that the proposed addition does not add anything to the substantive powers possessed by Congress but only clarifies that Congress is expected to exercise those powers in pursuit of its new obligations under this amendment. The language change neither adds to the sum of congressional authority nor detracts from the sum of executive authority. It simply makes unambiguously clear that there is a need for implementation and enforcement legislation by Congress if the constitutional objectives of the proposed balanced budget amendment are to be fully achieved. Congress is expected to act in good faith in constructing such essential legislation.

Mr. President, while I emphasize once more my view that the present language of Senate Joint Resolution 58 already addresses the concerns raised by the amendment to section 1 and the amendment creating a new section 5, I do recognize that these amendments may serve to clarify matters for a number of my colleagues without undermining the objectives of the proposed constitutional amendment. The amendment to section 2 adds an additional measure of flexibility to the development of the base period for determining national economic growth, and is also consistent with the overall objectives of the proposed amendment. I would therefore recommend to my colleagues that the instant amendments be adopted, and again wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida for their efforts in working with the committee developing these amendments.

Mr. President, I would just like to praise again the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the distinguished Senator from Florida, for their efforts in this area. I believe that they have done the proposed constitutional amendment effort a genuine service. The distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON) also deserves high praise for his efforts in this area although we recognize he still has other concerns about the amendment and will raise those later. I appreciate the work that these three Senators and others who have worked with them have done.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be one of the original cosponsors of this amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 58. The amendment that Senator DOMENICI is proposing is a responsible and sensible approach to several problems that we have identified with regard to the resolution. I urge my colleagues to lend their support to these amendments which are so important to drawing up a strong constitutional amendment.

Our amendment would make three changes in Senate Joint Resolution 58.

First, our amendment would make it clear that we do not intend to make any changes in the existing separation of powers. We add language to section 1 specifying that in insuring that spending stays within the bounds set by Congress, the President will have no new unintended powers. The present language could easily imply that the President had been given new authority to impound funds. Present law specifically prohibits impoundment of congressionally appropriated funds. The Founding Fathers gave Congress the chief authority over spending—the "power of the purse strings"—for good reason. They wanted to avoid the abuses that had occurred in their experiences with an all-powerful monarch.

Since the beginning of the Republic, Congress has had the chief responsibilty for taxing and spending. It is explicit in the Constitution. The President has the authority to implement and administer the laws passed by Congress. We do not want to upset that constitutional cornerstone and our amendment will preserve the Founding Fathers' intent.

Under our amendment, it is made clear that the President's authority over spending would increase only if Congress granted such authority through legislation. Although impoundment is now illegal, except for the deferral and rescission procedures under the Budget and Impoundment Control Act, Congress may someday wish to change the law on this. Our amendment simply states that Congress pass a law to accomplish this goal. It should not be obtained through inference.

Our second amendment allows Congress more flexibility to select the terms of the Federal fiscal year. Senator Domenici has pointed out that the present language could preclude Congress from making the fiscal year coincident with the calendar year. Our fiscal year now begins on October 1, but we should not prevent future Congresses from changes in this. It was only 8 years ago that we changed the fiscal year from beginning in July to the October date. It may be desirable to change it again.

Our third amendment addressed one of my greatest concerns pertaining to Senate Joint Resolution 58, namely Federal loan guarantees. Under the present language, loan guarantees would not be covered. In fact, this is one of the great loopholes in the present proposal. Dr. Milton Friedman agreed with me that this loophole existed when we discussed Senate Joint Resolution 58 recently in my office.

Sponsors of the resolution acknowledge this, too, in their committee report. On page 77 of the Judiciary Committee report, the committee poses the question: "Can Congress avoid the restraints of Senate Joint Resolution 58 by guaranteeing loans?" The committee answers this important question in this way: "Temporarily.

Since loan guarantees do not represent outlays in the year in which the loans are guaranteed, the proposed amendment does not preclude the Congress from authorizing such agreements. However, to the extent that a guaranteed loan is defaulted by the borrower, the outlays will come under the terms of the amendment in the year of the default."

Now the Office of Management and Budget tells me that out of $309 billion in net outstanding loan guarantees, about $2.5 billion is defaulted. That is a lot of money, but on a basis of over $300 billion, that is not a high level of spending. If Congress were to shift another $300 billion into the loan guarantee category, and we were to still realize defaults in the $2 to $3 billion range, Congress could easily continue its spending through the lending route. Instead of runaway spending, we would be confronted with runaway lending.

Some may charge that this would never happen. Yet the record proves otherwise. In 1974, Congress passed the Budget Reform Act, giving Congress the budget process that has given us a semblance of order in congressional budgeting. Exempted from that law, however, are Federal loan guarantees.

What has happened to loan guarantees in the intervening years?

They have ballooned, growing from about $10 billion issued in fiscal year 1974 to over $44 billion issued this year. When the loan guarantee activities of the Government sponsored enterprises is factored in, the loan guarantee growth is even more dramatic. Government-sponsored enterprise loan guarantee activity has grown from about $11 billion in fiscal year 1974 to over $50 billion this year.

So we should not delude ourselves that further growth might not occur if we do not plug this loophole.

The amendment we are offering addresses this in the new section 5 that directs Congress to enforce and implement the resolution "by appropriate legislation." As Senator DOMENICI has made clear here earlier, this would include congressional definitions of accounting terms.

My own legislation—S. 265, the Federal Lending Program Control Act—would give us a tool to limit loan guarantees. Congress may want to devise others. The distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON) has held extensive hearings in the Budget Committee this year on control of Federal lending. I know he supports the control of lending programs, too.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my June 22, 1982, testimony before the Budget Committee on S. 265 be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the President's own private sector survey supports an improvement in accounting practices to include loan guarantees.

I recommend that my colleagues strongly support the Domenici amendment and close this loophole that could lead to high interest rates well into the future.

EXHIBIT 1

STATEMENT OF SENATOR CHARLES H. PERCY

Mr. Chairman, it is once again a pleasure to appear before the Budget Committee's credit task force. I say "again" because it was July 1, 1980—almost two years ago—that I spoke with your predecessor task force to discuss the growing use of Federal credit programs.

That task force—and Senator Boschwitz was a strong supporter of that effort as I know he is of this one—drew up a commendable record of the impact of credit programs on the economy. The credit task force's study was a landmark set of hearings for us in the Senate, because it was the first time that the Senate's attention was focused on this emerging aspect of Federal fiscal policy.

In my talks on Federal lending around Illinois, it is clear that the taxpayers are aware of this problem and that they view it as an important part of the Federal government's ability to cope with runaway spending. Taxpayers believe strongly that the Federal budget is the root cause of today's high interest rates. That association of high interest rates with the deficit is very strong on Main Street as well as on Wall Street. Economists tell us over and over again that if the deficit is brought down significantly, we will see less Federal borrowing and therefore less pressure on interest rates. In fact, that is the very reason the Senate—and especially the members of the Budget Committee—have been working so diligently this spring to curb the growth of spending. We want to reduce those pressures on credit markets and bring about a steady drop in interest rates.

One of the clearest statements on the relationship between high interest rates and borrowing was made last year by economists at Continental Illinois National Bank in Chicago. Continental's economists pointed out that "a great deal of market concern centers on the impact of Treasury borrowing needs in the new year and over the next several years to finance projections of sharply higher budget deficits. The fear is that these huge financing requirements will lead to renewed pressure on interest rates and, in effect, serve to 'crowd out' private borrowers. While most attention has focused on Federal borrowing to finance budget deficits, the expanded use of off-budget financing and Federally-sponsored and guaranteed loans also has had a major influence in the marketplace in recent years."

Irwin Kellner, economist for Manufacturers Hanover Trust in New York, was even more blunt. He has said that "the reported deficit is but the tip of the Federal financing iceberg . . ." and that "the economy is reeling because the credit markets have slammed into this iceberg." Kellner even believes that substantial progress against the deficit will leave the financial markets skeptical unless the invisible off-budget borrowing is curbed, too.

Mr. Chairman, these statements should cause great concern in Congress. The financial markets that determine the market price of money—in other words, interest rates—are well informed about Federal lending programs. The simple but painful truth is that Congress—which created these programs in the first place—knows very little about them. We cannot continue to pretend that Congressional ignorance of lending programs is shared throughout the economy. The private sector watches these programs very carefully. Moreover, it acts on Federal lending patterns as much as it does on other Federal financial developments.

In the two years since I last testified on behalf of this legislation, Federal borrowing from the public has continued to soar. In 1980, the Federal government borrowed $71 billion from the public. This year, borrowing needs are estimated to run at about $115 billion. Add on top of that the borrowing for guaranteed loans and you add another $44 billion this year, up from $32 billion just two years ago. But we are still not finished, Mr. Chairman, for there are the so-called government-sponsored enterprises which will borrow to the tune of $47 billion this year, double the 1980 borrowing of $22 billion.

That adds up to $206 billion in total Federal and Federally-assisted borrowing this year: twice this year's projected budget deficit for spending programs. If $100 billion deficits alarm the financial markets, imagine the response to $200 billion worth of financings. That is a financial iceberg, to use Dr. Kellner's phrase.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most recent statements by the Office of Management and Budget on Federal borrowing needs was made by OMB economist Lawrence Kudlow on June 3 before the House Banking Committee. Although Mr. Kudlow was testifying on specific housing legislation, a number of his comments are relevant to your hearings today. I commend his remarks to this task force and think you will find particularly interesting the data he includes with his remarks which detail the growth in borrowing by the Federal government and federally sponsored enterprises.

The one startling disclosure in Mr. Kudlow's remarks is that the Federal participation in credit markets—the level at which Federal deficits and lending programs together will sop up private credit—will hit an historic high of 56% in 1982. To put this figure into perspective, even following the severe recession of 1975, the Federal participation rate hit only 40%. I know there has been discussion about this crowding out. Let me bring to the task force's attention a copy of a St. Louis Globe-Democrat article entitled "Federal Borrowing Hike May Dry Up Credit Wells" that reports on this unprecedented level of borrowing.

These statistics are of more than an academic interest to us of course. Ballooning Federal lending is leading to higher interest costs, as the Congressional Research Service pointed out in a report this spring. CRS states, "the reallocation of credit resulting from Federal credit programs imposes substantial credit access costs and higher interest costs on unassisted potential borrowers. Furthermore, higher interest costs on U.S. Government securities occur since Federal credit programs raise the total demand for loanable funds and thus interest rates."

Dr. Alice Rivlin of the Congressional Budget Office made a similar point in a letter to me last fall, which I would like to include in my remarks here today. Dr. Rivlin stated that "if the Congress were to begin explicitly controlling the levels of new Federal credit, under procedures such as those in your bill, and began reducing total government credit demand, there is every indication that the financial markets would respond positively and that interest rates would begin to decline."

Mr. Chairman, I ask that you include Dr. Rivlin's entire letter in your hearing record.

The level of interest rates, then, is my chief concern today and is the primary reason that Congress should act swiftly on this legislation. Your task force hearings are an important part of that process and I hope that the Governmental Affairs Committee—which shares jurisdiction over this legislation—will take a close look at it, too, this year.

With almost any program that grows quickly, there will be problems. Certainly the size of federal lending is one of those, but there are others. I believe passage of lending control legislation should incorporate provisions dealing with these concerns.

Foremost, I would say that Congress must begin to educate itself on Federal lending, Federal borrowing and the impact on the economy. Our banking committees have for many years had quarterly hearings on monetary policy. These sessions provide the committees with an opportunity for an exchange of ideas with the Federal Reserve and also provide a means for Congress to register its views on the conduct of monetary policy. Similar hearings should be held—at least annually—on lending programs and borrowing, investigating the impact future lending levels may have on private borrowing needs. Then if it seems that adjustments should be made in Federal programs, we would have an opportunity to do so.

Secondly, Congress needs to more carefully assess the interest subsidies that are involved in each of these lending programs. At my request, the Library of Congress reviewed Federal lending programs and found that only a few loan guarantee programs have statutory fixed interest rates. In fact, only 17 out of 153 loan guarantee programs have specific interest rates.

In the case of those programs where there is a fixed interest rate, it is sometimes so low—by today's standards—that it amounts, in reality, to an interest-free loan. For example, the Library of Congress found that community facilities loans carry an interest rate of 5 percent, with the Federal subsidy rising with the cost of government borrowing. It is not the only one. There are others just like it. Imagine subsidizing down to 5 percent from the current high rates of 14-15 percent. Congress may want to continue many of these subsidies. My point here is that we do not even know if we want to because we do not have a clear, organized way to review the programs subsidies.

Mr. Chairman, your task force will also be interested in this report by the Library of Congress and I ask that you incorporate it in your hearing record.

A third important area that legislation should address is in the area of loan program eligibility. Who are we giving Federal assistance to and do they need it now in the same amounts as when the program was first passed? An excellent case of how Federal lending is handled occurred several years ago when the Economic Development Administration gave a steel company a loan guarantee to upgrade its rail mill. We all know the steel industry needs to modernize its facilities, but this particular loan guarantee caused a stir within the steel community because other companies had completed similar investments without Federal guarantees. Several companies were already meeting market demand and it was argued that this EDA-financed mill built in excess capacity. Donald Trautlein, Chairman of Bethlehem Steel, wrote me about this and his company's subsequent advertisements that called for limiting Federal loans and guarantees. In the ad, Bethlehem states that "one way government makes our job harder is by interfering in the allocation of economic resources through Federal loans and guarantees . . . and at a time when investment capital is all too scarce." Here is another place for Congress to more closely police Federal policies to make sure that decisions affecting basic industries are made on an industry-wide basis and not incrementally as this one was.

The Federal Government is the world's largest credit institution. It is now owed $239 billion. The stability of any lending institution depends on careful credit extension, as well as effective debt collection—unfortunately, Uncle Sam has done a poor job in both of these tasks.

On the debt collection side, the Government has failed miserably. Total delinquencies on Uncle Sam's books are now estimated to be $46 billion—more than half of which is more than six months past due. This amounts to a staggering $500 for each of the 90 million taxpayers in this country. While about $20 billion is for delinquent taxes, most of the rest is delinquent loans. The agencies with the highest delinquencies are Agriculture with $4 billion, Education with $3 billion, and Small Business with $2.6 billion.

The reasons behind these losses are threefold: the Government has often taken unnecessarily high risks in lending, it has placed primary emphasis on getting the money out the door with little effort given to collection, and Uncle Sam's hands have been tied in its attempts to use effective collection tools. Legislation I am sponsoring, S. 1249—the Debt Collection Act—will provide the agencies with several collection tools, such as credit bureau reporting, which will finally put some teeth into federal debt collection. The bill has passed the House, and I expect Senate action very soon. The need for this bill only highlights the need to have a more comprehensive review of Federal lending practices.

Another area I would like to mention is impoundment authority. As you know, the Budget Reform Act of 1974 is silent on loans and loan guarantees and there is no control over the executive's ability to impound lending programs. Experts I have spoken with on impoundment of loan programs are divided over whether the Administration could actually take such action. We do know, however, that Congress does not have the tools—deferral and rescission—that are available to us in cases of spending impoundment. We need to undertake a careful review of this and consider how a law might be structured to cover possibilities of lending impoundment.

I fully appreciate the differences that exist between the many types of loan and loan guarantee programs. Most of the programs we have on the books are for domestic purposes, but the housing loan programs have played an increasingly important role in housing markets in recent years. We do not want to undermine those programs, but I hope the housing finance industry will work with us on developing legislation that will provide for an informed Congress on lending programs. It is not in the interest of the housing finance industry to see lending impoundment develop as a tool of Federal finance. Establishment of a Congressional credit budget process would give the housing finance an excellent opportunity to work with Congress to build a strong housing finance system that was fully backed by the Congress.

The Export-Import Bank also offers a special case of loan programs. It is one of the few credit programs that is matched—in fact exceeded—by similar programs abroad. Japan, France, West Germany and Great Britain—all have much more generous export financing that puts our exporters at a competitive disadvantage in marketing our products and services. Our government has sought for many years to negotiate an international agreement for the multilateral reduction of export credits. This effort has met with little success. That would be the preferred way to reduce this spiral of export financing competition, but it has not resulted in significant reductions. We will not reduce these credits by unilaterally reducing our own Export-Import Bank financing capability. Export financing credits must be dealt with in the larger international framework.

Mr. Chairman, I believe nearly all the concerns I have enumerated can be addressed in comprehensive lending reform legislation. My own legislation—S. 265—accomplishes these major goals and has garnered the support of 20 Senators from both parties. A full list of the bill's cosponsors is attached to my remarks. The bill amends the Budget Reform Act to establish procedures for setting targets and ceilings for loans and loan guarantees within the Congressional budget process. I would like to explain the key aspects of how my bill would accomplish the goal of establishing a systematic mechanism for overseeing credit programs. The bill would:

Require that the budget resolution each year set forth the appropriate level of direct loans and loan guarantees. The budget is also required to itemize estimates of loan guarantees and direct loans by budget functions.

Require credit plans to be submitted to the Budget Committee by each authorizing committee. Presently, committees must submit their spending plans to the Budget Committee by March 15; the bill would extend this to loans and loan guarantees.

Require the Banking Committees to submit to the Budget Committees by March 15 each year their estimates and recommendations for the appropriate level of overall guarantees and loans for the next fiscal year. The Banking Committees would, in effect, evaluate the credit needs of private and public borrowers.

Stipulate that bills or resolutions authorizing new loans or guarantees must be reported from their respective committees by May 15. Bills reported after that date would face a point of order on the floor, as do all spending bills under the budget process.

Require the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) to report annually to the Budget Committees on credit programs of the Federal government.

Permit a point of order to be raised, after the second budget resolution is passed, against loans or guarantees that exceeds the totals in the budget.

Stipulate that loans and guarantees must be included within appropriations bills. Points of order could be raised against loans or guarantees that do not subject themselves to the Appropriations Committees.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, let me point out that there is considerable support for this legislative approach. In the House, Representatives Mineta and Bethune have worked diligently on this issue for many years and have made a tremendous effort there, with well over 200 cosponsors. The administration has testified in support of the bill and prominent private economists such as Alan Greenspan, Henry Kaufman and Charles Walker support it and believe it will help lower interest rates. I hope this task force will support it, too, and appreciate this opportunity to appear before you today.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I see the distinguished Senator from California is on the floor and I happily yield the floor if it is his desire to speak.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from New York.

UP AMENDMENT 1160 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1986

(Purpose: To modify provisions of amendment No. 1986 making clarifying changes in the proposed balanced budget constitutional amendment)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. It is an amendment to the pending Domenici amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURENBERGER). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1160 to amendment numbered 1986.

On page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike the language proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following: "by legislation".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I can explain this very briefly. I am following the original wisdom of the Senator from New Mexico in offering an amendment that does what he thought should be done a while ago to the proposed constitutional amendment. He has subsequently been persuaded to offer a modified version that I think does not do what he seeks to do and certainly does not do what he set out to do originally.

This amendment that I have offered to the Domenici amendment would substitute his original suggestion for the compromise language that he has now offered as an attempt to limit the powers of the President to act unilaterally to impound or otherwise use his powers to stop spending for programs he does not like or for programs that he just decides he has to cut back on in order to reduce actual outlays to square with statement outlays.

These impoundment powers by the President were sought by Richard Nixon. They were rejected by the Congress. The Congress acted to preserve the balance of powers and to prevent what in effect would have been a line item veto sought by President Nixon.

Now the constitutional amendment in the form in which it has been offered would in effect give impoundment powers and give a line item veto to the President and would very dangerously tip the balance of power on budget matters and on program matters away from the Congress to the President.

The amendment that I offer is tighter than the language that is now before us as introduced by Senator DOMENICI. It would foreclose any opportunity for the President to claim extraordinary constitutional authority to impound or to stop spending on individual items and on individual programs at his pleasure. The proposed language refers to constitutional powers under article I and article II of the Constitution. By using direct limiting language "by legislation" instead of "pursuant to legislation," my amendment thus makes clear the intent that the President will not have the power to impound.

The Domenici amendment now pending has in it the following words that I would strike, "pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles," referring to the power of the President or the Congress. That language is not clear cut. It does not clearly prohibit impoundment or line item vetoes by the President.

For that reason I propose to strike and insert "by legislation" which makes very plain that only legislative action, keeping Congress in the act, can lead to the striking of programs or particular expenditures under this section of Senate Joint Resolution 58.

I hope the Senator from New Mexico would return to his original wisdom and to his original concept and accept this amendment which would make the proposal that he now has before us far more acceptable and far more meaningful and would preserve the balance of powers and the definition of powers between the executive branch and the Congress.

Mr. President, when we amend the Constitution of the United States, we are setting language into it for all future generations. Presidents in the past have grasped at any straws to justify their action. The modified amendment still leaves a straw by allowing the President to claim constitutional powers to stop spending. The President has a very heavy constitutional duty and obligation under the proposed constitutional amendment to stop excessive spending. He is going to construe his powers under article I and article II with this amendment and necessarily it will result in an enlargement of his powers. That is why I want to modify this amendment so that what we are talking about will be very clear.

The proposed constitutional amendment states in section 1, "Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts," and then a little bit later in the same section it states, "The Congress and the President shall" and the Domenici amendment proposes to add, "pursuant to legislation or to exercise of their powers under the first and second articles, ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the actual outlays set forth in such statement."

That will give the President a compulsion to find powers to limit spending and to produce a balanced budget. I fear that that will lead to efforts by the President to resort to the impoundment process. He will have new reasons to do so, new constitutional language leading him to do so.

My amendment, which would insert instead of the Domenici language the words "by legislation" will insure that the President cannot do this without the action of the legislature, the Congress. For that reason, I think Senator DOMENICI was very wise originally to propose this language and I urge that we go back to it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is pretty difficult for the Senator from New Mexico to argue against the Senator from California because I had those two very exciting words "by legislation" in my first proposal. However, I would suggest that the collective wisdom of a number of people who have worked very hard on this amendment won out, and I think they are right.

What they intended was to make the Presidential powers on impoundment and any other budgetary powers neutral. We do not add to or subtract from those constitutional powers that the office of the President has. They have convinced me that to use the language "by legislation" may indeed tip the scales slightly toward taking some powers aways that might be there. And therefore I used "pursuant to legislation" and other clarifying language. I think it is better. For those who do want this amendment to remain neutral in regards to the separation of powers—nothing from the President and nothing to the President—I think the words in the Domenici-Chiles amendment are better than the original words "by legislation" which the Senator from California now proposes.

I hope the Senate rejects his amendment and stays with the Domenici-Chiles amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, technically, the issue before us at the moment is the amendment by the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) to the Domenici-Chiles amendment. Since I, too, when I first examined the last sentence in section 1 of this amendment, felt that the appropriate modification was by legislation, the precise phrase used by the Senator from California, I wish to speak for a moment to the reasons that I have been persuaded that the longer amendment by the Senator from new Mexico is, in fact, preferable. In this case, at least, it seems to be the design of the sponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 58 itself, of the sponsors of the principal amendment with which we are dealing, and of the Senator from California to reach the same goal. That goal is to maintain an absolute neutrality in the respective powers of the Congress and the President of the United States after the passage of section 1 of this new article to the Constitution of the United States. Each of the proponents of the varying positions wishes to create a situation in which the powers of the President are neither enhanced nor diminished, that there is no greater threat of a proposed constitutional power of impoundment after the adoption of this article than there is at the present time. It is for exactly that purpose that the Senator from California has introduced his somewhat shorter amendment.

I have been persuaded in the course of the last 2 weeks during which this constitutional amendment has been debated that there is as much danger that the two words "by legislation" might be construed as limiting some authority which the President possesses at the present time as I was that the original last sentence of section 1 rather clearly left the implication of the creation of a constitutional power of impoundment. For that reason, it seems to me that the somewhat longer phrase included in the amendment proposed by Senator DOMENICI, Senator CHILES, and others is preferable in this regard.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GORTON. The Senator will.

Mr. CRANSTON. I appreciate the concern of the Senator from Washington. I know that he has devoted a great deal of time and thought to this proposal of the constitutional amendment and is concerned about many aspects of it. I would like to ask what powers the President possesses that the Senator feels would be limited by the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. GORTON. That question, I say to the Senator from California, I expect would be far better directed to the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH) or to the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), because it was they who brought up that question. At this point, if the Senator from Utah wishes to take on that question, I shall defer to him to answer.

Mr. CRANSTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah that question I posed to the Senator from Washington.

The Senator from Washington expressed concern that my amendment, simply by adding the words "by legislation," would limit some powers the President presently has. I wonder what powers my amendment would limit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have to get a copy of the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. My amendment simply substitutes—looking at section 1 of the Senator's amendment, the last sentence of section 1 reads that "The Congress and the President shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement." I would insert the words "by legislation" after the words "President shall" in lieu of the longer language proposed by the Senator from New Mexico. This was his original amendment, but he was persuaded by the Senator from Utah and others, I gather, to propose the longer amendment.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, if I may intervene at this moment to remind the Senator from Utah of the progress of this amendment, the proposal of the Senator from California at this point is identical to the original proposal for this section made by myself and the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CRANSTON. That is correct.

Mr. GORTON. If my memory also serves me correctly, it was the Senator from Utah and the Senator from South Carolina who were concerned that that might limit some other constitutional power of the President, and I believe that the Senator from Utah and/or his staff developed the language now included in the Domenici-Chiles amendment.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

By limiting the proposed amendment to the words "by legislation," the Senator from California would be striking legitimate authorities in the President to enforce the outlay obligations of the constitutional amendment.

For instance, he presently has veto authority; he has some budget proposal authority; he has administrative authority; he has general executive authority to "faithfully execute" laws. There may be other authorities that he has. By limiting his enforcement authority to that derived by legislation, we may be limiting the scope of this authority. I do not want to remove any article I or article II powers from Congress or the President in this regard.

The purpose of the Domenici-Chiles amendment is to insure that only existing authorities will exist in these branches after this amendment becomes a part of the Constitution, that there will be no expansion of authorities, that there will be no increased impoundment authority, or any other authority not within the scope of articles I and II.

The language of the Senator from California would dictate otherwise and, I believe, upset the intent and the thrust of the Domenici-Chiles amendment. It would upset the separation of powers balance that would otherwise exist and that presently exists.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, I am delighted to yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator has suggested that my language could interfere with the powers of the President to veto legislation. I do not see how it could possibly do that. Section 7 of article I spells out clearly that if the President approves legislation, "he shall sign it," but if not, "shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated." That is clear and explicit veto language. How could my amendment possibly be construed as interfering with that clear and explicit language in the Constitution?

Mr. HATCH. If I understand the Senator's amendment, the last sentence in section 1 would read, "The Congress and the President shall by legislation ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, that clearly does not exclude other powers the President can use and clearly cannot contravene his power to veto, which is explicit in the Constitution.

Mr. HATCH. No, it would not contravene those substantive powers per se, but it would exclude the absolute obligations of the President to, in fact, exercise those powers in behalf of the provisions of the amendment. It is, in addition, at least debatable that it would temper those existing constitutional powers in the context of this amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Congress cannot pass a law that contradicts, contravenes, or nullifies something that is in the Constitution.

Mr. HATCH. Unless it is itself derived from a constitutional amendment, which the Senator's language proposes to be, the amendment of Senator CRANSTON would nullify the President's obligation to exercise veto authority, for example, in behalf of the balanced budget, if not his authority to do so. That is the danger of the change proposed by the Senator from California. The Domenici-Chiles language is preferable because it leaves things as they are, leaves the separated powers of the National Government where they are under present articles I and II.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor. If I may, I shall take it back simply to agree, in one sense, with the Senator from Utah, I say to my friend from California, and in another, slightly to correct a statement which I made earlier in the course of this debate.

I do not believe that the language proposed by the Senator from California as clearly shifts powers away from the President in favor of the Congress as did the original language of the first sentence of section 1 of this proposed amendment provide an argument that it should have shifted powers away from the Congress and to the President in the form of the constitutional impoundment authority.

Nevertheless, I say to the Senator from California that I find some persuasive power in the argument of the Senator from Utah. I think it is possible that this language could be construed somewhat to limit the veto power of the President. It would be stretching it to do so, but I am now convinced, both by the language of the Domenici-Chiles amendment itself and by the explanation which both its sponsors and the Senator from Utah, who helped draft it, have made, that it comes closest to retaining an absolute neutrality—that is to say, no shift of powers from Congress to the President or from the President to Congress that we can possibly do.

Therefore, I do feel that language to be superior to that of the Senator from California.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORTON. I yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I echo the statement of the Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON).

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DECONCINI. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has laid it out very clearly that the Domenici-Chiles language does not enhance the Presidential authority for impoundments. I think that is crucial to be underscored here before we vote, because when we first got into this exercise last week, there was serious consideration on my part that maybe by legislation, as was originally offered, it would not be objectionable. But I think the amendment that has been worked out with the Senator from Florida and the Senator from New Mexico makes it very clear, and it has a balance.

The Supreme Court has previously ruled that the Constitution provides that no implicit impoundment authority exists for the President to exercise; and, accordingly, the reference to "exercise of their powers under the first and second articles" does not imply any impoundment authority.

I believe it would be detrimental now to remove that part of the Domenici-Chiles amendment, and putting in "by legislation" would only complicate it.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Arizona for those remarks.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORTON. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his cogent remarks.

As I see it, again, the Cranston amendment would eliminate the obligation of the President to exercise veto authority, for example, on behalf of the balanced budget. It does not, I recognize, eliminate the veto or other authority per se, but it does eliminate the Executive obligation to exercise his veto or other authority on behalf of amendment obligations.

I think the Senator from Washington has spoken very concisely and well on this subject. I compliment him for it.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Utah.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks on this subject, the issue before us at this moment is the amendment to the amendment, which second-degree amendment was proposed by the Senator from California. Because I imagine that we will go rather quickly from that amendment, should it be defeated, to the principal amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida, I should like briefly to speak in favor of the amendment by the Senator from New Mexico.

He expressed these concerns on the first day of the debate on Senate Joint Resolution 58—concerns which I shared and expressed at the same time. He has done what I feel to be a perfect job in solving the apparent problem of the original form of the proposed constitutional amendment in granting or implying constitutional impoundment authority in the President of the United States.

Also, quite appropriately, he has made somewhat more flexible the way in which Congress will set a baseline for the determination of constant budget levels, and he has insured the right of Congress to pass appropriate implementing legislation.

Each of these three separate proposals included in a single amendment, in my view, is an improvement to this proposed constitutional amendment, and I am delighted that the distinguished President pro tempore and the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Utah, have agreed to this proposal.

The only reason why I have not joined the Senator from New Mexico as a cosponsor of this proposal is that it still leaves unresolved the even graver problem of a redistribution of powers between the Congress of the United States and the judicial branch of our Government.

I feel that the threat of judicial intervention in the budget-making process is an even greater threat than the one which has been cured by the change in section 1 of this amendment. Because this amendment, standing in and of itself, is not sufficient to cause me to support Senate Joint Resolution 58, it seemed to me appropriate not to join as a sponsor of the amendment itself, though I repeat that I think it is thoughtfully crafted, highly responsible, and improves the responsibility itself.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the modifying amendment of the distinguished Senator from California is not acceptable, for two reasons:

First, it would take away from the President his existing powers to defer spending and recommend recissions.

Second, it may limit the powers of Congress to achieve a balanced budget by taking away some powers now existing under the Budget Act of 1974.

We desire that this resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 58, be neutral on these points. That is the reason why we favor the Domenici-Chiles amendment and oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from California.

Now, Mr. President, as to the amendment being offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, let me first say to the Senator from New Mexico that I understand and respect completely his concerns about Senate Joint Resolution 58. As chairman of the Senate Committee on the Budget he has been consistently in the midst of efforts to restore fiscal responsibility to our Federal Government. Each of us in the Senate owe him a debt of gratitude for his untiring pursuit of that goal.

I believe the Senator from New Mexico also supports our efforts to adopt a constitutional amendment that will require Congress to either balance the budget or go on record as to why it cannot do so by a three-fifths vote. We are in agreement on this common goal. What we are now dealing with is the means to achieve that end.

The Senator seeks to add language to Senate Joint Resolution 58 that would require the Congress to implement appropriate legislation to carry out the purposes of the amendment. I am not opposed to that language.

We are considering, Mr. President, an amendment that is to be proposed to the U.S. Constitution. Three-fourths of the States will be asked to ratify this amendment if it is approved by two-thirds of the Congress. We must pass an amendment that is clear, forthright, and unambiguous. The language intended to be offered by Senator DOMENICI, is meritorious and I have no objection to it being made a part of the proposed amendment.

As manager of this bill, I urge the adoption of the Domenici amendment, as amended.

I commend the able Senator from Washington for the pertinent remarks he has made in this matter.

Mr. President, if no one else wishes to speak on this subject, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion to table?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to table the amendment, and we will have an up-and-down vote on both amendments, back to back, if that is agreeable to the Senator from California.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if that is an agreeable arrangement—and I should like to do that—I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the up-and-down vote on the Cranston amendment, the vote occur on the Domenici amendment, up and down, without intervening debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the second vote will be the last rollcall vote of the day.

I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays at this time on the Domenici amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

VOTE ON UP AMENDMENT NO. 1160

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. PRYOR) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote or to change their vote?

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 74, as follows:

NOT VOTING—3

Cannon	Pryor	Tsongas

So, Mr. DOMENICI's amendment (No. 1986), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, there will be no more record votes tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator CHILES be added as a cosponsor to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New York is desirous of laying down an amendment tonight which is desirable so that it will be the pending business in the morning.

I am hopeful that we can get a unanimous-consent agreement on the remainder of this debate. I will inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to consider a unanimous-consent request for a time for final passage and time for the remaining amendments.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I say to the majority leader that we are working on this matter on this side of the aisle. The distinguished majority leader I know has had discussions in this regard this afternoon. I am hopeful that an agreement can be reached. At this point, I am optimistic. I will get back to the majority leader as soon as I can.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator, Mr. President. Would it be likely that that clearance process would be completed before this evening is out or would the Senator prefer——

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, Mr. President, it is my hope that we can have the clearance before this evening is out so that all Senators will be aware of the agreement.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is 6:20 now. I had not planned to ask the Senator to remain much longer. I do not mean to press, but should we estimate a time of 6:45 or thereabouts?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I am really not in a position to estimate a time, Mr. President. We are working as rapidly as we can. I shall get back to the majority leader as soon as I can.

Mr. BAKER. I am sure the Senator will. I appreciate the effort, Mr. President. The only reason I pressed for some estimate is that we have Senators who have commitments they have to keep away from the Capitol. I was trying to make some judgment about how long to ask the Senate to remain in session.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I hope to be able to get back to the majority leader no later than that, and perhaps much earlier, because I, too, would like to get away.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 1927

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I call up printed amendment numbered 1927.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) proposes an amendment numbered 1927.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 6. For the purpose of ascertaining whether receipts conform to the directions of sections 1 and 2 of this amendment, the Congress and the President shall adopt and follow the following notation:

"In accordance with standard national income accounting practices, national income (NI) shall be calculated as gross national product (GNP), less capital consumption allowances (CCA), less indirect taxes (IT):

"NI=GNP−CCA−IT.

Further:

"Given: Receipts=R(Y, Y_{-1}, P•/P, t), where inflation rate (P•/P)=P•/P(M•/M, Y, Y_{-1}).

"Allowed receipts=$[Y^p{}_{-1}(t^p)+Y^c{}_{-1}(t^c)]$•[1 +$[(Y^p-Y^p{}_{-1})+(Y^c-Y^c{}_{-1})/Y^p{}_{-1}+Y^c{}_{-1}]$]

"Where: M•/M=Rate of growth of money supply.

"Y=Income.

"Y^p=Gross income to individuals,

"Y^c=Business sector income less capital consumption allowances, and

"Y^p and Y^c are assumed to be net of indirect taxes.

"t=Tax rate.

"t^p=Personal tax rate.

"t^c=Business sector tax rate.".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would just like to take a moment to comment on the amendments proposed by Senator DOMENICI, Senator CHILES, Senator PERCY, and others. These modifications of Senate Joint Resolution 58 have been worked out over the past 2 weeks by the proponents of the amendment, including myself, in cooperation with the Senators who are sponsoring these changes. I hope these amendments will be adopted: they are largely in the nature of clarifying the intent of Senate Joint Resolution 58, and do not change its purpose or substance. They will, I hope, enable us to make a clearer record as to just what the implications of Senate Joint Resolution 58 are for future congressional action on the budget.

CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT

The first modification that would be made under the Domenici package would be to clarify the nature of the duty imposed on Congress and the President, under section 1, to ensure that actual outlays are kept within the agreed-upon level. As reported by the Judiciary Committee, Senate Joint Resolution 58 now reads "Congress and the President shall ensure" that actual outlays are kept in line. This phrasing, while it seems straightforward and clear enough, has raised a concern in the minds of some that the inference might be drawn that the President is thereby given some new power under the Constitution—such as impoundment—as a means of controlling outlays in compliance with section 1. That is clearly not the case, as the Judiciary Committee report on Senate Joint Resolution 58 makes clear, and as all of us who worked on this proposal in the Judiciary Committee have always understood it. Neverthless, since we all agree that we do not intend to grant the President new authority under the Constitution here, it seems appropriate to say so. Accordingly, the Domenici amendment revises section 1 to specify that Congress and the President "pursuant to legislation or through exercise of their powers under the first and second articles" shall control outlays. This new formulation makes clear that all we have in mind is the appropriate exercise of the powers of Congress and the President now existing under the Constitution. That should resolve any doubt whatever on the subject.

BASE PERIOD FOR RECEIPTS

Mr. President, the second provision of the Domenici amendment does make a slight change in the nature of the tax limitation requirement, but it is one that seems appropriate and that I believe will be effective. The present version of Senate Joint Resolution 58 specifies that the growth rate allowable for receipts is to be determined with reference to the last calendar year before the fiscal year being planned. It has been pointed out that this could limit Congress ability to alter the fiscal year, for example, to coincide with the calendar year, and would limit Congress options in choosing a base period to a particular calendar year. Some of us who think Congress flexibility justifiably requires some restriction would maintain that both of these results are appropriate. However, in order to accommodate those who feel more flexibility is needed, without compromising the spirit or the force of section 2, we have worked out compromise language. The reference period for determining receipts under this new version now would be the year or years ending not less than 6 months nor more than 12 months before the fiscal year being planned. This new language preserves the most important point: That Congress must look to an actual, historical, and recent period in measuring the growth of national income with a view to planning receipts levels. With this revision it is clear that Congress would have some options in choosing a longer or shorter base, if that is deemed appropriate to iron out "blips" in our economic performance. At the same time, the base period must be recent, but with a modest lag time that makes it more likely that the amendment would be countercyclical in its normal operation. I believe it would have been so anyway, but so long as we all understand and agree that we are not allowing Congress to evade the strictures of section 2 by gearing receipts levels to an unusually long historical period—for example, something more than 3 or 5 years—I believe we can live with this change.

COMPLIANCE

Mr. President, the final change that has been discussed and agreed upon in the Domenici amendment is the addition of a new section to spell out the duty of Congress to follow through once the amendment is adopted. There has been some concern that Congress would try to evade these new requirements, or that it would not legislate appropriately to put them into effect. I have shared that concern, and believe Congress will have to take tough, decisive action through legislation in order to make the amendment work properly. It has seemed to me, however, that Congress obligation was clear from the nature of the requirements in sections 1 and 2, and from the legislative history of the amendment both here and in the Judiciary Committee. To clarify matters further, however, we have agreed to add an enforcement section to the amendment. This new section just says that Congress shall enforce and implement the amendment: That is, adopt legislation to carry out and give full effect to its provisions. We all expect Congress to act in good faith if the amendment is adopted, and this new language will make that clear. The new language should not be construed to give Congress any new or extraordinary powers in the budget process: I understand the proponents of the Domenici amendment agree with that. All it says is that the provisions of the amendment are not obviously self-enforcing; that Congress has a big job ahead of it; and that Congress ought to get on with it. No one should quarrel with these propositions.

Given my understanding of the Domenici package as outlined above, I am prepared to agree that it should be adopted.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the balanced budget-tax limitation amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 58, contained a section when reported from committee that would have prevented the Federal Government from shifting the costs of Federal programs to State and local governments in order to balance the budget. This provision was removed during committee consideration of the amendment. While I was concerned that the provisions of section 4 were, in some cases, not defined as carefully and completely as possible, I do believe that every effort should be made to insure that we reach the goal of a balanced budget without burdening State and local governments with excessive new costs.

Section 4 of the resolution as originally reported read as follows:

THE CONGRESS MAY NOT REQUIRE THAT THE STATES ENGAGE IN ADDITIONAL ACTIVITIES WITHOUT COMPENSATION EQUAL TO THE COSTS

The language of the section reflects the strong concern that the balanced budget amendment may introduce stronger pressures at the Federal level to shift a portion of its fiscal responsibilities to the States and local units of government through mandates imposed upon these governments.

In fact, this concern is valid because the Federal Government has been attempting to pass new responsibilities on to States and localities for several decades. State and local governments have become major targets for Federal regulation since the early 1960's. In this period, national controls have been adopted affecting traditional State and local functions ranging from automobile inspection and animal preservation to zoning practices and water treatment. In field after field, the power to set standards and determine policies has shifted from States and localities to Washington. Many aspects of policy (including budgetary priorities) and administrative procedures (including personnel practices) are now significantly influenced by Federal regulatory "mandates." As the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations has stated, "some of the areas most heavily affected by increased intergovernmental regulatory are, by tradition, among the most local of public concerns."

Until the "constitutional revolution" of 1937, questions of Federal-State relationships were regarded as weighty legal issues. In prior years, the Supreme Court had played a substantial (if largely negative) role in striking down both Federal and State statutes deemed improper under the allocation of authority contemplated by the framers. "Dual Federalism" was basic doctrine, with the States' tenth amendment reserved powers often balanced against the enumerated powers of the Congress. As the ACIR has noted, however:

"Key decisions during the latter New Deal years declared the Tenth Amendment to be nothing more than "a truism" while the scope of national authority to regulate interstate commerce and to spend for the federal welfare was vastly exanded. Thereafter, questions about the power of Congress vis-a-vis those of the states were regarded as primarily political or policy issues, rather than grave Constitutional concerns. Consequently, the legislative branch—not the judiciary—became the new "umpire of federalism."

In the past, regulation of State and local governments was most often done through restrictions attached to grant programs. While these regulations were often overly restrictive and burdensome, they were usually related to the fulfillment of the goals of each particular grant program. In addition, compliance with these regulations could be paid for by State and local governments, at least in part, with the grant funds to which the regulations applied.

Increasingly, there has been a tendency on the part of the Federal Government to impose new forms of regulations on States and localities which are more far-reaching and expensive than the strings traditionally attached to grant programs. More and more often, the Federal Government mandates, through direct order, that States or local governments take certain actions, over 60 cross-cutting requirements currently apply to grants which have little to do with the goals of the grants themselves but cost State and local governments large amounts of money.

In some cases, the Federal Government partially preempts State or local actions by establishing Federal standards and delegating administration to the States if they adopt standards equivalent to the national ones.

In effect, the Federal Government has moved from cooperatively working with States and their local governments to treating these governments like appendages of the Federal establishment.

Based on this historical record, it is clear there is a very real possibility that the Federal Government may take the easy way out and send its budget troubles to the other levels of government. This might be called "hot potato" Federalism and I don't think it will do anything to improve government services to the citizens of our country. The goal of a balanced budget should not be carried in a bucket which leaks, drowning the other governments in the Federal system in a flood of costly requirements.

Mr. President, let's not kid ourselves about the ultimate costs of this cost shifting. State and local governments run on the same fuel that the Federal Government does: Taxes. The ultimate costs of shifting the responsibility of balancing the Federal budget to our States, towns and counties through mandates will be higher costs for all our citizens. Some idea of the potential costs is provided by a study conducted by the Urban Institute which concluded that the annual costs of mandates in six Federal programs in seven communities studied ranged from a total of $6.00 to $51.51 per capita. Similarly, a study conducted in California found that the combined costs of Federal and State mandates on towns and cities ranged from 10% to 85% of local expenditures. There is no free lunch. We must pass a real balanced budget, not simply pass the costs on to local government.

Mr. President, my committee passed last year the State and Local Fiscal Note Act and it has been signed into law. The act will require, beginning next year, that the significant costs of all Federal programs and policies on State and local government be carefully assessed before passage by Congress. This law will provide Congress with the information it needs to determine the costs of Federal programs before it passes them on to other levels of government. Despite the fact that section 4 of S.J. Res. 58 has been removed, I hope my colleagues will use the information provided by the Fiscal Note Act to ensure that in fulfilling the goal of a balanced budget, we aren't simply shipping off our responsibilities to local governments and, more importantly, their taxpayers.●

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am concerned about a potential loophole in the proposed amendment which, if not closed by the implementing legislation, could postpone indefinitely the goal of a balanced budget. The problem arises in the first year the amendment becomes effective. Assume, for example, that the amendment is ratified by September 30, 1983. The amendment would then become effective for the budget beginning in fiscal year 1985. Under current procedures, the Congress would be considering that budget during the spring of 1984.

The amendment requires that the percentage increase in the statement of revenues for fiscal year 1985 not exceed the percentage increase in national income in calendar year 1983 compared to calendar year 1982. The figure on the growth of national income should be available at the time the statement is being considered. Assume it is 10 percent. This means that the statement of revenues for fiscal year 1985 cannot increase by more than 10 percent from the statement of revenues for the prior year.

The problem is that there is no official statement of revenues in fiscal year 1984 since the amendment was not effective in that year. Congress would therefore have to develop its own revenue estimate in order to comply with the amendment. Actual figures for fiscal year 1984 would be available for only one-half of the year at the time the statement of revenues was being considered. Revenues for the entire fiscal year 1984 may be the subject of widely different projections based on differing assumptions about the economy or congressional willingness to enact specific tax measures.

Without a firm estimate of actual revenues for fiscal year 1984, the Congress could pick the highest estimate possible based on the most optimistic assumptions about the economy and the expected progress of tax legislation. Indeed, Congress might be under considerable pressure from the administration to adopt these most optimistic assumptions, particularly if they were embodied in the President's budget. The President might contend, for example, that even though tax rates are being reduced, the tax cuts will stimulate the economy and bring in more revenue.

Given the inherent variability of revenue estimates, coupled with election-year politics, Congress could easily overestimate revenues for fiscal year 1984—perhaps by as much as $50 billion—while still developing a plausible rationale for the estimate.

A $50 billion overestimate of current year revenues would be quite unusual by historical standards but by no means impossible. Indeed, the estimate of current year revenues would, for the first time, take on an entirely new strategic importance since it would establish the base for subsequent limitations on spending. If revenues for fiscal year 1984 are overestimated by $50 billion, the limitation on revenue estimates for fiscal year 1985 could be raised by $50 billion plus 10 percent, or $55 billion. This in turn means that maximum outlays for fiscal year 1985 could be $55 billion higher. If the revenues failed to materialize, Congress would have no constitutional duty to cut back outlays or raise taxes to close the budget deficit.

The problem could become even greater in fiscal year 1986 and subsequent years. If the statement of revenues is overestimated by $55 billion in fiscal year 1985, this inflated level becomes the base for the limitation on the statement of revenues for the next fiscal year plus the percentage increase in national income. Carried to its logical extreme, there could be an ever growing gap between statement revenues and actual revenues. And since outlays are limited to statement revenues, there could be a constantly growing budget deficit—clearly not the intent of the framers of the amendment.

Even a small overestimate of revenues in the base year could be compounded over time by the growth rate in national income and result in a widening gap between statement revenues and actual revenues. At the very least, the problem of the floating base can provide the Congress and the administration with considerable leeway during the first few years of the amendment thereby permitting continued budget deficits without the constitutional three-fifths vote.

Whether or not the proposed constitutional amendment lives up to its promise depends crucially upon the implementing legislation. The problem of the floating base could be corrected by requiring that the first year's statement of revenues be adjusted to reflect actual revenues in the prior year once these figures become available. If Congress had overestimated prior year revenues, it would then have to make a proportionate reduction in its statement of revenues for the budget year together with a commensurate reduction in budget outlays. This, of course, might require the rescission of funds already appropriated. Such a procedure would reduce any temptation by the Congress to overestimate revenues in the base year and insure that the budget is actually balanced.

I would like to ask the distinguished manager of the bill whether he is aware of the problem I have discussed, and if so, whether he feels that implementing legislation along the lines I have suggested should and must be adopted in order to insure that the purposes of the amendment are actually fulfilled.

● Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, the Senate is for the first time involved in a historic debate that may result in the passage of a constitutional amendment that would reform the budget, taxing and spending practices of the Federal Government. As a cosponsor of the amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 58, I am very pleased that the majority leader set aside time during which the Senate and the Nation can consider the merits of amending the Constitution in this way.

As support for the amendment has grown, I have been impressed by the urgency and the importance that millions of Americans attach to its passage. On the whole, I believe that American taxpayers are disappointed and frustrated that, year after year, the Congress has failed to find a workable way to balance the Federal budget. That frustration is reflected by the 31 State legislatures that have adopted resolutions urging the Congress and the President to bring the Nation's budget into balance.

At long last, the moment has come when the Congress can respond to the frustrations of American taxpayers by thoroughly debating, and then passing, Senate Joint Resolution 58. Those who question the efficacy of a balanced budget amendment have raised two primary arguments in opposition to it. First, they argue that it would incorporate into the Constitution a rigid, and therefore economically unsound, fiscal policy. Second, they argue that amending the Constitution is too drastic a way to address the problem of spending.

I believe, however, that both arguments fall because they do not take into account the dual crises that this Nation faces—the economic crisis that is destroying our historic high levels of productivity, and the crisis of confidence that results from average citizens losing faith in the ability of their Government to exercise discipline in matters of taxing and spending.

I believe that the Judiciary Committee, the administration and the vast majority of Americans are now heeding the warnings of economists that the explosion in Federal spending is the major factor contributing to our economic decline.

Dr. Roger Freeman of the Hoover Institution noted in the hearings the Judiciary Committee held on the amendment that:

> Increased public spending is a major inflationary force, whether financed from progressive taxes or through deficits and monetary expansion. But since tax boosts carry a political cost and are unpopular among elected officials, budgetary deficits are a more frequent and more powerful factor in driving inflation upward.

The truth of that statement is obvious. This Congress alone has authorized two increases in the public debt limit, and the total national debt now stands at well over a trillion dollars. In the 12 years since the budget was last balanced, the national debt has increased by $430 billion. As the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, David Stockman, said in House hearings on the balanced budget amendment:

> (U)nder current law, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that nondefense entitlements will cost $359 billion in fiscal year 1983, and $1.2 trillion over the next 3 years. That huge sum embodies the essence of the fiscal problem and deficit crisis now upon us . . . The implications of these figures are clear. The future will bring either continued intolerable high deficits, or massive tax increases on already overburdened taxpayers, unless something is done.

The high levels of spending and borrowing are the main factors in producing our record high interest rates and price increases. Economists Charles W. Baird pointed out to the Judiciary Committee the specific way in which deficits threaten the national economy:

> First, since much deficit spending becomes monetized by the Federal Reserve, either directly through Fed purchases of new debt or indirectly as the Fed attempts to offset upward pressure on interest rates by purchasing existing debt, it results in inflation. No serious economist any longer claims that inflation does no harm. The evidence to the contrary is too clear, even to impenitent Keynesians. Inflation distorts relative prices and thereby misdirects resources. Moreover, it interacts with progressive income taxation to increase the real tax burden. . . . Second, even if deficits were not monetized and so did not contribute to inflation, the fact that deficit spending is permitted inevitably leads to growth of the Government sector relative to the private sector.

I recognize that men and women of good will can disagree about the necessity of the portion of the amendment that prohibits increases in the share of national income going to the Federal Government unless specific increases are approved by Congress. There are wide philosophical and political differences over the question of how much spending the Federal Government can and should undertake.

The notion, however, that it is improper to reestablish the principle that Federal expenditures should be no greater than Federal revenue is preposterous. It is only in recent years that the Congress abandoned the requirement of our "unwritten constitution" for a balanced budget. I do not believe that the American people will continue to tolerate the near tyranny of higher and higher rates of Government spending and taxation.

From a practical standpoint, we should recognize that this amendment is not an attempt to write a particular theory of economics into the Constitution. As Professor Scalia of the University of Chicago has pointed out, the legislative requirements of the amendment "do not require any particular economic course," that is, a balanced budget and no increase in taxes, "but merely specify the procedures to be followed when that course is abandoned." I believe, however, that it is clear that this amendment rightly establishes a bias in favor of a balanced budget and no increases in taxes. That is a popular and appropriate national goal, and it is one that this amendment can help us attain without placing our public budget in the straitjacket of inflexible economic theory.

I must emphasize again that I believe we face a crisis of confidence on the part of the American public. Most taxpayers simply do not believe that the Congress has the willpower to cut spending and balance the Federal budget. The mistrust appears well founded when one reviews the history of statutory efforts to reform the budget process and restrain spending. Alvin Rubushka of Stanford University presented such a review in a recent monograph prepared for the Taxpayers' Foundation. He said:

> In the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Act, a balanced budget was declared to be a national public policy priority. An amendment offered by Rep. (now Senator) CHARLES GRASSLEY and Senator HARRY BYRD, JR., to an IMF loan program measure was enacted into law and required that, beginning with fiscal year 1981, total budget outlays of the Federal Government "shall not" exceed its receipts (Public Law 95-435). In 1979, a provision in a measure to increase the public debt limit stated that "Congress shall balance the Federal budget" (Public Law 96-5), which required the congressional budget committees to propose balanced budgets for fiscal year 1981 and subsequent years. None of these measures has effectively constrained deficits.

I strongly believe that the prudent and responsible management of public funds is a fundamental governmental and political requirement. The reestablishment of the balanced budget principle is a "broad and enduring ideal" that is worthy of inclusion in the document that establishes the basic structure of our Government. I am afraid that simple statutory approaches to reasserting this important principle will fail like their predecessors. Only the enactment of a constitutional amendment will explicitly mandate fiscal responsibility and be enforceable by future Congresses.

I urge my colleagues who are as yet uncommitted to join this effort to balance our national budget, for us and for succeeding generations who will otherwise bear the burden of our profligacy and irresponsibility.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I strongly support Senate Joint Resolution 58, the balanced budget-tax limitation constitutional amendment. In doing so, I would like to take a few moments to congratulate several of my colleagues, Senator THURMOND, the resolution's sponsor; Senator HATCH, the distinguished Chairman of the Subcommittee on the Constitution from whose subcommittee the resolution was reported; and the other members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. After more than 40 years of congressional debate on the subject, the Senate Judiciary Committee has at last presented this body with a vehicle for instituting much-needed reform in the budget, tax and spending procedures of the Federal Government.

Once duly passed and ratified, Senate Joint Resolution 58 will finally force Congress to be more accountable to the taxpayers. Past Congresses have found it too easy to spend and spend, tax and tax, while hiding behind a cloak of good intentions. Mr. President, it is well known that Russia's tsars and empresses handed out estates, decorations, noble titles, and vast sums of money to their supporters and to the key opinion-makers of their empire. In a similar vein, though certainly with much more noble intentions, past Congresses have been much too willing to create new and costly Federal programs sought by various special-interest groups. In fact, until only very recently, each year's budget debate revolved around the question of how much of an increase in spending to grant, not about what programs to terminate, or what efficiencies needed to be made. Mr. President, the public is tired of this approach to the Nation's business. The taxpayer wants Congress to balance the Federal budget in the same way as each family's budget must be balanced. The taxpayer senses the fiscal folly of deficit spending and wants Congress to balance the budget, but not by further increases in taxes.

In a September 1981 Gallup poll, 67 percent of those surveyed favored a constitutional amendment to balance the budget and restrict Federal spending. A national poll conducted by Market Opinion Research of Detroit, Mich., and released June 3, 1982, revealed that 79 percent of voters, in all income, educational, racial, geographical, and political categories surveyed, favor congressional passage of the tax limitation/balanced budget amendment. Thus, the message is clear. The public which elected each of us is demanding fiscal restraint.

Mr. President, I support Senate Joint Resolution 58. I am a cosponsor of the resolution and in late April, joined 33 of my Senate colleagues in urging the President to endorse the measure. However, no one should be fooled into believing that this resolution has some magical property. This Congress and those that follow will continue to have to work hard to reduce Federal spending, to limit tax increases, and to balance the budget. This Senator is committed to seeing that the resolution is strictly enforced. The work will not be easy but, in my view, future generations of Americans will thank us. Passage of Senate Joint Resolution 58 is an important step in the right direction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are certain routine matters I believe may be disposed of. I believe there is no need for further debate this evening on the pending question. That will be resumed in the morning.

I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 7 p.m., in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering nominations on the Executive Calendar commencing with "New Reports," and that is commencing with Calendar No. 863, and to consider nominees through 868.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate consider Calendar No. 864.

THE JUDICIARY

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of E. Grady Jolly, of Mississippi, to be U.S. circuit judge for the fifth circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee has recommended, without dissent, confirmation of the nomination of E. Grady Jolly to be U.S. circuit judge for the fifth circuit.

The committee action is tribute to the fact that he is eminently qualified by education, experience, and temperament for the Federal bench, which the hearing record clearly supports.

It is my privilege and honor to recommend him to President Reagan for this important position of responsibility. I am confident he will serve with great distinction, and I urge the Senate to confirm him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the nominees that I have mentioned, Calendar Nos. 863, 865, 866, and 868 be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

THE JUDICIARY

Partick E. Higginbotham, of Texas, to U.S. circuit judge for the fifth circuit.

Richard A. Gadbois, Jr., of California, to be U.S. district judge for the central district of California.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar No. 710, S. 1182.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1182) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act Amendments of 1982".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 2(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The term 'employee' means any person directly engaged in maritime employment, including any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and shipbreaker, but such term does not include—

"(A) any ship repairman, shipbuilder, or ship-breaker engaged by employers described in section 2(4)(B)(iv);

"(B) employees exclusively performing office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work;

"(C) club, camp, restaurant, museum, retail outlet, and marina personnel;

"(D) personnel of suppliers, transporters, or vendors temporarily doing business on the premises of employers described in section 2(4)(A);

"(E) aquaculture workers;

"(F) any person engaged in operating an independently or cooperatively owned grain elevator and who is not engaged in the loading or unloading of a vessel;

"(G) any person employed to build or repair any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length;

"(H) a master or member of a crew of any vessel; or

"(I) any person engaged by a master to load or unload or repair any small vessel under eighteen tons net;

if employees described in clauses (A) through (G) are subject to coverage under a State workers' compensation law.".

(b) Section 2(4) is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) The term 'employer' means an employer any of whose employees are directly employed in maritime employment, in whole or in part, upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, building, or breaking a vessel).

"(B) The term employer does not include—

"(i) clubs, camps, restaurants, museums, retail outlets, or marinas;

"(ii) aquaculture farms;

"(iii) employers or operations of employers who otherwise would be described by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph—

"(I) solely and exclusively because they are in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling—

"(aa) commercial barges under nine hundred light displacement tons but no other vessel which is nine hundred lightship displacement tons used or intended for use on the inland waters of the continental United States as defined in section 311(a)(16) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1321(a)(16));

"(bb) commercial tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels under one thousand six hundred tons gross but no other vessel which is one thousand six hundred tons gross or more; or

"(cc) any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length but no other vessel which is sixty-five feet in length or more, while upon any pier, wharf, building way, marine railway, graving dock, shop, or any other facility or area over land customarily used in ship repairing, shipbuilding, or shipbreaking; and

"(II) if the operations of employers described in subdivision (I) do not receive Federal maritime subsidies.".

(c) Section 2(13) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) The term 'wages' means the money rate at which the service rendered by an employee is compensated by an employer under the contract of hiring in force at the time of the injury, including the reasonable value of any advantage which is received from the employer and included for purposes of any withholding of tax under subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to employment taxes). The term wages does not include fringe benefits, including but not limited to employer payments for or contributions to a retirement, pension, health and welfare, life insurance, training, social security or other employee or dependent benefit fund or trust for the employee's or dependent's benefit, or any other employee's dependent entitlement.".

COVERAGE

SEC. 3. Section 3(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Compensation shall be payable under this Act in respect of disability or death of an employee, but only if the disability or death results from an injury occurring upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by the employer in loading, unloading, repairing, or building a vessel). No compensation shall be payable in respect of the disability or death of—

"(1) any employee described in section 2(3) (A) through (I) of this Act; or

"(2) an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof or any State or foreign government, or of any political subdivision thereof.".

(b) Section 3 is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any amounts paid by any employer for the same injury, disability, or death for which benefits are claimed under this Act pursuant to any other workers' compensation law or section 20 of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1185, chapter 153; 46 U.S.C. 688) (relating to recovery for injury to or death of seamen) shall be credited against any liability imposed by this Act.".

EXCLUSIVENESS OF REMEDY AND THIRD PARTY LIABILITY

SEC. 4. (a) Section 5(a) is amended by inserting after the word "liability" the second time it appears the following: "including any liability imposed by or arising out of any other workers' compensation law or section 20 of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1185, chapter 153; 46 U.S.C. 688)".

(b)(1) The third sentence of section 5(b) is amended to read as follows: "If such person was employed to provide ship building, repairing, or breaking services and such person's employer was the owner, owner pro hac vice, agent, operator, or charterer of the vessel, no such action shall be permitted, in whole or in part or directly or indirectly, against the injured person's employer (in any capacity, including as the vessel's owner, owner pro hac vice, agent, operator, or charterer) or against the employees of the employer.".

(2) Section 2(21) is amended by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "Unless the context requires otherwise, the".

(c) Section 5 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In the event that the negligence of a third party causes injury to a person entitled to receive benefits under this chapter by virtue of section 4 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1333), then such person, or anyone otherwise entitled to recover damages by reason thereof, may bring an action against such third party in accordance with the provisions of section 33 of this Act. Nothing contained in this chapter, or in any otherwise applicable State law, shall preclude the enforcement according to its terms of any written agreement under which the employer has agreed to indemnify such third party in whole or in part with respect to such action.".

COMPENSATION

SEC. 5. (a) Section 6(b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Compensation for disability or death shall not exceed an amount equal to 200 per centum of the applicable national average weekly wage, as determined by the Secretary under subsection (b)(3).".

(b) Section 6 is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (c) and redesignating subsection (d) (and any references thereto) as subsection (c); and

(2) by striking out "under this subsection" in subsection (c) (as redesignated) and inserting in lieu thereof "under subsection (b)(3)".

MEDICAL SERVICES AND SUPPLIES

SEC. 6. (a) The penultimate sentence of section 7(b) is amended by inserting before the period the following: "or where the charges exceed those prevailing within the community for the same or similar services".

(b) Section 7(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1)(A) The Secretary shall annually prepare a list of physicians in each compensation district who are not authorized to render medical care under this Act. The names of physicians contained on the list required under this subparagraph shall be made available to employees and employers in each compensation district through posting or in such form as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(B) The Secretary may refuse to authorize any physician who, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (j)(1) of this section, and shall refuse to authorize any physician who, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (j)(2) of this section, has been found ineligible to receive payments under this Act. A physician not authorized under this Act shall not be entitled to reimbursement for any service, appliance, or supply or to recover any amount with respect to any such service, appliance, or supply from any employee.

"(2) Whenever the employer or carrier acquires knowledge of the employee's injury, through written notice or otherwise as prescribed by the Act, the employer or carrier shall forthwith authorize medical treatment and care from a physician selected by an employee pursuant to subsection (b). An employee may not select a physician who is on the list required by paragraph (1) of this subsection. An employee may not change physicians after his initial choice unless the employer, carrier, or deputy commissioner has given prior consent for such change. Such consent shall be given in cases where an employee's initial choice was not of a specialist whose services are necessary for and appropriate to the proper care and treatment of the compensable injury or disease. In all other cases, consent may be given upon a showing of good cause for change.".

(c) Section 7(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) An employee shall not be entitled to recover any amount expended by him for medical or other treatment or services unless he shall have complied with subsections (b) and (c) and the applicable regulations or unless the employer shall have refused or neglected to furnish such services, or unless the nature of the injury required such treatment and services and the employer or his superintendent or foreman having knowledge of such injury shall have neglected to provide or authorize same; nor shall any claim for medical or surgical treatment be valid and enforceable against such employer, unless within twenty-one days following the first treatment the physician giving such treatment furnishes to the employer and the deputy commissioner a report of such injury or treatment, on a form prescribed by the Secretary. The Secretary may excuse the failure to furnish such report within the twenty-one-day period whenever he finds it to be in the interest of justice to do so. The Secretary may, upon application by a party in interest, make an award for the reasonable value of such medical or surgical treatment so obtained by the employee. If at any time the employee unreasonably refuses to submit to medical or surgical treatment, or to an examination by a physician selected by the employer, the Secretary or administrative law judge may, by order, suspend the payment of further compensation during such time as such refusal continues, and no compensation shall be paid at any time during the period of such suspension, unless the circumstances justified the refusal.".

(d) Section 7 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, no liability shall arise under this Act for a service, appliance, or supply furnished by an individual or entity where the Secretary determines under this subsection that a provider—

"(A) has knowingly and willfully made, or caused to be made, a false statement or representation of a material fact in connection with any services provided under this Act;

"(B) has submitted, or caused to be submitted, a bill or request for payment under this Act containing a charge which the Secretary finds to be substantially in excess of the charge for the service, appliance, or supply prevailing within the community unless the Secretary finds there is good cause for the bill or request containing the charge; or

"(C) has furnished a service, appliance, or supply which is determined by the Secretary to be substantially in excess of the need of the recipient thereof or to be of a quality which fails to meet professionally recognized standards.

"(2) Liability shall not arise for a service, appliance, or supply furnished by a provider—

"(A) indicted or convicted under a criminal statute (without regard to pending appeal thereof) for fraudulent activities or (as determined by regulation of the Secretary) related activities, in connection with a program under which payments are made to providers for similar services, appliances, or supplies; or

"(B) otherwise excluded from participation in a program under which payments are made to providers for similar services, appliances, or supplies.

"(3) A provider of a service, appliance, or supply shall provide to the Secretary such information and certification as the Secretary may require to assure that this subsection is enforced.

"(4)(A) A determination made by the Secretary under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be effective—

"(i) in connection with any request for payment by a provider, upon notice consistent with paragraph (5); or

"(ii) in connection with a request for payment by anyone claiming benefits under this Act, only with respect to payment of expenses incurred after receipt of notice of the determination by such person.

"(B) A determination shall remain in effect until the Secretary finds and gives notice to the public that the basis for the determination has been removed, and that there is reasonable assurance that the basis for the determination will not reoccur.

"(5) The Secretary may make rules and regulations and establish procedures which are necessary or appropriate to carry out this subsection, including notice and opportunity for a hearing to the provider of a service, appliance, or supply, subject to a determination made by the Secretary under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection.".

COMPENSATION FOR DISABILITY

SEC. 7. (a) Section 8(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Permanent total disability: In the case of total disability determined to be permanent, 66⅔ per centum of the average weekly wages of the employee shall be paid to the employee during the continuance of the disability, except that compensation paid to the injured employee shall be subject to section 6(b)(1) and shall be reduced by 50 per centum of the amount of old-age insurance benefits to which the employee is entitled under title II of the Social Security Act. Loss of both hands, both arms, both feet, both legs, both eyes, or any combination of two such body parts, shall constitute permanent total disability in the absence of conclusive proof to the contrary. In all other cases, permanent total disability shall be determined in accordance with the facts.".

(b) Section 8(c)(13) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) Loss of hearing:

"(A) Compensation for loss of hearing in one ear, fifty-two weeks.

"(B) Compensation for loss of hearing in both ears, two hundred weeks.

"(C) An employer shall be liable to the employee only for the loss of hearing attributable to employment by the employer.

"(D) An audiogram shall be conclusive evidence of the amount of hearing loss sustained as of the date thereof, unless contrary audiograms made at that time are produced.

"(E) Within ninety days of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to define the term 'loss of hearing' in accordance with the American Medical Association Guides for the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment.".

(c) Section 8(c)(20) is amended by striking out "$3,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500".

(d) Section 8(c)(21) is amended to read as follows:

"(21) Other cases: In all other cases in this class of disability, the compensation shall be 66⅔ per centum of the difference between the average weekly wages of the employee and the employee's wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise payable during the continuance of the partial disability.".

(e) Section 8(d) is amended by striking out paragraph (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) (and any references thereto) as paragraph (3).

(f) Section 8(f) is amended—

(1) by striking out "one hundred and four weeks" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred and eight weeks"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Any request for second injury fund apportionment in accordance with section 8(f) must be presented to the deputy commissioner and the Conservator prior to consideration by an administrative law judge.".

(g) Subsections (g) through (i) of section 8 are amended to read as follows:

"(g) Compensation for employees undergoing vocational rehabilitation:

"(1) An employee who as a result of an injury is undergoing vocational rehabilitation for remunerative employment under the supervision of the deputy commissioner, pursuant to section 39(c), or with the approval of the employer, shall receive continued temporary total or partial compensation during the period of rehabilitation.

"(2) An award for permanent disability may not be entered before the deputy commissioner determines, or the employer and employee agree, that vocational rehabilitation is unnecessary or until after vocational rehabilitation has been completed.

"(3) If an employee unreasonably refuses to undergo vocational rehabilitation or to participate in a reasonable plan offered and financed by the employer to return the injured employee to work, the employee shall not be eligible to receive compensation payments that would otherwise be payable for the period of the refusal.

"(h) The wage-earning capacity of an injured employee in cases of disability shall be determined by his actual earnings if such actual earnings fairly and reasonably represent his wage-earning capacity: Provided, however, That if the employee has no actual earnings or his actual earnings do not fairly and reasonably represent his wage-earning capacity, the deputy commissioner may, in the interest of justice, fix such wage-earning capacity as shall be reasonable, having due regard to the nature of his injury, the degree of physical impairment, his usual employment, and any other factors or circumstances in the case which may affect his capacity to earn wages in his disabled condition.

"(i)(1) Whenever the parties to any claim for compensation, including survivors benefits, under this Act agree to a settlement, the deputy commissioner or administrative law judge shall approve the settlement within thirty days unless it is found to be inadequate or procured by duress. No liability of any employer, carrier, or both for disability or death benefits shall be discharged unless the application for settlement is approved by the deputy commissioner or administrative law judge. If the parties to the settlement are represented by counsel, then agreements shall be deemed approved unless specifically disapproved within thirty days after submission for approval.

"(2) If the deputy commissioner disapproves an application for settlement under paragraph (1), the deputy commissioner shall issue a written statement within 30 days containing the reasons for disapproval. Any party to the settlement may request a hearing before an administrative law judge in the manner prescribed by this Act. Following such hearing, an order shall be issued approving, rejecting, or modifying the deputy commissioner's decision. If the parties to the settlement are represented by counsel, then agreements shall be deemed approved unless specifically disapproved within thirty days after submission for approval.

"(3) A settlement approved under this section shall discharge the liability of the employer, carrier, or both. Such settlement may include future medical benefits if the parties so agree and the deputy commissioner approves. Settlements may be agreed upon at any stage of the proceeding including after entry of a final compensation order.".

(h) Section 8 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) The employer may inform a disabled employee of his obligation to report to the employer not less than semiannually any earnings from employment or self-employment, on such forms as the Secretary shall specify in regulations.

"(2) An employee who—

"(A) fails to report the employee's earnings under paragraph (1) when requested, or

"(B) knowingly and willfully omits or understates any part of such earnings, and who is determined by the deputy commissioner to have violated clause (A) or (B) of this paragraph, forfeits his right to compensation with respect to any period during which the employee was required to file such report.

"(3) Compensation forfeited under this subsection, if already paid, shall be recovered by a deduction from the compensation payable to the employee in any amount and on such schedule as determined by the deputy commissioner.".

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH

SEC. 8. (a) The matter preceding the colon in section 9 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. If the injury causes death, the compensation therefore shall be known as a death benefit and shall be payable in the amount and to or for the benefit of the persons following".

(b) Section 9(a) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,000".

(c) Section 9(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) In computing death benefits, the average weekly wages of the deceased shall not be less than the national average weekly wage as prescribed in section 6(b), except that the total weekly benefits shall not exceed the lesser of the average weekly wages of the deceased or the benefit which the deceased employee would have been eligible to receive under section 6(b)(1).".

DETERMINATION OF PAY

SEC. 9. Section 10(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Effective October 1 of each year following the date of enactment of this Act, the compensation or death benefits payable for permanent total disability or death arising out of injuries subject to this Act shall be increased—

"(1) by a percentage equal to the percentage (if any) by which the applicable national weekly wage for the period beginning on such October 1, as determined under section 6(b), exceeds the applicable national average weekly wage, as so determined, for the period beginning with the preceding October 1; or

"(2) by 5 per centum, whichever percentage is less.".

NOTICE OF INJURY OR DEATH

SEC. 10. (a) Section 12(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Notice of an injury or death in respect of which compensation is payable under this Act shall be given within thirty days after the date of such injury or death, or thirty days after the employee or beneficiary is aware or by reason of medical advice should have been aware of a relationship between the injury or death and the employment. Such notice shall be given (1) to the deputy commissioner in the compensation district in which the injury or death occurred, and (2) to the employer. Each employer shall designate those agents or other responsible officials, including first line supervisors, to receive such notice, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary and shall notify his employees of such designation in a manner prescribed by the Secretary in regulations.".

(b) Section 12(d) is amended by deleting "(or his agent in charge of the business in the place where the injury occurred)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(or his agent or agents or other responsible official or officials designated by the employer as designated under subsection (a))".

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

SEC. 11. (a) Section 14(b) is amended by striking out "employer" and inserting in lieu thereof "employer's agent or agents as designated under section 12(a)".

(b) Section 14 is amended by striking out subsection (j) and by redesignating subsections (k) and (l) (and any references thereto) as subsections (j) and (k), respectively.

PRESUMPTIONS

SEC. 12. Section 20 is amended as follows:

(1) by inserting before the period in subsection (b) a comma and the following: "except when the agent or agents or other responsible official or officials designated by the employer in section 12 (a) and (d) have not received actual or constructive notice", and

(2) by adding at the end of the section the following new sentence: "The mere existence of a physical impairment is insufficient to establish a claim under this Act.".

REVIEW OF COMPENSATION ORDER

SEC. 13. Section 21 is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end of subsection (b):

"(5) Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) through (4), upon application of the Chairman of the Board, the Secretary may designate up to four Department of Labor administrative law judges to temporarily serve on the Board. Any party aggrieved by the decisions of a panel or division of the Benefits Review Board may, within thirty days after the decision, petition the entire Board (permanent plus temporary members) for a rehearing en banc. Upon affirmative vote of the majority of the Board sitting en banc, the petition shall be granted. If a petition for a rehearing en banc is granted, and the vote of the Board sitting en banc results in a tie, the decision of the panel or division of the Board shall be affirmed. The Benefits Review Board shall amend its Rules of Practice to conform with this paragraph. Temporary members shall be compensated at the same rate of compensation as they were receiving prior to such temporary designation. Except when sitting en banc, and for the purpose of carrying out its adjudicative functions under this Act, two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum of a panel or division and official adjudicative action can be taken only on the affirmative vote of at least two members of a division or panel.".

MODIFICATIONS OF AWARDS

SEC. 14. Section 22 is amended by striking all after "the deputy commissioner may" through "rejection of a claim".

FEES FOR SERVICES

SEC. 15. (a) Section 28(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) A claim for legal services or for any other services provided to or on account of a person with respect to a claim for or award of compensation under this Act is not valid unless approved by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, the Board, or a court which is reviewing an order of an administrative law judge.".

(b) Section 28(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) A person who receives a fee, gratuity, or other consideration on account of services rendered as a representative of a claimant, unless the consideration is approved by the deputy commissioner, administrative law judge, Board, or court, or who makes it a business to solicit employment for a lawyer, or for himself, with respect to a claim or award for compensation under this Act, shall, upon conviction thereof, for each offense be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

REPORTS

SEC. 16. (a) Section 30(a) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the word "injury" a comma and the following: "which would cause loss of one or more shifts of work", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the requirements of this section, each employer shall keep a record of each and every injury regardless of whether such injury results in the loss of one or more shifts of work.".

(b) Section 30(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Any employer, insurance carrier, or self-insured employer who willfully fails or refuses to send any report required by this section shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $25,000 for each such failure or refusal.".

PENALTY FOR MISREPRESENTATION—PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS

SEC. 17. Section 31 is amended to read as follows:

"PENALTY FOR MISREPRESENTATION—PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS

"SEC. 31. (a)(1) A person who willfully makes a false statement or representation for the purpose of obtaining a benefit or payment under this Act shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25,000, by imprisonment not to exceed three years, or both.

"(2) The United States attorney for the district in which the injury is alleged to have occurred shall make every reasonable effort to promptly investigate each complaint made under this subsection.

"(b)(1) A person may not prosecute or defend a claim other than his own under this Act other than a claimant, an attorney, a representative licensed by the Secretary, or an employee designated by an employer or carrier.

"(2) A person may not prosecute or defend a claim other than his own under this Act if the person—

"(A) is convicted of or pleads guilty to a crime in a State or Federal court;

"(B) gives false or substantially inaccurate information in an application for a license to prosecute or defend a claim under this Act;

"(C) conceals or attempts to conceal material facts with respect to a claim under this Act;

"(D) solicits or procures false testimony with respect to a claim under this Act; or

"(E) misappropriates funds or documents entrusted to the person with respect to a claim under this Act.

"(3) The Secretary shall issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(c) A person including, but not limited to, an employer, his duly authorized agent, or an employee of an insurance carrier who willfully makes a false statement or representation for the purpose of denying or terminating benefits to an injured employee, or his dependents pursuant to section 9 if the injury results in death, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25,000, by imprisonment not to exceed three years, or by both.".

SECURITY FOR COMPENSATION

SEC. 18. Section 32(a)(2) is amended by inserting "based on the employer's financial condition, the employer's previous record of payments, and other relevant factors," after "in an amount determined by the Secretary,".

COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES WHERE THIRD PERSONS ARE LIABLE

SEC. 19. (a) Section 33(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Acceptance of such compensation under an award in a compensation order filed by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board shall operate as an assignment to the employer of all rights of the person entitled to compensation to recover damages against such third person unless such person shall commence an action against such third person within six months after such award. For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'award' with respect to a compensation order means a formal order issued by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board; if the employer fails to commence an action against such third person within a reasonable time after the cause of action is assigned under this section, the right to bring such action shall revert to the person entitled to compensation.".

(b) Section 33(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) If a person entitled to compensation under the Act institutes proceedings within the period described in subsection (b), the employer shall be required to pay, as compensation under this Act, a sum equal to the excess of the amount which the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board determines is payable on account of the injury or death above the amount recovered in the proceedings against a third person.

"(2) Any amount recovered by the person entitled to compensation on account of the proceedings by judgment or settlement, whether or not the settlement is approved by the employer in accordance with subsection (g), shall be distributed as follows:

"(A) The person entitled to compensation shall pay to the employer an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) the cost of all benefits furnished to the person by the employer under section 7; and

"(ii) all other amounts payable as compensation or benefits under this Act.

"(B) The person entitled to compensation or the person's representative shall retain the amount remaining after the payment required by subparagraph (A).".

(c) Section 33(g) is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1) If the person entitled to compensation (or the person's representative) enters into a settlement with a third person referred to in subsection (a) for an amount less than the compensation to which the person (or the person's representative) would be entitled under this Act, the employer shall be liable for compensation as determined under subsection (f) only if written approval of the settlement is obtained from the employer and the employer's carrier, before the settlement is executed, and by the person entitled to compensation (or the person's representative). The approval shall be made on a form provided by the Secretary and shall be filed in the office of the deputy commissioner within thirty days after the settlement is entered into.

"(2) If no written approval of the settlement is obtained and filed as required by paragraph (1), or if the employee fails to notify the employer of any settlement obtained from or judgment rendered against a third person, all rights to compensation and medical benefits under this Act shall be terminated, regardless of whether the employer or the employer's insurer has made payments or acknowledged entitlement to benefits under this Act.

"(3) Payments by the special fund established under section 44 shall be a lien upon the proceeds of any settlement obtained from or judgment rendered against a third person referred to under subsection (a). Notwithstanding any other provision of law, such lien shall be enforceable against the employee, regardless of whether the Conservator on behalf of the special fund has agreed to or has received actual notice of the settlement or judgment.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 20. The Act is amended by inserting the following new section after section 42:

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 43. The Secretary shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report of the administration of this Act for the preceding fiscal year, including a detailed statement of receipts of and expenditures from the funds established in sections 44 and 45, together with such recommendations as the Secretary deems advisable.".

SPECIAL FUND CONSERVATION COMMITTEE—FUND CONSERVATOR

SEC. 21. Section 45 is amended to read as follows:

"SPECIAL FUND CONSERVATION COMMITTEE—FUND CONSERVATOR

"SEC. 45. (a)(1) There is established the Special Fund Conservation Committee (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Conservation Committee'). The Conservation Committee shall be responsible for protecting the financial integrity of the special fund established under section 44 (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'special fund') by insuring that all distributions from the special fund are made in accordance with this Act.

"(2)(A) The Conservation Committee shall be composed of five members appointed by the Secretary, who shall be representatives of carriers authorized under section 32, including self-insurers and representatives of employers.

"(B) The terms of office of the members of the Conservation Committee shall be three years, except that of the members first appointed, one member shall be appointed for a term of one year, two members shall be appointed for a term of two years, and two members shall be appointed for a term of three years, as determined by the Secretary at the time of appointment.

"(C) A vacancy on the Committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. A member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of the term. A member may serve after the expiration of the member's term until the member's successor has taken office.

"(D) Members of the Conservation Committee shall serve without pay and may not be reimbursed for any travel or transportation expenses.

"(E) The Chairman shall be elected by the members of the Conservation Committee.

"(F) The Conservation Committee shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members.

"(G) Upon request of the Conservation Committee, the Secretary shall provide such administrative services as the Committee shall require.

"(3)(A) The Conservation Committee may secure, directly from the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Board, and a deputy commissioner, information necessary to enable it to carry out this section, including copies of all official records and reports. Upon request of the Chairman of the Conservation Committee, the appropriate Secretary, the Chairman of the Board, or the deputy commissioner shall furnish the information to the Committee.

"(B) The Conservation Committee may provide (by contract) for the auditing of the account of the special fund. The Conservation Committee may secure directly from the Comptroller General of the United States information derived from an audit conducted pursuant to section 44(g). Upon request of the Chairman of the Conservation Committee, the Comptroller General shall furnish the information to the Conservation Committee.

"(4) The Conservation Committee may establish such policies and procedures as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"(5) The Conservation Committee shall transmit to the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, and to each House of Congress a report, not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, and each year thereafter. The report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Conservation Committee with regard to the financial integrity of the special fund, together with its recommendations for such legislative and administrative actions as it considers appropriate.

"(b)(1)(A) To carry out its responsibilities under this section, the Conservation Committee shall appoint a Fund Conservator (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Conservator').

"(B) The Conservation Committee may authorize the Conservator to take any action which the Conservation Committee is authorized to take under this section.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall cause notice to be given to the Conservator whenever a payment from the special fund is ordered by the Secretary or whenever an administrative or judicial proceeding in which a party to the proceeding seeks to establish a liability of the special fund is scheduled to convene. A proceeding on an application for apportionment under section 8(f) of this Act may not be convened less than thirty days after notice of the proceeding has been given to the Conservator, unless the Conservator waives the limitation in writing to the Secretary.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), the Conservator shall be a party in an administrative or judicial proceeding in which a party to the proceeding seeks to establish a liability of the special fund. The Conservator shall have the same rights in the proceeding as any other party, including the right to participate in a settlement of a claim brought against the fund.

"(C) The Conservator may withdraw as a party from a proceeding described in subparagraph (B), after giving written notice to the Secretary and the officer or judge presiding over the proceeding, if the Conservator determines that there is a substantial likelihood that the liability of the fund will be established in the proceeding.

"(D) The Conservator may participate as a party in a case where the liability of the special fund is already established and a proceeding is convened to establish the amount of the liability, including a proceeding to review a compensation award under section 22.

"(E) The functions and responsibilities of the Conservator established under subparagraphs (B) through (D) shall extend to all proceedings described in such subparagraphs which are pending on the date of enactment of this Act.

"(3)(A) When medical questions or questions relating to the vocational rehabilitation of a claimant are raised in a case in which the Conservator is a party pursuant to paragraph (2), the Conservator may order an examination or evaluation of the claimant in the proceeding by a physician whose services have been procured by the Conservator under paragraph (5)(B)(ii).

"(B) If a claimant refuses to comply with an order under subparagraph (A), the proceeding relating to the claimant's case shall be suspended and, in appropriate cases, the Secretary may suspend benefits, unless the physician or other individual who would be responsible for administering the examination or evaluation determines that the administration of the examination or evaluation would constitute a risk to the health of the claimant.

"(4)(A) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe and to subparagraph (B), the Conservator may appoint and fix the pay of such professional and clerical personnel as the Conservator considers appropriate.

"(B) The staff of the Conservator may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code (governing appointments in the competitive service), and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title (relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates).

"(5)(A) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe, the Conservator may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe, the Conservator may procure the services of—

"(i) counsel, subject to subparagraph (C), to represent the interests of the special fund in an administrative or judicial proceeding described in paragraph (2); and

"(ii) medical, vocational, and other experts and witnesses to defend a claim against the special fund.

"(C) The Conservator shall establish standards for the selection of a counsel under subparagraph (A) which will ensure the selection of individuals who are specially qualified to serve by virtue of their education, training, or experience, including experience in the field of worker's compensation law.

"(c) All administrative expenses incurred by the Conservation Committee and the Conservator under this section shall be paid from the special fund.".

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 22. Section 46 is repealed.

AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 23. Section 47 is repealed.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST EMPLOYEES WHO BRING PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 24. (a) Section 49 is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The discharge or refusal to employ a person who has been adjudicated to have filed a fraudulent claim for compensation is not a violation of this section.".

(b) The second sentence of section 49 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$100" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000"; and

(2) by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 25. The provisions of this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall be effective for an injury, disability, or death which occurs or commences on or after the date of enactment of this Act, except that (1) there shall be no liability for deaths from causes other than the injury, as provided in sections 8(d)(3) and 9 of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended by Public Law 92-576, for any such deaths occurring on or after the date of enactment of this Act, and (2) the amendments made by section 14 of this Act relating to the modification of awards shall not apply to payments of compensation under the Black Lung Benefits Act (30 U.S.C. 901 et seq.).

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to improve the administration of the Act, to reduce incentives for fraud and abuse, to assure immediate compensation benefits and competent medical treatment for injured employees, and for other purposes.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the committee amendment and ask that it be treated as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring to the floor today the bill, S. 1182, to reform comprehensively the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. This act was last amended almost a decade ago, in 1972. At that time the act with the new amendments was heralded as a "model of enlightened benefit." It is no doubt true that the 1972 amendments did bring about an improvement. Prior to 1972, 20 States had surpassed the Longshore Act in terms of wage loss benefits. Moreover, a very unsatisfactory state of affairs existed with respect to third party liability suits involving covered employers. The principle that workers' compensation should be an employer's sole liability to injured employees had been seriously eroded. However, the experience of the last 10 years has demonstrated severe deficiencies with the act.

So beginning in 1977, the respective labor committees of the Senate and the House conducted a series of oversight hearings. During the 95th Congress, the House committee held 17 days of hearings, and they continued in both the House and the Senate in the 96th Congress. As might be expected, employers, insurance carriers, unions and employee representatives presented varying views. Employers and carriers complained about the vagaries over jurisdiction and coverage, and they were highly critical of the benefits levels, the unrelated death benefits provision, and the unrestrained annual adjustments in compensation. They were also critical of the special fund's growing liability as well as the delays and backlogs encountered in the administration and adjudication of claims. On the other hand, employee representatives expressed overall support for the current law, but indicated concern over inadequate administration by the Department of Labor.

At the beginning of the 97th Congress, the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs held 6 days of hearings on waterfront corruption and the influence of organized crime in a number of east and gulf coast ports. The hearings were the culmination of an investigation commenced the previous year by Senator NUNN and the Department of Justice's Operation UNIRAC.

Soon after the conclusion of the permanent subcommittee investigation hearings, Senators NICKLES and NUNN on May 14, 1981, introduced the comprehensive longshoremen's and harbor workers' compensation reform bill S. 1182. This committee's Subcommittee on Labor held 4 days of hearings on S. 1182 and developed a hearing record of 1,241 pages. Interested parties from labor, management, and Government again presented their views.

The following criticisms emerged from these hearings:

First, jurisdiction: It was alleged that the extension to "adjoining" areas leave vague and unclear just what operations on land are covered. The small recreational boatyards, in particular, are in a state of uncertainty as to the status of their employees working at locations which are not geographically adjacent to navigable waters. The small boat and barge builders expressed concern about their employees who may be involved in nonmaritime construction during extensive periods of the year.

Second, unrelated death benefits: The law provides that if a claimant receives compensation benefits for either permanent partial or permanent total disability and then dies from any cause, his widow and/or survivors would be entitled to certain benefits. It is contended this has the effect of adding a life insurance policy to a workers' compensation law.

Third, annual escalation of benefits: It has been contended that the unpredictability of future, annual escalation of benefits makes insurance premium assessment equally unpredictable, resulting in higher insurance costs.

Fourth, no limitation on weekly benefits to widows and/or survivors in case of death: Since there is a maximum payable for total permanent disability, it is alleged that, in certain instances, a widow could receive higher benefits from the death of the employee than if he was receiving total permanent disability benefits.

Fifth, procedure for establishing loss of wage earning capacity: It has been stated that in some cases a claimant receives compensation in excess of his take-home wages prior to injury.

Sixth, employers' access to an indpendent physical examination: It has been alleged that in certain district offices, the deputy commissioners are unwilling to order an independent medical examination of a claimant at the request of an employer.

Seventh, settlements: It has been alleged that the administrative law judges have no authority to approve settlements, which results in excessive litigation.

Eighth, waste, fraud, and abuse: During the course of the hearing before the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations as well as the committee's consideration of the bill, testimony was received concerning the potential for abuse of this act. It has now been clearly established that, in certain instances, the provisions of the act have been abused by corrupt individuals so that corrective action to eliminate this potential is necessary.

The bill as reported by the committee, in my estimation, goes a long way in rectifying many of these problems. I would stress, however, that this bill in its present form is a consensus bill. It does not address all the matters raised during the hearings. Nor does it solve some of the problems to everyone's complete satisfaction. But that is often the nature of compromise legislation. I will not take the time to review in detail all the aspects of the reported bill; an explanation is adequately set forth in the committee report. I would nevertheless like to single out several matters for comment.

I would like to make a few comments on the committee amendment with respect to certain small boat builders and repairers. Although there are a number of limitations on the availability of the exclusion, the result nonetheless should provide needed relief to that segment of the shipbuilding industry.

Generally, the exclusion applies only to small vessel operations in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling commercial barges, tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels, or recreational vessels, all of which are subject to certain size limitations as specified in the amendment. A small vessel operation may qualify for the exclusion by relying upon one or more of the specific exception categories contained in the amendment.

One of the exception categories addresses commercial barges under 900 lightship displacement long tons.

The amendment as reported by the committee contained additional limiting language requiring that these vessels have a domestic purpose but we have agreed to accept a floor amendment which would delete the domestic purpose clause in this exception. The best example of the application of this exception is the case of a shipyard facility in the business of building and repairing barges only. If the facility is in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling commercial barges under 900 lightship displacement long tons, it will qualify for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage so long as it is not engaged in building, repairing, or dismantling any other vessel which is 1,600 tons gross or more.

The second general work boat exception addresses shipyard facilities in the business of building or repairing commercial tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels under 1,600 tons gross. If a shipyard operation is in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling any one or more of these vessels, it will qualify for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage so long as it is not engaged in building, repairing, or dismantling any other vessel which is 1,600 tons gross or more. An example of the application of this exception is the case of a shipyard facility in the business of building and repairing commercial towboats under 1,600 tons gross among work on other vessels, such as patrol boats, utility vessels, ferries, Corps of Engineers dredges, or pressure barges; provided, however, that none of these vessels may be 1,600 tons gross or more—except commercial barges which, under the first exception discussed, may also be up to 900 lightship displacement tons. The third exception category deals with recreational vessels under 65 feet in length.

If the shipyard operation is engaged in work on a vessel larger than the sizes specified in the amendment, the exclusion from Longshore Act coverage is inapplicable and the otherwise excluded small vessel activity as well would be subject to Longshore Act coverage during the entire period the shipyard facility is engaged in work on the large vessel—for example, a motorized utility boat more than 1,600 tons gross.

Finally, a shipyard operation may qualify for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage under more than one of the exceptions discussed above depending upon the types and sizes of vessels involved. A shipyard facility may, for instance, be in the business of building and repairing commercial barges under 900 lightship displacement long tons and towboats under 1,600 tons gross and qualify for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage.

A significant additional limitation on the small vessel builder and repairer exclusion from coverage is that the exclusion applies only with respect to work on areas landward of the navigable waters. The exclusion does not apply to work conducted over-the-water and such work will continue to be subject to Longshore Act coverage.

I would also like to comment on an issue addressed in the committee floor amendment. Section 7 of the Longshoremen's Act offers injured or ill employees "medical, surgical, and other attendance or treatment." This scope of benefits is adequate for most workers. However, this creates a potential problem for Christian Scientists, who in accordance with their recognized religion do not generally rely upon medical treatment for injuries and illnesses. To avoid this problem, the committee floor amendment contains a provision allowing an employee to rely, in good faith, on treatment by prayer or spiritual means alone, in accordance with the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination, by an accredited practitioner, including appropriate nursing services. Such treatment would be authorized without suffering loss or diminution of compensation benefits under the act.

This is actually not an unprecedented provision. The workers' compensations laws of many States routinely authorize treatment for claims of Christian Scientists. Such States include Illinois, Connecticut, Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin, Indiana, as well as the District of Columbia. Moreover, it is noted that the medicare program reimburses Christian Science sanatoriums for their care and treatment on the same basis as medical hospitals and nursing homes. Christian Science benefits are also included in the medicaid program as well, and the CHAMPUS program of health benefits for military dependents and retirees also makes specific provision for Christian Science practitioners, nurses, and sanatoriums. The Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan has long paid Christian Science claims without any administrative difficulties. Finally, Christian Science benefits are routinely paid in nearly all group health insurance plans including plans by all major carriers—Prudential, Metropolitan, Aetna, Mutual of Omaha, Connecticut General, John Hancock, Allstate. They have found from an actuarial standpoint that this type of coverage is much less expensive than medical care. Utilization rates are low and malingering is almost nonexistent.

I would like to emphasize that there is nothing in this amendment that eliminates the requirement under the act that a claimant prove his claim by the submission of competent objective evidence of his medical condition. The amendment in fact contains a provision requiring that a person submit to physical examinations required under the act.

The amendment also contains a provision making clear that a claimant who avails himself of treatment authorized by the amendment shall not be deemed to have unreasonably refused medical or surgical treatment or to have unreasonably refused to undergo vocational rehabilitation.

In closing, I would like to single out for special commendation the efforts of Senator NICKLES, the chairman of the Labor Subcommittee, and Senator, NUNN. These distinguished Members spearheaded the longshore reform effort through the introduction of S. 1182 in the last session and through the extensive hearings on the problems of the act. I also want to recognize the invaluable contributions of Senator KENNEDY and other Members on the Labor Committee. It was through their diligent efforts that a satisfactory compromise was forged.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1161

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send technical amendments to the desk on behalf of the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH), and ask that these amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) on behalf of Mr. HATCH, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1161.

On page 62, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new subsection:

(e) Section 7 (as amended by subsection (d)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) Nothing in this Act prevents an employee whose injury or disability has been established under this Act, from relying in good faith, on treatment by prayer or spiritual means alone, in accordance with the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination, by an accredited practitioner of such recognized church or religious denomination, and on nursing services rendered in accordance with such tenets and practice, without suffering loss or diminution of the compensation benefits under this Act. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to except the employee from all physical examinations required by this Act.

"(2) If an employee refuses to submit to medical or surgical services solely because, in adherence to the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination, the employee relies upon prayer or spiritual means alone for healing, such employee shall not be considered to have unreasonably refused medical or surgical treatment under subsection (d) or to have unreasonably refused to undergo vocational rehabilitation under section 8(g)(3).".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these technical amendments be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (UP No. 1161) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1162

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send a second amendment to the desk on behalf of the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), on behalf of the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH), proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1162.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 51, line 12, strike out "(iv)" and insert in lieu thereof "(iii)".

On page 53, strike out lines 1 through 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(I) solely and exclusively because they are in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling—

"(aa) commercial barges under nine hundred lightship displacement tons used or intended for use on the inland waters of the continental United States as defined in section 311(a)(16) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1321(a)(16)) but not other vessel which is one thousand six hundred tons gross or more;

"(bb) commercial tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels under one thousand six hundred tons gross but no other vessel which is one thousand six hundred tons gross or more; or

"(cc) any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length but no other vessel which is sixty-five feet in length or more; while upon any pier, wharf, building wav, marine railway, graving dock shop, or any other facility or area over land customarily used in ship repairing, shipbuilding, or shipbreaking; and

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senators LONG, HEFLIN, and BENTSEN, to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), on behalf of Mr. LONG, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. BENTSEN, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1163.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1, line 8, beginning with "used" strike out through "1321(a)(16))" on line 12.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment, on behalf of myself and Senators BENTSEN, and HEFLIN, would delete certain language presently included in the committee amendment which limits the exclusion from Longshore Act coverage for builders and repairers of commercial barges "used or intended for use on the inland waters of the continental United States as defined for use on the inland waters of the continental United States as defined in section 311(a)(16) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act." This definition and limitation on the availability of the exclusion from coverage is exceedingly rigid and essentially would limit building and repair activity to barges used on the inland waterways.

Senators BENTSEN, HEFLIN, and I, particularly, have called attention to the substantial adverse effect of this limitation on builders and repairers of commercial barges located in the Coastal States where such vessels are frequently engaged in the coastal trades. The committee amendment, as presently constituted, would afford no relief to those small vessel facilities. In that sense, it would discriminate against facilities located in coastal areas in favor of identical facilities located in the interior States. The committee certainly had no intention to establish such an inconsistent treatment for these builders and repairers and I appreciate very much the efforts of Senators BENTSEN and HEFLIN in joining me in addressing the need for this correction to the committee proposal. The amendment therefore, would strike this limitation and provide that the builders and repairers of commercial barges will be treated similarly regardless of their location provided, however, that they are able to meet the size limitations remaining in the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the second degree.

The amendment (UP No. 1163) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment (UP No. 1162) as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources to S. 1182, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act Amendments of 1982. I wish to commend my distinguished colleagues, Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, and NICKLES, for engaging in the successful bi-partisan effort to bring this measure before the Senate today. It is gratifying that the committee was able to resolve the many difficult issues inherent in the consideration of this matter and to report a bill such as this by unanimous vote.

I am paticularly pleased that the committee amendment provides an exclusion from Longshore Act coverage for small vessel shipbuilding and repairing operations. These operations often are engaged in general fabrication as well as shipbuilding and they have, since 1972, found it difficult to compete with other general fabricators not subject to coverage under the Longshore Act. Some of these facilities are in Missouri and I have been increasingly concerned by their declining economic activity and the consequent loss of job opportunities. The exclusion provided by the Committee amendment will enable these shipyards to be more competitive, and thereby to secure existing job opportunities in the declining shipbuilding market while opening up perhaps additional opportunities in other areas not now economically viable and attainable.

The committee amendment essentially excludes from Longshore Act coverage those small shipyards which are in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling small vessels as specified in the amendment. The exclusion does not apply with respect to work over-the-water, and such work will be covered by the Longshore Act as it was before the 1972 amendments. It is fortunate that the agencies responsible for administering this law, as well as courts which are called upon to resolve questions arising thereunder, will have the benefit of the experience with the pre-1972 law in order to resolve some of the difficult coverage questions that inevitably will occur with respect to employees who are engaged in employment both on land and over-the-water.

One of the significant limiting features to the availability of the exclusion is that all of the shipbuilding, repairing, or dismantling activity at the shipyard facility must be associated with small vessels as described by the amendment. If a shipyard in engaged in building or repair work, for instance, on a vessel larger than the relevant size specified by the committee amendment, the shipyard operation may not avail itself of the exclusion from Longshore Act coverage until such time as work on the "disqualified" vessel is concluded. Thus, the provision essentially contains a rolling "all or nothing" clause which looks to current work activity at the shipyard facility in order to ascertain whether work on a "large" vessel is taking place which would deny this exclusion from Longshore Act coverage to the facility during the period of building or repair work activity on the larger vessel.

The vessels which may qualify a shipyard for exclusion under this provision include commercial barges, tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels, or recreational vessels. Under one test, commercial barge size is limited to 900 lightship displacement tons. Under another test, the work vessels are subject to a 1,600-ton gross test. The recreational vessel exception contains a length qualification. A shipyard may qualify for exclusion from coverage by meeting any one or more of the specific exception categories contained in the committee amendment. This, I believe, is a desirable and necessarily flexible means of taking into account the different product mix among these shipyards which are located throughout the United States.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the committee amendment, and I again would like to compliment those Senators I mentioned earlier as well as all members of the committee who obviously expended considerable effort and attention to offering these improvements to a very important Federal law.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am pleased that we are today considering passage of S. 1182, a bill to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. Senator NUNN and I originally introduced this legislation on May 14, 1981. Since that time, the Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, of which I am the chairman, held 4 days of hearings on S. 1182. Witnesses representing a broad spectrum of interests presented their views at that time.

On October 28, 1981, the Labor Subcommittee marked up S. 1182 and referred it to the full committee for final markup. This was not accomplished until May 25, 1982. During this approximate 6 month interval, many compromises in the bill were reached. The final product was passed unanimously by voice vote of the full committee, and strikes a balance among the needs of labor, management, and government. I want to thank Senator KENNEDY and his staff for their work in reaching this final compromise which we are considering today.

S. 1182 addresses many of the concerns raised at the hearings. First, the amendments attempt to make the Longshoremen's Act insurable. Testimony received at the hearings indicated that many business concerns covered by the Longshore Act are unable to obtain insurance and must therefore self-insure. This program is unique in that it is a federally mandated workers' compensation program which is administered by the Department of Labor but paid for by the private sector. One of the main problems in obtaining insurance is that the current jurisdictional boundaries are unclear.

S. 1182 addresses this problem by listing exceptions from coverage. Uncertainty as to the parameters resulted in increased coverage costs as insurers were uncertain as to which employees were covered by the State workers' compensation program and which were under Longshore. S. 1182 helps eliminate this uncertainty.

Another problem in insuring the current act is a provision allowing unrelated death benefits. This type of coverage is a matter for life insurance, not workers' compensation and is therefore eliminated in S. 1182. Death Benefits which are payable to survivors under the act currently do not contain a maximum limitation as do benefits for injured workers. As a result, survivors can receive more than the deceased could have received had he lived. This inequity is eliminated.

The current definition of "wage earning capacity" which includes potential future wage loss presents another insurance problem. Estimating these future wages has resulted in inequities for all parties. Therefore, it has been eliminated. Procedures to modify an award have been changed as well so that when future conditions become clear, then the claimant can have his wage loss adjusted to meet these conditions.

In addition, employers and insurance carriers must pay an annual assessment into a special fund which then pays for second injuries to a claimant. This concept of eliminating a deterrent to hiring an injured worker has broad support. The special fund assures that the employer is not liable for more than the injury which occurred while the employee was employed by that employer. Hearings indicated, however, that this special fund is not adequately protected and is being raided by questionable claims. Annual expenses from this fund have escalated from $23,000 in 1972 to $18 million in 1980. As a result, S. 1182 establishes a Conservation Committee to protect this fund. Members of this committee are to be paid from these assessments to the fund and not by tax dollars. In this manner, those making the assessments into the fund are able to protect their payments.

Finally, one of the biggest obstacles to obtaining insurance has been the fact that benefits escalate each year according to changes in the national average weekly wage. This lack of certainty provides the largest obstacle in predicting future payouts. The fact that benefits should increase to counter inflation is not debated. To provide certainty, however, this annual escalation of benefits is capped at 5 percent.

Another troublesome aspect of current law is that settlement of survivor's benefit cases is not permitted. Also, current settlements may be approved by a deputy commissioner only if he finds that the settlement is in the best interest of the injured employee. This is true even if the injured employee agrees to the settlement. The bill authorizes settlements of survivors' claims as well as injured employers' claims for compensation and future medical benefits, if the parties so agree. Under S. 1182, no settlement may be disapproved unless the Deputy Commissioner finds it to be inadequate or procured by duress. These amendments reduce unnecessary and costly litigation and speed up the delivery of compensation benefits. Under S. 1182 when the parties agree to settle a claim, approval shall be granted by the Deputy Commissioner within 30 days.

Rehabilitation of an injured worker is one of the prime purposes of workers' compensation. Consistent with that purpose of returning an injured worker to the labor market, rehabilitation has been made mandatory. Under S. 1182, refusal of vocational rehabilitation without adequate reason, unless it is unnecessary or unavailable, will result in suspension of compensation payments.

A number of changes have been made in section 7 which regulates medical care. Throughout, however, the right of the claimant to choose an attending physician has been retained as under current law.

In an effort to limit the opportunity for potential misuse of the process, the new sections require the Secretary to refuse authorization for physicians for purposes of treatment where the particular medical provider has been indicted or convicted of criminal fraud or has violated Federal regulations in connection with medical care programs such as medicaid or its equivalents. Exclusion from such a program will also result in removal as well from the Secretary's authorized list. Exclusion may also result, after notice and hearing, if the physician makes a false statement in connection with any service provided under the act or submits a bill substantially in excess of the charges prevailing in the community or provides a service substantially in excess of the claimants needs. Those providers who are no longer authorized shall have their names published by the Secretary for distribution to the various districts.

Under the new amendment, the injured worker can make an initial choice of physician, but may not thereafter change physicians without the approval of the employer or carrier. Such approval is to be given, however, when the initial choice was of a general practitioner and a specialist's services are thereafter required.

Other potential areas of abuse were uncovered by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. These problems also are addressed in S. 1182. For example, testimony at the hearings as well as evidence gathered from those charged with administering the act indicated that attempts have been made by some individuals to procure benefits through fraudulent means. Similarly, there is a significant body of evidence to indicate that employers and insurance carriers, on occasion, have denied benefits or substantially delayed their delivery through equally illegal methods. This section attempts to reduce the incentive to acquire or deny benefits through illegal means. Stringent penalties, including fines of up to $25,000 and jail terms not to exceed 3 years, have been introduced to replace the light level of punishment available under earlier law. The existence of these penalties should curb potential abuses of the system by all parties, resulting in the prompt disposition of all deserving claims.

Also, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to license persons representing claimants and may deny this right to a person who has been convicted of a crime in a State or Federal court, who gives substantially inaccurate information on an application for such a license, who solicits false testimony with respect to a claim, and for other similar reasons. This provision addresses the problems of certain persons soliciting employees covered by the act to file questionable claims.

Further, a disabled employee has the obligation to report to his employer not less than semi-annually any earning from employment. If he fails to report, when requested, or knowingly and willfully omits or understates any part of such earnings, then that employee forfeits his right to compensation with respect to any period during which the employee was required to file a report. This provision is in response to the problem of a disabled employee receiving workers' compensation benefits while he has actually returned to gainful employment.

Current law prohibits discrimination against any person who files a claim under the Longshore Act. On its face, this appears reasonable. It has resulted, however, in coercing an employer to retain an employee who has filed fraudulent claims to recover benefits. S. 1182 removes this and allows both the discharge and the refusal to employ any person who has been adudicated to have filed a fraudulent claim for compensation under the act.

Finally, amendments are made both to the notice provisions and the presumption section to address potential areas of abuse which were discussed at the hearings.

The amendments to the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act embodied in S. 1182 and which we are considering today are extensive. Every effort has been made to balance the competing interests in this important piece of legislation. I have today discussed the highlights of this often complex and technical bill. I urge your support in getting these changes enacted into law.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I should like to speak in support of S. 1182 and encourage my colleagues to vote for this urgently needed legislation. This bill deserves our most serious consideration. It is a bipartisan compromise and long awaited for reform of the act.

Longshore reform is very much needed. The cost of the act has gotten completely out of control, and S. 1182 will help control those costs and make other needed improvements in the program. Problems with the Longshore Act began with the passage of the 1972 amendments. Those changes have had extremely adverse effects on covered businesses. Only 5 years after the amendments were passed, reported injuries jumped 185 percent and the number of claims increased along with them, from 72,000 in 1972 to 205,000 by 1977. Similarly, the cost of benefits has increased 551 percent since 1972. During the same period, the cost of living has increased only 97 percent. The rise in the cost of benefits has meant a rise in the cost of premiums to covered employers. Covered employers have now been forced into self-insurance at great cost to their companies.

The benefits provided under this act are among the highest paid by any federally mandated workmen's compensation program and are much higher than under State workmen's compensation. In fact, the high benefit structure of the Longshore Act has made this not only a workmen's compensation program, it has grown, inappropriately, into a life insurance and pension program as well.

The Longshore Act has not proved to be the model and uniform compensation program it was represented to be when the 1972 amendments were passed, but S. 1182 will help us to move closer toward that goal.

I will make one more brief comment on the need for reform and then I would like to take a moment to outline some of the features of S. 1182 that will help to control the cost of the act and to improve its administration.

The high cost of insurance or self-insurance to those who are covered by this act has weakened the U.S. position that growers and others traders have in overseas markets. Stevedoring costs have skyrocketed during the past 10 years and growers (who have long been dependent on loading for shipment from U.S. ports) have been forced to increase prices for their products. The overriding factor in these costs have been per-hour longshore costs. On items which require extensive handcare such as apples, the cost can run as high as 25 percent of the wholesale price. As a result, business has dropped in American ports and commerce has been diverted to Canada and Mexico. Some experts estimate the value of lost commerce to be as high as $1 billion annually.

S. 1182 will make a major step toward correcting these problems. I am very pleased that the committee has decided that to retain traditional coverage for longshoremen, harbor workers, and others who work over or on the water. The only groups now removed from coverage are those who are better served by State workmen's compensation and who were never intended to be covered by the 1972 amendments. In addition, S. 1182 will limit the annual escalation of benefits to 5 percent. This will make forecasting longshore costs more predictable so that employers can better prepare for future losses. Equally important, unrelated death benefits will be eliminated from the program. This is a benefit which does not properly belong in a workmen's compensation program.

S. 1182 will also provide for disqualification of providers of medical services who submit excessive or fraudulent bills. Penalties for other fraud and misrepresentation will be increased. And the bill mandates vocational rehabilitation for those who are able to participate. Under current law, even employees who are fully recovered are not required to participate in vocational rehabilitation, but are allowed to remain on compensation.

In closing, I would again like to voice my fullest support for S. 1182. I would also like to commend the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, Senator NICKLES, for his work on the bill and for his fine leadership as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor. I know that Senator NICKLES has been the single most persuasive advocate of reform of this act and that he has worked many hours to develop this bipartisan compromise. I plan to support this bill and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I fully endorse and urge the Senate's approval today of S. 1182, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act Amendments of 1982. I joined Senator NICKLES in introducing that legislation before the Senate on May 14, 1981, in an attempt to fairly and effectively remedy serious and proven shortcomings in our present system of workmen's compensation for waterfront workers. I commend Senator NICKLES, as chairman of the Senate Labor Subcommittee, as well as his staff, for the many long hours they have spent examining the deficiencies in our present system and fine tuning this bill to adequately remedy those deficiencies.

S. 1182, the product of their efforts, is a comprehensive revision of the current provisions of the Federal Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act. The act has come under increasingly strong criticism in recent years for the extremely high insurance costs which the act has generated as opposed to costs under other workmen's compensation systems. In the light of those criticisms, the reforms suggested in S. 1182 are undoubtedly long overdue.

My own particular interests in this bill stem from my work as ranking minority member and former chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. In that capacity, I had occasion to become especially familiar with the problems of the American waterfront and, moreover, factual evidence which I believe in part demonstrates the need for the provisions of S. 1182.

Under my direction, the subcommittee staff conducted an extensive investigation of corruption in American waterfront industries. Our witness interviewing and evidence gathering concentrated in ports on the eastern seaboard, particularly New York and Miami, and culminated in 5 days of public hearings before the subcommittee in February 1981. Those hearings included testimony which detailed the ease with which the act could be fraudulently manipulated at the expense of the honest longshoreman, his employer, as well as the American consumer. We heard of the skyrocketing costs of insurance and workmen's compensation claims under the act on the New York/New Jersey waterfront. Those costs were the direct result of a fraudulent claims racket which flourished under the statutory loopholes in the current act. During the course of the hearings, we learned that the astronomical costs of claims filed under the act had indeed driven some stevedoring companies out of business, had rendered others literally uninsurable, and posed a continuing threat to the economic survival of many more.

As a result of such testimony, Senator RUDMAN and I, at the close of the hearings, strongly recommended that the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act be amended to prevent future abuse and restore cost levels under the act to reasonable and fair levels.

In today urging Senate approval of S. 1182, I commend this legislation as one way in which Congress can effectively act to eliminate the type of abuse we saw in our waterfront hearings. Although the bill includes comprehensive revisions of the entire act, there are several sections directly responsible to problems confronted in our hearings. The need for each of those sections was specifically and amply established by the testimony and evidence produced at our hearings.

One such feature of the bill is revision in the procedures for physician selection, designation of ineligible physicians by the Secretary, examinations and reexaminations of questioned claimants and other medical evaluations designed to insure payment for valid claims only. By requiring monitoring of periodic medical reports and providing for debarment of participating physicians by the Secretary, the bill will serve to insure the integrity of the treating physician.

In another area, our hearings identified the automatic presumption of validity for any claim filed now in the act as one of the main factors contributing to the success of the fraudulent claims racket. Time and again we heard that the presumption, sometime triggered by the mere existence of a physical injury, presented a nearly insurmountable hurdle for an employer who attempts to dispute the validity of an apparently fraudulent claim. The bill will apply that presumption on a far more selective basis, by specifically providing that the mere existence of a physical impairment alone is insufficient to establish a claim and the accompanying presumption.

The bill also raises the criminal penalty for misrepresentation in the submission of a claim from a misdemeanor to a felony punishable by up to 3-years imprisonment, a fine of $25,000, or both. Again this change was specifically and repeatedly recommended and justified during the course of our hearings.

Lastly, the bill amends the current antidiscrimination section of the act to prevent the levy of a penalty against any employer who dismisses an employee for the filing of a claim shown to have been fraudulent. As the act now stands, such an employer is subject to a penalty of up to $1,000 and reimbursement of lost wages of the employee. No distinction is currently made between the dismissal of an employee who had filed a valid claim and one who had filed an obviously fraudulent claim. The unfairness to the employer of the present provision is obvious.

In addition to sections dealing directly with the problem of fraud, S. 1182 offers a number of other legislative revisions of the act which our hearings did not specifically deal with. I understand that the Senate Labor Subcommittee, as well as the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, has given careful review and consideration to those proposals. Based on that careful review, the bill is now before us with appropriate and well-reasoned committee approval.

The facts are clear that significant and disturbing problems exist as a result of certain current provisions of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act. I believe that S. 1182 is a fair and well-reasoned response to those problems. Congress should act now by passage of this bill to correct those problems and to arrive at a statutory solution which will fairly serve the interests of both labor and management.

Mr. President, in closing I wish to thank Senator NICKLES for taking a lead in this area and for his fine and persistent efforts on this most important issue.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to commend Senator NICKLES for his hard work in guiding the 1982 Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers Compensation Act through the Subcommittee on Labor and the full Labor and Human Resources Committee. He and his staff, particularly Rick Lawson and Chuck Carroll, have developed a legislative proposal with bipartisan committee support.

Florida's maritime industry has been severely damaged by abuses following adoption of the 1972 amendments to the Longshoremen's Compensation Act. Ambiguous wording in the statute on coverage and unfortunate court interpretations have broadened the scope of the act far beyond its original intent.

In fact, the Longshoremen's Act is a textbook example of misguided Federal action. While the goals of the act are commendable, the actual result is destructive. No one can quarrel with a desire to provide low-cost, personal industry coverage to dockworkers. Certainly when the bill was introduced in 1927, workmen's compensation programs were woefully inadequate in most of the harbors in the Nation. Unfortunately, the correctives applied to the 1927 situation choke a vital industry today.

In Florida, we are particularly conscious of the danger. Florida is an agricultrual State. We export produce, which is a highly competitive industry, sensitive to labor handling costs. Anything that elevates handling costs destroys our competitive position, costing us markets and jobs. There can be no debate, the Longshoremen's Act raises these costs artificially.

During Labor Subcommittee hearings, we heard disturbing testimony concerning payments of tax-free benefits so high they discourage working. We learned that death benefits are paid though death is not work-related we also learned that organized crime benefits from sweetheart doctor-client relationships. Finally, the extension of coverage for beyond the stevedores originally covered was documented. I believe that Senator NICKLES has drafted legislation that will create a compensation program free from most of these defects. It certainly will better meet the needs of our work force and our industry.

This issue should not be seen in labor management terms. I know of no company that wants to subject its workers to unsafe conditions. But competitive facts are facts, and this legislation is needed to reduce the costs of a program that have gone as high as $20,000 per person per year.

In Florida and in California, we compete with Mexico; New York and the New England States compete with Canada. Therefore, workers stand to gain more than anyone by a rational restructuring of this program. Without reform, they will lose their jobs to Canada or Mexico, and owners will lose their businesses.

Again, I think Senator NICKLES should be commended for his excellent work in drafting this bill and guiding it through the Senate. He has accomlished legislative reforms in areas that were found deficient over 20 years ago. I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, over the last several years, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act has been the subject of serious controversy in the Senate. During extensive hearings before the Labor and Human Resources Committee and other congressional committees, employers and insurance carriers have argued that the act is too expensive, too unclear in its coverage, and it was vulnerable to abuse. We were urged to adopt a series of amendments which, in my judgment, would have been very harmful for employees.

Employees and labor organizations strongly opposed these amendments because they would have excluded thousands of workers from coverage, compelled them to accept treatment from employer-approved physicians, and made it much easier for employers to deny legitimate claims.

Despite the highly charged character of this controversy, however, it became clear earlier this year that a compromise could be achieved.

The bill before us is the product of many months of discussion and negotiations in pursuit of that goal. I believe it represents a reasonable solution to the problems raised by employers while at the same time preserving the basic benefit structure of the law and insuring that injured workers in the very hazardous industries covered by the Longshore Act will continue to receive fair and equitable treatment.

The Senator from Oklahoma is to be congratulated for his diligence in pursuing the reform of the Longshore Act and I want to thank him for his cooperation in working to fashion an acceptable compromise. I believe his bill deserves the support of the Senate. I am confident that the House is prepared to consider it in an expeditious manner and I am hopeful that final action will be completed in the very near future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1182

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act Amendments of 1982".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 2(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The term 'employee' means any person directly engaged in maritime employment, including any longshoreman or other person engaged in longshoring operations, and any harbor-worker including a ship repairman, shipbuilder, and shipbreaker, but such term does not include—

"(A) any ship repairman, shipbuilder, or shipbreaker engaged by employers described in section 2(4)(B)(iii);

"(B) employees exclusively performing office clerical, secretarial, security, or data processing work;

"(C) club, camp, restaurant, museum, retail outlet, and marina personnel;

"(D) personnel of suppliers, transporters, or vendors temporarily doing business on the premises of employers described in section 2(4)(A);

"(E) aquaculture workers;

"(F) any person engaged in operating an independently or cooperatively owned grain elevator and who is not engaged in the loading or unloading of a vessel;

"(G) any person employed to build or repair any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length;

"(H) a master or member of a crew of any vessel; or

"(I) any person engaged by a master to load or unload or repair any small vessel under eighteen tons net;

if employees described in clauses (A) through (G) are subject to coverage under a State workers' compensation law.".

(b) Section 2(4) is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) The term 'employer' means an employer any of whose employees are directly employed in maritime employment, in whole or in part, upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, building, or breaking a vessel).

"(B) The term employer does not include—

"(i) clubs, camps, restaurants, museums, retail outlets, or marinas;

"(ii) aquaculture farms;

"(iii) employers or operations of employers who otherwise would be described by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph—

"(I) solely and exclusively because they are in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling—

"(aa) commercial barges under nine hundred lightship displacement tons but no other vessel which is one thousand six hundred tons gross or more;

"(bb) commercial tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, or fishing vessels under one thousand six hundred tons gross but no other vessel which is one thousand six hundred tons gross or more; or

"(cc) any recreational vessel under sixty-five feet in length but no other vessel which is sixty-five feet in length or more;

while upon any pier, wharf, building way, marine railway, graving dock, shop, or any other facility or area over land customarily used in ship repairing, shipbuilding, or shipbreaking; and

"(II) if the operations of employers described in subdivision (I) do not receive Federal maritime subsidies.".

(c) Section 2(13) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) The term "wages" means the money rate at which the service rendered by an employee is compensated by an employer under the contract of hiring in force at the time of the injury, including the reasonable value of any advantage which is received from the employer and included for purposes of any withholding of tax under subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to employment taxes). The term wages does not include fringe benefits, including but not limited to employer payments for or contributions to a retirement, pension, health and welfare, life insurance, training, social security or other employee or dependent benefit fund or trust for the employee's or dependent's benefit, or any other employee's dependent entitlement.".

COVERAGE

SEC. 3. Section 3(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Compensation shall be payable under this Act in respect of disability or death of an employee, but only if the disability or death results from an injury occurring upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by the employer in loading, unloading, repairing, or building a vessel). No compensation shall be payable in respect of the disability or death of—

"(1) any employee described in section 2(3) (A) through (I) of this Act; or

"(2) an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof or any State or foreign government, or of any political subdivision thereof.".

(b) Section 3 is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any amounts paid by any employer for the same injury, disability, or death for which benefits are claimed under this Act pursuant to any other workers' compensation law or section 20 of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1185, chapter 153; 46 U.S.C. 688) (relating to recovery for injury to or death of seamen) shall be credited against any liability imposed by this Act.".

EXCLUSIVENESS OF REMEDY AND THIRD PARTY LIABILITY

SEC. 4. (a) Section 5(a) is amended by inserting after the word "liability" the second time it appears the following: "including any liability imposed by or arising out of any other workers' compensation law or section 20 of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1185, chapter 153; 46 U.S.C. 688)".

(b)(1) The third sentence of section 5(b) is amended to read as follows: "If such person was employed to provide ship building, repairing, or breaking services and such person's employer was the owner, owner pro hac vice, agent, operator, or charterer of the vessel, no such action shall be permitted, in whole or in part or directly or indirectly, against the injured person's employer (in any capacity, including as the vessel's owner, owner pro hac vice, agent, operator, or charterer) or against the employees of the employer.".

(2) Section 2(21) is amended by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "Unless the context requires otherwise, the".

(c) Section 5 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In the event that the negligence of a third party causes injury to a person entitled to receive benefits under this chapter by virtue of section 4 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1333), then such person, or anyone otherwise entitled to recover damages by reason thereof, may bring an action against such third party in accordance with the provisions of section 33 of this Act. Nothing contained in this chapter, or in any otherwise applicable State law, shall preclude the enforcement according to its terms of any written agreement under which the employer has agreed to indemnify such third party in whole or in part with respect to such action.".

COMPENSATION

SEC. 5. (a) Section 6(b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Compensation for disability or death shall not exceed an amount equal to 200 per centum of the applicable national average weekly wage, as determined by the Secretary under subsection (b)(3).".

(b) Section 6 is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (c) and redesignating subsection (d) (and any references thereto) as subsection (c); and

(2) by striking out "under this subsection" in subsection (c) (as redesignated) and inserting in lieu thereof "under subsection (b)(3)".

MEDICAL SERVICES AND SUPPLIES

SEC. 6. (a) The penultimate sentence of section 7(b) is amended by inserting before the period the following: "or where the charges exceed those prevailing within the community for the same or similar services".

(b) Section 7(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1)(A) The Secretary shall annually prepare a list of physicians in each compensation district who are not authorized to render medical care under this Act. The names of physicians contained on the list required under this subparagraph shall be made available to employees and employers in each compensation district through posting or in such form as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(B) The Secretary may refuse to authorize any physician who, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (j)(1) of this section, and shall refuse to authorize any physician who, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (j)(2) of this section, has been found ineligible to receive payments under this Act. A physician not authorized under this Act shall not be entitled to reimbursement for any service, appliance, or supply or to recover any amount with respect to any such service, appliance, or supply from any employee.

"(2) Whenever the employer or carrier acquires knowledge of the employee's injury, through written notice or otherwise as prescribed by the Act, the employer or carrier shall forthwith authorize medical treatment and care from a physician selected by an employee pursuant to subsection (b). An employee may not select a physician who is on the list required by paragraph (1) of this subsection. An employee may not change physicians after his initial choice unless the employer, carrier, or deputy commissioner has given prior consent for such change. Such consent shall be given in cases where an employee's initial choice was not of a specialist whose services are necessary for and appropriate to the proper care and treatment of the compensable injury or disease. In all other cases, consent may be given upon a showing of good cause for change.".

(c) Section 7(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) An employee shall not be entitled to recover any amount expended by him for medical or other treatment or services unless he shall have complied with subsections (b) and (c) and the applicable regulations or unless the employer shall have refused or neglected to furnish such services, or unless the nature of the injury required such treatment and services and the employer or his superintendent or foreman having knowledge of such injury shall have neglected to provide or authorize same; nor shall any claim for medical or surgical treatment be valid and enforceable against such employer, unless within twenty-one days following the first treatment the physician giving such treatment furnishes to the employer and the deputy commissioner a report of such injury or treatment, on a form prescribed by the Secretary. The Secretary may excuse the failure to furnish such report within the twenty-one-day period whenever he finds it to be in the interest of justice to do so. The Secretary may, upon application by a party in interest, make an award for the reasonable value of such medical or surgical treatment so obtained by the employee. If at any time the employee unreasonably refuses to submit to medical or surgical treatment, or to an examination by a physician selected by the employer, the Secretary or administrative law judge may, by order, suspend the payment of further compensation during such time as such refusal continues, and no compensation shall be paid at any time during the period of such suspension, unless the circumstances justified the refusal.".

(d) Section 7 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, no liability shall arise under this Act for a service, appliance, or supply furnished by an individual or entity where the Secretary determines under this subsection that a provider—

"(A) has knowingly and willfully made, or caused to be made, a false statement or representation of a material fact in connection with any services provided under this Act;

"(B) has submitted, or caused to be submitted, a bill or request for payment under this Act containing a charge which the Secretary finds to be substantially in excess of the charge for the service, appliance, or supply prevailing within the community unless the Secretary finds there is good cause for the bill or request containing the charge; or

"(C) has furnished a service, appliance, or supply which is determined by the Secretary to be substantially in excess of the need of the recipient thereof or to be of a quality which fails to meet professionally recognized standards.

"(2) Liability shall not arise for a service, appliance, or supply furnished by a provider—

"(A) indicted or convicted under a criminal statute (without regard to pending appeal thereof) for fraudulent activities or (as determined by regulation of the Secretary) related activities, in connection with a program under which payments are made to providers for similar services, appliances, or supplies; or

"(B) otherwise excluded from participation in a program under which payments are made to providers for similar services, appliances, or supplies.

"(3) A provider of a service, appliance, or supply shall provide to the Secretary such information and certification as the Secretary may require to assure that this subsection is enforced.

"(4)(A) A determination made by the Secretary under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be effective—

"(i) in connection with any request for payment by a provider, upon notice consistent with paragraph (5); or

"(ii) in connection with a request for payment by anyone claiming benefits under this Act, only with respect to payment of expenses incurred after receipt of notice of the determination by such person.

"(B) A determination shall remain in effect until the Secretary finds and gives notice to the public that the basis for the determination has been removed, and that there is reasonable assurance that the basis for the determination will not reoccur.

"(5) The Secretary may make rules and regulations and establish procedures which are necessary or appropriate to carry out this subsection, including notice and opportunity for a hearing to the provider of a service, appliance, or supply, subject to a determination made by the Secretary under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection.".

(e) Section 7 (as amended by subsection (d)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) Nothing in this Act prevents an employee whose injury or disability has been established under this Act, from relying in good faith, on treatment by prayer or spiritual means alone, in accordance with the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination, by an accredited practitioner of such recognized church or religious denomination, and on nursing services rendered in accordance with such tenets and practice, without suffering loss or diminution of the compensation benefits under this Act. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to except the employee from all physical examinations required by this Act.

"(2) If an employee refuses to submit to medical or surgical services solely because, in adherence to the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination, the employee relies upon prayer or spiritual means alone for healing, such employee shall not be considered to have unreasonably refused medical or surgical treatment under subsection (d) or to have unreasonably refused to undergo vocational rehabilitation under section 8(g)(3).".

COMPENSATION FOR DISABILITY

SEC. 7. (a) Section 8(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Permanent total disability: In the case of total disability determined to be permanent, 66⅔ per centum of the average weekly wages of the employee shall be paid to the employee during the continuance of the disability, except that compensation paid to the injured employee shall be subject to section 6(b)(1) and shall be reduced by 50 per centum of the amount of old-age insurance benefits to which the employee is entitled under title II of the Social Security Act. Loss of both hands, both arms, both feet, both legs, both eyes, or any combination of two such body parts, shall constitute permanent total disability in the absence of conclusive proof to the contrary. In all other cases, permanent total disability shall be determined in accordance with the facts.".

(b) Section 8(c)(13) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) Loss of hearing:

"(A) Compensation for loss of hearing in one ear, fifty-two weeks.

"(B) Compensation for loss of hearing in both ears, two-hundred weeks.

"(C) An employer shall be liable to the employee only for the loss of hearing attributable to employment by the employer.

"(D) An audiogram shall be conclusive evidence of the amount of hearing loss sustained as of the date thereof, unless contrary audiograms made at that time are produced.

"(E) Within ninety days of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to define the term 'loss of hearing' in accordance with the American Medical Association Guides for the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment.".

(c) Section 8(c)(20) is amended by striking out "$3,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500".

(d) Section 8(c)(21) is amended to read as follows:

"(21) Other cases: In all other cases in this class of disability, the compensation shall be 66⅔ per centum of the difference between the average weekly wages of the employee and the employee's wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise payable during the continuance of the partial disability.".

(e) Section 8(d) is amended by striking out paragraph (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) (and any references thereto) as paragraph (3).

(f) Section 8(f) is amended—

(1) by striking out "one hundred and four weeks" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred and eight weeks"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Any request for second injury fund apportionment in accordance with section 8(f) must be presented to the deputy commissioner and the Conservator prior to consideration by an administrative law judge.".

(g) Subsections (g) through (i) of section 8 are amended to read as follows:

"(g) Compensation for employees undergoing vocational rehabilitation:

"(1) An employee who as a result of an injury is undergoing vocational rehabilitation for remunerative employment under the supervision of the deputy commissioner, pursuant to section 39(c), or with the approval of the employer, shall receive continued temporary total or partial compensation during the period of rehabilitation.

"(2) An award for permanent disability may not be entered before the deputy commissioner determines, or the employer and employee agree, that vocational rehabilitation is unnecessary or until after vocational rehabilitation has been completed.

"(3) If an employee unreasonably refuses to undergo vocational rehabilitation or to participate in a reasonable plan offered and financed by the employer to return the injured employee to work, the employee shall not be eligible to receive compensation payments that would otherwise be payable for the period of the refusal.

"(h) The wage-earning capacity of an injured employee in cases of disability shall be determined by his actual earnings if such actual earnings fairly and reasonably represent his wage-earning capacity: Provided, however, That if the employee has no actual earnings or his actual earnings do not fairly and reasonably represent his wage-earning capacity, the deputy commissioner may, in the interest of justice, fix such wage-earning capacity as shall be reasonable, having due regard to the nature of his injury, the degree of physical impairment, his usual employment, and any other factors or circumstances in the case which may affect his capacity to earn wages in his disabled condition.

"(i)(1) Whenever the parties to any claim for compensation, including survivors benefits, under this Act agree to a settlement, the deputy commissioner or administrative law judge shall approve the settlement within thirty days unless it is found to be inadequate or procured by duress. No liability of any employer, carrier, or both for disability or death benefits shall be discharged unless the application for settlement is approved by the deputy commissioner or administrative law judge. If the parties to the settlement are represented by counsel, then agreements shall be deemed approved unless specifically disapproved within thirty days after submission for approval.

"(2) If the deputy commissioner disapproves an application for settlement under paragraph (1), the deputy commissioner shall issue a written statement within 30 days containing the reasons for disapproval. Any party to the settlement may request a hearing before an administrative law judge in the manner prescribed by this Act. Following such hearing, an order shall be issued approving, rejecting, or modifying the deputy commissioner's decision. If the parties to the settlement are represented by counsel, then agreements shall be deemed approved unless specifically disapproved within thirty days after submission for approval.

"(3) A settlement approved under this section shall discharge the liability of the employer, carrier, or both. Such settlement may include future medical benefits if the parties so agree and the deputy commissioner approves. Settlements may be agreed upon at any stage of the proceeding including after entry of a final compensation order.".

(h) Section 8 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) The employer may inform a disabled employee of his obligation to report to the employer not less than semiannually any earnings from employment or self-employment, on such forms as the Secretary shall specify in regulations.

"(2) An employee who—

"(A) fails to report the employee's earnings under paragraph (1) when requested, or

"(B) knowingly and willfully omits or understates any part of such earnings, and who is determined by the deputy commissioner to have violated clause (A) or (B) of this paragraph, forfeits his right to compensation with respect to any period during which the employee was required to file such report.

"(3) Compensation forfeited under this subsection, if already paid, shall be recovered by a deduction from the compensation payable to the employee in any amount and on such schedule as determined by the deputy commissioner.".

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH

SEC. 8. (a) The matter preceding the colon in section 9 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. If the injury causes death, the compensation therefore shall be known as a death benefit and shall be payable in the amount and to or for the benefit of the persons following".

(b) Section 9(a) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,000".

(c) Section 9(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) In computing death benefits, the average weekly wages of the deceased shall not be less than the national average weekly wage as prescribed in section 6(b), except that the total weekly benefits shall not exceed the lesser of the average weekly wages of the deceased or the benefit which the deceased employee would have been eligible to receive under section 6(b)(1).".

DETERMINATION OF PAY

SEC. 9. Section 10(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Effective October 1 of each year following the date of enactment of this Act, the compensation or death benefits payable for permanent total disability or death arising out of injuries subject to this Act shall be increased—

"(1) by a percentage equal to the percentage (if any) by which the applicable national weekly wage for the period beginning on such October 1, as determined under section 6(b), exceeds the applicable national average weekly wage, as so determined, for the period beginning with the preceding October 1; or

"(2) by 5 per centum, whichever percentage is less.".

NOTICE OF INJURY OR DEATH

SEC. 10. (a) Section 12(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Notice of an injury or death in respect of which compensation is payable under this Act shall be given within thirty days after the date of such injury or death, or thirty days after the employee or beneficiary is aware or by reason of medical advice should have been aware of a relationship between the injury or death and the employment. Such notice shall be given (1) to the deputy commissioner in the compensation district in which the injury or death occurred, and (2) to the employer. Each employer shall designate those agents or other responsible officials, including first line supervisors, to receive such notice, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary and shall notify his employees of such designation in a manner prescribed by the Secretary in regulations.".

(b) Section 12(d) is amended by deleting "(or his agent in charge of the business in the place where the injury occurred)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(or his agent or agents or other responsible official or officials designated by the employer as designated under subsection (a))".

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

SEC. 11. (a) Section 14(b) is amended by striking out "employer" and inserting in lieu thereof "employer's agent or agents as designated under section 12(a)".

(b) Section 14 is amended by striking out subsection (j) and by redesignating subsections (k) and (l) (and any references thereto) as subsections (j) and (k), respectively.

PRESUMPTIONS

SEC. 12. Section 20 is amended as follows:

(1) by inserting before the period in subsection (b) a comma and the following: "except when the agent or agents or other responsible official or officials designated by the employer in section 12 (a) and (d) have not received actual or constructive notice", and

(2) by adding at the end of the section the following new sentence: "The mere existence of a physical impairment is insufficient to establish a claim under this Act.".

REVIEW OF COMPENSATION ORDER

SEC. 13. Section 21 is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end of subsection (b):

"(5) Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) through (4), upon application of the Chairman of the Board, the Secretary may designate up to four Department of Labor administrative law judges to temporarily serve on the Board. Any party aggrieved by the decisions of a panel or division of the Benefits Review Board may, within thirty days after the decision, petition the entire Board (permanent plus temporary members) for a rehearing en banc. Upon affirmative vote of the majority of the Board sitting en banc, the petition shall be granted. If a petition for a rehearing en banc is granted, and the vote of the Board sitting en banc results in a tie, the decision of the panel or division of the Board shall be affirmed. The Benefits Review Board shall amend its Rules of Practice to conform with this paragraph. Temporary members shall be compensated at the same rate of compensation as they were receiving prior to such temporary designation. Except when sitting en banc, and for the purpose of carrying out its adjudicative functions under this Act, two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum of a panel or division and official adjudicative action can be taken only on the affirmative vote of at least two members of a division or panel.".

MODIFICATIONS OF AWARDS

SEC. 14. Section 22 is amended by striking all after "the deputy commissioner may" through "rejection of a claim".

FEES FOR SERVICES

SEC. 15. (a) Section 28(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) A claim for legal services or for any other services provided to or on account of a person with respect to a claim for or award of compensation under this Act is not valid unless approved by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, the Board, or a court which is reviewing an order of an administrative law judge.".

(b) Section 28(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) A person who receives a fee, gratuity, or other consideration on account of services rendered as a representative of a claimant, unless the consideration is approved by the deputy commissioner, administrative law judge, Board, or court, or who makes it a business to solicit employment for a lawyer, or for himself, with respect to a claim or award for compensation under this Act, shall, upon conviction thereof, for each offense be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

REPORTS

SEC. 16. (a) Section 30(a) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the word "injury" a comma and the following: "which would cause loss of one or more shifts of work", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the requirements of this section, each employer shall keep a record of each and every injury regardless of whether such injury results in the loss of one or more shifts of work.".

(b) Section 30(e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Any employer, insurance carrier, or self-insured employer who willfully fails or refuses to send any report required by this section shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $25,000 for each such failure or refusal.".

PENALTY FOR MISREPRESENTATION—PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS

SEC. 17. Section 31 is amended to read as follows:

"PENALTY FOR MISREPRESENTATION—PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS

"SEC. 31. (a)(1) A person who willfully makes a false statement or representation for the purpose of obtaining a benefit or payment under this Act shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25,000, by imprisonment not to exceed three years, or both.

"(2) The United States attorney for the district in which the injury is alleged to have occurred shall make every reasonable effort to promptly investigate each complaint made under this subsection.

"(b)(1) A person may not prosecute or defend a claim other than his own under this Act other than a claimant, an attorney, a representative licensed by the Secretary, or an employee designated by an employer or carrier.

"(2) A person may not prosecute or defend a claim other than his own under this Act if the person—

"(A) is convicted of or pleads guilty to a crime in a State or Federal court;

"(B) gives false or substantially inaccurate information in an application for a license to prosecute or defend a claim under this Act;

"(C) conceals or attempts to conceal material facts with respect to a claim under this Act;

"(D) solicits or procures false testimony with respect to a claim under this Act; or

"(E) misappropriates funds or documents entrusted to the person with respect to a claim under this Act.

"(3) The Secretary shall issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(c) A person including, but not limited to, an employer, his duly authorized agent, or an employee of an insurance carrier who willfully makes a false statement or representation for the purpose of denying or terminating benefits to an injured employee, or his dependents pursuant to section 9 if the injury results in death, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25,000, by imprisonment not to exceed three years, or by both.".

SECURITY FOR COMPENSATION

SEC. 18. Section 32(a)(2) is amended by inserting "based on the employer's financial condition, the employer's previous record of payments, and other relevant factors," after "in an amount determined by the Secretary,".

COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES WHERE THIRD PERSONS ARE LIABLE

SEC. 19. (a) Section 33(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Acceptance of such compensation under an award in a compensation order filed by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board shall operate as an assignment to the employer of all rights of the person entitled to compensation to recover damages against such third person unless such person shall commence an action against such third person within six months after such award. For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'award' with respect to a compensation order means a formal order issued by the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board; if the employer fails to commence an action against such third person within a reasonable time after the cause of action is assigned under this section, the right to bring such action shall revert to the person entitled to compensation.".

(b) Section 33(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) If a person entitled to compensation under the Act institutes proceedings within the period described in subsection (b), the employer shall be required to pay, as compensation under this Act, a sum equal to the excess of the amount which the deputy commissioner, an administrative law judge, or Board determines is payable on account of the injury or death above the amount recovered in the proceedings against a third person.

"(2) Any amount recovered by the person entitled to compensation on account of the proceedings by judgment or settlement, whether or not the settlement is approved by the employer in accordance with subsection (g), shall be distributed as follows:

"(A) The person entitled to compensation shall pay to the employer an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) the cost of all benefits furnished to the person by the employer under section 7; and

"(ii) all other amounts payable as compensation or benefits under this Act.

"(B) The person entitled to compensation or the person's representative shall retain the amount remaining after the payment required by subparagraph (A).".

(c) Section 33(g) is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1) If the person entitled to compensation (or the person's representative) enters into a settlement with a third person referred to in subsection (a) for an amount less than the compensation to which the person (or the person's representative) would be entitled under this Act, the employer shall be liable for compensation as determined under subsection (f) only if written approval of the settlement is obtained from the employer and the employer's carrier, before the settlement is executed, and by the person entitled to compensation (or the person's representative). The approval shall be made on a form provided by the Secretary and shall be filed in the office of the deputy commissioner within thirty days after the settlement is entered into.

"(2) If no written approval of the settlement is obtained and filed as required by paragraph (1), or if the employee fails to notify the employer of any settlement obtained from or judgment rendered against a third person, all rights to compensation and medical benefits under this Act shall be terminated, regardless of whether the employer or the employer's insurer has made payments or acknowledged entitlement to benefits under this Act.

"(3) Payments by the special fund established under section 44 shall be a lien upon the proceeds of any settlement obtained from or judgment rendered against a third person referred to under subsection (a). Notwithstanding any other provision of law, such lien shall be enforceable against the employee, regardless of whether the Conservator on behalf of the special fund has agreed to or has received actual notice of the settlement or judgment.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 20. The Act is amended by inserting the following new section after section 42:

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 43. The Secretary shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report of the administration of this Act for the preceding fiscal year, including a detailed statement of receipts of and expenditures from the funds established in sections 44 and 45, together with such recommendations as the Secretary deems advisable.".

SPECIAL FUND CONSERVATION COMMITTEE—FUND CONSERVATOR

SEC. 21. Section 45 is amended to read as follows:

"SPECIAL FUND CONSERVATION COMMITTEE—FUND CONSERVATOR

"SEC. 45. (a)(1) There is established the Special Fund Conservation Committee (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Conservation Committee'). The Conservation Committee shall be responsible for protecting the financial integrity of the special fund established under section 44 (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'special fund') by insuring that all distributions from the special fund are made in accordance with this Act.

"(2)(A) The Conservation Committee shall be composed of five members appointed by the Secretary, who shall be representatives of carriers authorized under section 32, including self-insurers and representatives of employers.

"(B) The terms of office of the members of the Conservation Committee shall be three years, except that of the members first appointed, one member shall be appointed for a term of one year, two members shall be appointed for a term of two years, and two members shall be appointed for a term of three years, as determined by the Secretary at the time of appointment.

"(C) A vacancy on the Committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. A member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of the term. A member may serve after the expiration of the member's term until the member's successor has taken office.

"(D) Members of the Conservation Committee shall serve without pay and may not be reimbursed for any travel or transportation expenses.

"(E) The Chairman shall be elected by the members of the Conservation Committee.

"(F) The Conservation Committee shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members.

"(G) Upon request of the Conservation Committee, the Secretary shall provide such administrative services as the Committee shall require.

"(3)(A) The Conservation Committee may secure, directly from the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Board, and a deputy commissioner, information necessary to enable it to carry out this section, including copies of all official records and reports. Upon request of the Chairman of the Conservation Committee, the appropriate Secretary, the Chairman of the Board, or the deputy commissioner shall furnish the information to the Committee.

"(B) The Conservation Committee may provide (by contract) for the auditing of the account of the special fund. The Conservation Committee may secure directly from the Comptroller General of the United States information derived from an audit conducted pursuant to section 44(g). Upon request of the Chairman of the Conservation Committee, the Comptroller General shall furnish the information to the Conservation Committee.

"(4) The Conservation Committee may establish such policies and procedures as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"(5) The Conservation Committee shall transmit to the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, and to each House of Congress a report, not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, and each year thereafter. The report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Conservation Committee with regard to the financial integrity of the special fund, together with its recommendations for such legislative and administrative actions as it considers appropriate.

"(b)(1)(A) To carry out its responsibilities under this section, the Conservation Committee shall appoint a Fund Conservator (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Conservator').

"(B) The Conservation Committee may authorize the Conservator to take any action which the Conservation Committee is authorized to take under this section.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall cause notice to be given to the Conservator whenever a payment from the special fund is ordered by the Secretary or whenever an administrative or judicial proceeding in which a party to the proceeding seeks to establish a liability of the special fund is scheduled to convene. A proceeding on an application for apportionment under section 8(f) of this Act may not be convened less than thirty days after notice of the proceeding has been given to the Conservator, unless the Conservator waives the limitation in writing to the Secretary.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), the Conservator shall be a party in an administrative or judicial proceeding in which a party to the proceeding seeks to establish a liability of the special fund. The Conservator shall have the same rights in the proceeding as any other party, including the right to participate in a settlement of a claim brought against the fund.

"(C) The Conservator may withdraw as a party from a proceeding described in subparagraph (B), after giving written notice to the Secretary and the officer or judge presiding over the proceeding, if the Conservator determines that there is a substantial likelihood that the liability of the fund will be established in the proceeding.

"(D) The Conservator may participate as a party in a case where the liability of the special fund is already established and a proceeding is convened to establish the amount of the liability, including a proceeding to review a compensation award under section 22.

"(E) The functions and responsibilities of the Conservator established under subparagraphs (B) through (D) shall extend to all proceedings described in such subparagraphs which are pending on the date of enactment of this Act.

"(3)(A) When medical questions or questions relating to the vocational rehabilitation of a claimant are raised in a case in which the Conservator is a party pursuant to paragraph (2), the Conservator may order an examination or evaluation of the claimant in the proceeding by a physician whose services have been procured by the Conservator under paragraph (5)(B)(ii).

"(B) If a claimant refuses to comply with an order under subparagraph (A), the proceeding relating to the claimant's case shall be suspended and, in appropriate cases, the Secretary may suspend benefits, unless the physician or other individual who would be responsible for administering the examination or evaluation determines that the administration of the examination or evaluation would constitute a risk to the health of the claimant.

"(4)(A) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe and to subparagraph (B), the Conservator may appoint and fix the pay of such professional and clerical personnel as the Conservator considers appropriate.

"(B) The staff of the Conservator may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code (governing appointments in the competitive service), and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title (relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates).

"(5)(A) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe, the Conservator may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) Subject to such rules as the Conservation Committee may prescribe, the Conservator may procure the services of—

"(i) counsel, subject to subparagraph (C), to represent the interests of the special fund in an administrative or judicial proceeding described in paragraph (2); and

"(ii) medical, vocational, and other experts and witnesses to defend a claim against the special fund.

"(C) The Conservator shall establish standards for the selection of a counsel under subparagraph (A) which will ensure the selection of individuals who are specially qualified to serve by virtue of their education, training, or experience, including experience in the field of worker's compensation law.

"(c) All administrative expenses incurred by the Conservation Committee and the Conservator under this section shall be paid from the special fund.".

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 22. Section 46 is repealed.

AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 23. Section 47 is repealed.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST EMPLOYEES WHO BRING PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 24. (a) Section 49 is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The discharge or refusal to employ a person who has been adjudicated to have filed a fraudulent claim for compensation is not a violation of this section.".

(b) The second sentence of section 49 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$100" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000"; and

(2) by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 25. The provisions of this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall be effective for an injury, disability, or death which occurs or commences on or after the date of enactment of this Act, except that (1) there shall be no liability for deaths from causes other than the injury, as provided in sections 8(d)(3) and 9 of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended by Public Law 92-576, for any such deaths occurring on or after the date of enactment of this Act, and (2) the amendments made by section 14 of this Act relating to the modification of awards shall not apply to payments of compensation under the Black Lung Benefits Act (30 U.S.C. 901 et seq.).

The title was amended so as to read:

"An Act to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to improve the administration of the Act, to reduce incentives for fraud and abuse, to assure immediate compensation benefits and competent medical treatment for injured employees, and for other purposes.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONTRIBUTION OF JAPANESE-AMERICANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. HAYAKAWA. Mr. President, in the history of the United States there have been many instances of outstanding service to our country during times of war. Unfortunately, many heroic actions and expressions of courageous dedication have remained unknown and unrecognized.

During World War II many Americans of Japanese ancestry (AJA's) bravely fought for our country in the European and Pacific theaters. The feats in battle of the 100th Infantry Battalion and its successor, the 442d Regimental Combat Team composed of Nisei in France and Italy, are well known to many. However, the United States also owes a great debt of gratitude to the brave AJA's who served as members of the Military Intelligence Service in all campaigns from Guadalcanal to Attu and from Iwo Jima to Okinawa. Their contribution to the war effort was tremendous.

A very interesting and detailed account of their wartime service is contained in Joseph Harrington's book "Yankee Samurai." The over 6,000 members of this group worked in small units assigned to every combat division serving in the Pacific area. The Nisei served as translators of captured documents, interrogators of POW's and persuaders of enemy surrender. Their effectiveness was enhanced by the fact that the Japanese Army and Navy often did not worry about communicating during the war via coded message, confident that the complexity of the Japanese language used by the military was sufficient to safeguard the secrecy of their exchanges.

As an example, the work of the Nisei was instrumental in determining the location of Admiral Yamamoto that led to the downing of his plane and death. Furthermore, they worked on the prompt translation and interpretation of the captured Japanese defense plans in the Philippines and the Solomons, the so-called Z-plan relating to the defense of Guam, Saipan, and Tinian, and the analysis of the defense plans of Okinawa. These actions prompted Major General Willoughby to state that, "the Nisei saved a million lives and shortened the war by 2 years." Gen. Douglas MacArthur was well aware of the contribution of the Nisei when he affirmed that "never in military history did any army know so much about the enemy prior to actual engagement."

Many Nisei members of the Military Intelligence Service valiantly lost their lives in action both in World War II and the Korean war and although their names were Japanese, all served and died as proud American soldiers. Dan Nakatsu clearly describes the courage demonstrated by the Nisei during the war when he points out that these men were actually fighting two wars simultaneously—one against the military enemy and the other against racial prejudice and distrust toward their kind at home.

At the end of the war, the Nisei contributed to the elimination of the dominant military class within Japan and laid the foundations for the establishment of the current strong ties of friendship between Japan and the United States. I hope that the citizens of our country will join me in saluting and honoring these brave men who stand as an example to future generations.

Mr. President, I commend to my colleagues the article entitled "The Secrets Come Out for Nisei Soldiers," by Charles Hillinger, that appeared in the Los Angeles Times and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times]

THE SECRETS COME OUT FOR NISEI SOLDIERS—JAPANESE-AMERICAN ROLE IN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE FINALLY TOLD

(By Charles Hillinger)

President Harry S. Truman called them "our human secret weapon."

To this day the role of 6,000 Japanese-American soldiers in the Pacific is one of the best-kept secrets of World War II.

Gen. Charles Willoughby, Douglas MacArthur's chief of staff for intelligence, said the 6,000 Nisei in the Military Intelligence Service "shortened the war against Japan by two years."

Col. Sidney F. Mashbir, commander of the service, reported that "thousands of American lives were preserved by these courageous men."

Nisei Military Intelligence Service veterans from throughout the country will be in Los Angeles the first week of August to attend a national reunion of Japanese-American veterans.

"It's a story that has never been publicly revealed. It has always been hush-hush. Only now are we permitted to talk about it. The wraps are finally being taken off this military secret," said retired L.A. County Superior Court Judge John F. Aiso, 72.

Aiso was the program's organizer and chief instructor.

"It would never have succeeded without Aiso's leadership at the secret MIS Japanese language schools, first at the Presidio in San Francisco and later at Camp Savage and Ft. Snelling, both in Minnesota," said James Oda, 67, of North Hollywood, one of the instructors who served under Aiso.

TRANSLATED DOCUMENTS

Most of the Nisei volunteered to join the intelligence service from behind barged wire in relocation camps, where they and their families were held during the war because of their ancestry.

Aiso, Oda and a dozen intelligence service veterans met recently to formulate plans for the August reunion of the group.

"We may have been the only soldiers in history to have bodyguards to protect us from our own forces in combat zones so we would not be mistaken for the enemy," Aiso recalled.

The Nisei translated captured Japanese documents, maps, battle plans, orders, diaries, letters and publications. They interrogated Japanese prisoners.

They were the eyes and ears of the Allied forces fighting the Japanese in the Pacific.

"Our chief worry was getting shot by our own solders," remembered Kitao Yamada, 64, a retired Pasadena postal supervisor, "because we looked like the enemy."

Yamada was the only Japanese-American MIS soldier assigned to a regiment of 3,000 Marines during the fight on New Britain island.

"One of the Marines told my bodyguard, 'I've been in a foxhole six months and I haven't seen a Jap. I don't know what one looks like.'

"My bodyguard told the Marine: 'I'll show you one for $5.' The guy gave him the $5. My bodyguard found me and brought me over to the Marine and introduced me.

"There was a humorous side of the war, too," Yamada added.

"My American bodyguard nicknamed me Rocky and I have been Rocky ever since," recalled Kazuhiko (Rocky) Yamada, 64, who works for the L.A. Department of Water & Power. "It was not a good idea in a combat area to have anyone call you by your Japanese name."

Kiyoshi Fujimura, 57, a retired L.A. postal worker, a sergeant during the war, told how he became a captain for eight hours.

"When the war was winding down in the Philippines I was to be the interpreter at Gen. Yamashita's surrender. The general would not surrender in the company of an enlisted man, so I was promoted to temporary captain for the occasion."

TAKEN FOR THE ENEMY

Sigeo Ito, 65, of Altadena, remembered how he and another American soldier "scared the hell out of each other" when they both landed in the same foxhole on Guam. "Luckily we got the situation straightened out before he mistook me for the enemy."

Many of the Nisei intelligence service soldiers were killed by mistake by American troops.

Sgt. Frank Hachiya, awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously, parachuted behind enemy lines in the Philippines and was later spotted and shot by an American who took him to be an enemy infiltrator.

Before he died, Hachiya turned over to U.S. authorities a set of maps of enemy defenses. He is credited with saving the lives of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of American troops.

The Nisei intelligence service corps translated the Imperial Navy strategy for most of the Pacific campaign.

"The Japanese had no idea how the Americans knew so much about their war strategy. They did not know about America's secret weapon—the Nisei members of the MIS," said George Kanegai, 66, a leader of the intelligence-gathering unit attached to MacArthur's headquarters in Australia.

There were many unsung heroes of the outfit. Like Kenny Yasui, 68, owner of an L.A. import-export firm. Yasui was awarded the Silver Star and is heralded among Nisei as "the little Sgt. York."

He fought with Merrill's Marauders in the China-Burma-India campaign. He swam to a small island in the Irrawaddy River in Burma and single-handedly took an entire Japanese company prisoner through a ploy.

Yasui barked through a loudspeaker in Japanese: "I am Col. Yamamoto of the Imperial Japanese Army. Japan has lost the war. Lay down your weapons and follow me."

Two of the Japanese soldiers blew themselves up with hand grenades rather than surrender. The rest followed Yasui in close order drill to awaiting American soldiers.

Sho Nomura, 64, of Sierra Madre, who attended the planning meeting for the reunion, was one of three intelligence service Nisei attached to Mao Tse-tung's headquarters in Yunnan, China, to find out how extensively the Chinese Communists were fighting the Japanese.

Rusty Kimura, 67, of Gardena, came to the meeting with a gunsight from a Japanese 105-millimeter heavy artillery weapon he destroyed in Bougainville. He contributed the gunsight to the group's archives.

Why isn't the story of the Military Intelligence Service known?

"It could not be told during the war because it had to be kept secret," explained Aiso.

After the war, the intelligence service played a key role in the occupation of Japan. When the Korean War came along, the intelligence service was used extensively in Korea.

"And, as time went on, the story was overlooked and forgotten, except by those of us who lived it."

There are three organizations of Military Intelligence Service veterans, one in Los Angeles, another in San Francisco and a third in Hawaii.

Yosh Nakayama, 57, owner of a light fixture company in Gardena, is president of the local group.

The annual Nisei Week festival and parade, the Nisei Veterans Reunion, and the opening of an exhibit at the County Museum of Art are all scheduled to take place the first week of August.

RISING HEALTH CARE COSTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, yesterday, Americans received some disturbing news from the Department of Health and Human Services—the Nation's health bill rose by 15.1 percent last year to $287 billion. Health costs have now reached nearly 10 percent of GNP, up by one-third over the past decade. And there is little relief in sight from these astronomical increases that permit health costs to consume higher and higher proportions of every dollar produced in our economy.

These new figures are a stark testament to the failure of the administration to develop an effective cost containment program. The results for the Nation's elderly and sick have been dramatic—skyrocketing out-of-pocket costs and health insurance premium increases; reduced access to services; and the near bankruptcy of public and community hospitals that have been forced to bear the brunt of caring for the poor and the uninsured.

In fact, the administration's policies have exacerbated the crisis of escalating health care costs. Cuts in vital health programs have not slowed the rate of increase in health costs; they have simply shifted the burden to the elderly, to the young, and the private citizen. The medicare and medicaid cuts adopted by the Senate last week will shift billions more in health costs to the elderly, the poor, and the consumers. Cuts in programs that promote good health—such as immunization, community health centers, maternal and child health, and others—actually drive costs higher, because they encourage individuals to postpone needed care until health problems become more acute and more expensive.

We have tolerated business as usual for too long—and we are bankrupting ourselves in return. We cannot wait until health care usurps 11 percent or 12 percent of the GNP. The time has come for Congress to turn its back on the special interests of the health industry, and adopt meaningful reforms to provide cost-effective care and terminate the pernicious practice of cost shifting.

We can afford decent health care for all—senior citizens, workers, and the unemployed, families with children—if only we have the courage to make the right decisions. The latest figures are sounding the alarm with new and even greater intensity. The question is whether Congress at last will hear it and respond.

TEST BAN AND EPITAPHS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last week the Reagan administration made a startling announcement that it intended to abandon negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty. At that time, Senator MATHIAS joined me in announcing that we would introduce a bipartisan resolution on July 29, demanding immediate resumption of the negotiations as well as submission of the threshold test ban and peaceful nuclear explosion treaties for Senate consent.

Five administrations, both Republican and Democratic, have pursued a comprehensive nuclear test ban since 1963, when President Kennedy signed and the Senate agreed to ratification of the Limited Test Ban Treaty. Theodore C. Sorensen, who was Special Counsel to President Kennedy, has written an eloquent and compelling article in the New York Times which makes clear the importance of this effort and condemns the Reagan administration's abandonment of these two decades of bipartisan commitment. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Sorensen's important article be entered in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 25, 1982]

TEST BAN AND EPITAPHS

(By Theodore C. Sorensen)

Ronald Reagan last week, in a move speaking volumes about his sincerity in the current strategic arms reduction talks, threw out 19 years of bipartisan American support for a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. The military arguments he accepted have heretofore been consistently rejected.

It was 19 years ago today that American, British and Soviet negotiators concluded and initialed in Moscow a treaty banning all nuclear weapons testing in the air, sea and outer space. John F. Kennedy called it "an important first step—a step toward peace [and] reason," adding that it was "a journey of a thousand miles." When W. Averell Harriman, the chief American negotiator, was welcomed home by his Georgetown neighbors, one woman brought her baby, saying, "What you did in Moscow will make it possible for him to look ahead to a full and happy life."

Because the treaty permitted underground testing, it was indeed only a first small step toward slowing the nuclear arms race. Its text contemplated a future comprehensive ban. President Kennedy and Nikita S. Khrushchev, the Soviet leader, both hoped to resolve the one remaining obstacle to an underground-test ban—how to inspect suspicious seismic-disturbance reports. During these past 19 years, every President, regardless of party, actively sought an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union to halt underground nuclear testing. For 19 years, arguments emanating from the Pentagon and nuclear-weapons laboratories about the need for more testing—to develop new weapons and enhance our confidence in existing weapons—were rejected by the White House.

Until last week.

With typical circuity, the Reagan Administration decision not even to negotiate for such a ban, once it had been involuntarily publicized, was attributed to a need to first redefine verification procedures for two interim, unratified, largely meaningless agreements that ban explosions over 150 kilotons. In truth, both superpowers can obtain all the test results they need below that threshold, which is 10 times the power of the Hiroshima bomb. Moreover, these interim agreements would both be rendered moot by a determined Presidential commitment to negotiate a comprehensive test ban. Because of new verification technology and procedures, such a pact seemed near in 1979 before it temporarily sank with the second strategic arms limitation treaty.

Opposition to a total ban from various military leaders and nuclear scientists in both Washington and Moscow over the last 19 years is not surprising. As Gen. Earle G. Wheeler testified regarding the 1963 treaty: "In the purest sense of the term, any agreement which limits the manner in which we develop our weapons systems represents a military disadvantage." Most armed services commanders, trained and paid and obligated to provide the strongest possible combat force, invariably want more tests, more weapons and more certainty about the reliability of their existing weapons.

These same arguments were all advanced in 1963 against the Limited Test Ban Treaty, by both active and retired commanders and by concerned citizens ranging from Edward Teller to Phyllis S. Schlafly. But their arguments were overcome by answers that are equally valid today. The risks of an imperfect treaty were deemed less than the risks of an unabated arms race. A reduction in the tensions and economic burdens of the cold war was deemed worth the limitations on new weaponry. Preserving doubts in both the Kremlin and the Pentagon about the reliability of their respective stockpiles might someday stay a reckless hand. Establishing roadblocks to either superpower's development of destabilizing weapons might reduce future temptations to launch a surprise first strike. The Senate in 1963 listened, debated and approved the treaty by a vote of 80 to 19.

Unfortunately the ideology of those 19 is now in the saddle in Washington. The Reagan cold warriors advertise their plans for arms control with more hypocrisy than hope for success. They see no need for the superpowers to deter the spread of nuclear weapons by setting a good example. They want no part of a nuclear freeze, not even a mutual halt in testing, warheads and weapons. Why should they? An Administration that can turn the clock back by decades on child labor and Social Security can easily go back to John Foster Dulles.

I would remind them of the statement of Everett M. Dirksen, the late Senate Republican leader, in switching to support the 1963 treaty, "I should not like to have written on my tombstone: 'He knew what happened at Hiroshima, but he did not take a first step.' " That first step in 1963 was impelled in part by a nuclear confrontation over Cuba the previous year. Let us pray that another such confrontation will not be required to produce the next step.

RECIPIENTS OF THE JEFFERSON AWARDS PRESENTED BY THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this year marks the 10th anniversary of the Jefferson Awards, which are presented by the American Institute for Public Service. The Institute was founded to honor the highest ideals and achievements of individuals in the field of public service.

On July 21, 10 outstanding Americans received this prestigious distinction for their valuable contributions to society. Each winner is a leader in his or her own right, and the exemplary service displayed by each winner is most worthy of this recognition.

The board of selectors, composed of 79 of our country's finest citizens, grants Jefferson Awards in each of the following categories:

First, the Greatest Public Service Performed by an Elected or Appointed Official;

Second, the Greatest Public Service Performed by a Private Citizen;

Third, the Greatest Public Service Performed by an Individual 35 Years or Under;

Fourth, the Greatest Public Service Benefiting the Disadvantaged; and Fifth, Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities.

The review of numerous candidates for the Jefferson Awards is a lengthy and tedious process, and I believe that it is appropriate to commend the board of selectors for their wise selection of this year's recipients.

I was especially pleased that my friend, the distinguished Senate Majority Leader, Senator HOWARD BAKER, was chosen in the category of Greatest Public Service Performed by an Elected or Appointed Official. Senator BAKER certainly deserves this honor for his fine leadership in the U.S. Senate. His entire career of public service has been one of dedication to the cause of helping others.

Mr. President, I am proud that a fellow South Carolinian, Mr. Richard Garrett of Easley, was one of the five recipients who won the award for Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities. Mr. Garrett is well-known for his efforts in using his airplane to fly burn victims in upper South Carolina to specialized treatment hospitals around the country.

Mr. President, I would be remiss to overlook the great contributions of those individuals who created the Jefferson Awardz, particularly its cofounders, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and former Ohio U.S. Senator Robert Taft, Jr., and Samuel S. Beard, president of the American Institute for Public Service, who conceived the awards. The establishment of the Jefferson Awards is, in itself, a valuable public service, because this recognition of public service acts as a catalyst which inspires others to serve the American people.

Mr. President, in order to share with my colleagues more about the remarkable accomplishments of these Jefferson Award winners, and to further describe the goals and purposes of the American Institute for Public Service, I ask unanimous consent that the program of the Jefferson Awards ceremony appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the program was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE JEFFERSON AWARDS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

The Jefferson Awards and the American Institute for Public Service were founded in 1973 to honor the highest ideals and achievements in the field of public service in the United States. Through the Jefferson Awards the Institute recognizes the dedication, sacrifices and accomplishments of individuals serving the American people and strives to attract new, young leadership into public service.

Historically, public service in America has been held in low regard. To dramatize excellence in public service, the goal of the American Institute is to establish what might become a series of national awards for public service similar to the Nobel or Pulitzer prizes.

The Board of Selectors, chaired by Senator Robert Taft, selects the Jefferson Award winners, and awards are granted in five different categories:

The Greatest Public Service Performed by an Elected or Appointed Official

The Greatest Public Service Performed by a Private Citizen

The Greatest Public Service Benefiting the Disadvantaged

The Greatest Public Service Performed by an Individual Thirty-Five Years or Under

Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities

Opening remarks: Byron White, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Welcome: The Honorable Robert Taft, Jr., Co-Founder, American Institute for Public Service.

Master of ceremonies: Charles Bartlett, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Greatest Public Service by an Elected or Appointed Official: The Honorable Howard H. Baker, Jr., presented by John Seigenthaler, Editorial Director, USA Today, Publisher, The Tennessean, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Greatest Public Service by a Private Citizen: Bob Hope, presented by Cheryl Tiegs, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Greatest Public Service Benefiting the Disadvantaged: The Honorable Claude Pepper, presented by Gordon Parks, Author, Film Producer, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Greatest Public Service by an Individual Thirty-five or Under: The Honorable Henry Cisneros, presented by Bruce Sundlun, President, Outlet Broadcasting Company, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities: Dallas Doyle, Butte, Montana, presented by Arthur V. Toupin, Vice Chairman of the Board, Bank of America, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service. Richard Marvin Garrett, Easley, South Carolina, presented by The Honorable Peter W. Rodino, Jr., United States Representative, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service. Helena Kyle, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, presented by Luther H. Hodges, Jr., Chairman of the Board, National Bank of Washington, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service. Caroline Putnam, Springfield, Massachusetts, presented by Judge Edmund Reggie, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service. Ruth Heinz and Lorraine Schreck, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, presented by Howard K. Smith, Broadcast Journalist, Member of the Board of Selectors, American Institute for Public Service.

Closing: Sarah Reese, Soprano, Artist-in-Residence, Boston Opera Company.

Reception following.

GREATEST PUBLIC SERVICE PERFORMED BY AN ELECTED OR APPOINTED OFFICIAL

The Honorable Howard H. Baker, Jr.

As Senate Majority Leader, Howard H. Baker, Jr. has strengthened the leadership, direction and dignity of the United States Senate. Senator Baker is regarded by colleagues in both parties as fair, reasonable and generous. He is known as a legislative craftsman and an expert at consensus politics.

GREATEST PUBLIC SERVICE PERFORMED BY A PRIVATE CITIZEN

Bob Hope

Bob Hope has spent a lifetime of tireless effort uplifting the spirit of America at home and abroad. He shows no signs of slowing down, least of all in his patriotic efforts. He has served the nation quasi-diplomatically as an ambassador of goodwill. An indefatigable entertainer of servicemen and women for over thirty years, he has traveled more than nine million miles entertaining troops around the world. Even today, Mr. Hope carries on a frantic schedule for the benefit of charitable causes.

GREATEST PUBLIC SERVICE BENEFITING THE DISADVANTAGED

The Honorable Claude Pepper

Congressman Claude Pepper is the leading Congressional champion of legislation barring discrimination against the elderly. As Chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, he is an eloquent and most effective spokesman for the elderly. He has lobbied incessantly for reform of programs that deliver health care to the nation's elderly and for tougher laws governing private institutions, particularly nursing homes that provide geriatric care.

GREATEST PUBLIC SERVICE BY AN INDIVIDUAL THIRTY-FIVE OR UNDER

The Honorable Henry Cisneros

Henry Cisneros is the first Hispanic mayor of a major American city, San Antonio. He grew up in its barrio. He earned a master's degree in public administration from Harvard's Kennedy School of Government and a Ph.D. in that subject from George Washington University. A White House Fellow at 23, he served as an assistant to Elliot Richardson, who named him co-chairman of the Urban Policy Task Force. He returned to San Antonio and, in 1975, he became the youngest person ever elected to the San Antonio City Council. He exemplifies the accomplishments of youth in government.

OUTSTANDING PUBLIC SERVICE BENEFITING LOCAL COMMUNITIES

Dallas Doyle, Butte, Montana

Dallas Doyle is a man who shares. He shares—not just an equitable or reasonable portion of what he has—he shares all of what he has. Mr. Doyle operates the "Outreach Mission" in an old building which also serves as his family's home. He reaches out to anyone who is in need of help. A reformed alcoholic, Mr. Doyle saw the need for a place that offered something more than just a meal. He offers the missing ingredients of care, love and understanding. He works closely with a wide range of agencies in the area, who do not hesitate to direct the needy to him. Since 1977 the mission has helped over 6,600 people.

Richard Marvin Garrett, Easley, South Carolina

For the last thirteen years, Richard Garrett has flown upper South Carolina residents to specialized hospitals across the country. He has flown more than eighty-three trips transporting severely burned children to the Shrine Burn Center in Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Garrett will fly the family to visit the patient, if they are there for long-term care. He is available for emergency trips anytime and will leave his office or farm with a phone call. There has never been a charge to the patient or family for this service.

Helena Kyle, Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Helena Kyle directs the Home Assister Service which she initiated to meet a community need in 1978. Upon retirement as a private-duty nurse she continued to use her nursing skills to give voluntary assistance to her friends and acquaintances. She became aware of the need for competent, trained people who would care for the ill and infirm in their homes. She and other volunteer nurses teach unskilled workers the rudiments of home nursing care. The Assisters are then sent into homes to work under the close supervision of the nurses. The program reverses the usual structure: top positions are filled by volunteers and lower level workers are paid. By utilizing the professional knowledge of volunteers, the high cost of their salaries is saved and the service is kept within the price range of many who need it.

Caroline Putnam, Springfield, Massachusetts

Caroline Putnam never went to college, but for over half of her life, she has been intimately concerned with the urgency of providing higher education to the socially underprivileged black minority in our country. In 1946 she established an organization called Catholic Scholarships for Negroes, long before it became socially fashionable. Every year, she takes on approximately 100 students for a four year commitment. Funds provided are not full scholarships but provide the difference to make their educations possible. Thousands of Mrs. Putnam's graduates are in positions of productive prominence. All have benefited from her farsightedness.

Ruth Heinz and Lorraine Schreck, Waukesha County, Wisconsin

What happens to someone who is elderly and incompetent and has no one to see that his needs are met? Ruth Heinz and Lorraine Schreck have an answer. By establishing Citizen's Outreach Services, they have made a personal and legal commitment to meet the needs of the elderly. Citizen's Outreach Services is one of the three agencies appointed by the state of Wisconsin as a certified corporate guardianship. Mrs. Heinz and Mrs. Schreck are legal guardians for incompetent elderly people in or outside of nursing homes. They also provide aid and assist people in their homes by preparing insurance forms and helping obtain the services to which they are entitled. They receive no pay for their work.

Co-Founders: Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, The Honorable Robert Taft, Jr., Samuel S. Beard, President, American Institute for Public Service Board of Selectors.

Henry Aaron, Muhammed Ali, Charles Bartlett, Senator Max Baucus, Senator Julian Bond, Senator David L. Boren, Mayor Tom Bradley, Hon. John H. Buchanan, Jr., Ellen Burstyn, Sarah Caldwell, Patricia T. Carbine, Harry M. Caudill, Paul Corbin, Hon. Richard D. Cudahy, Midge Dector, Emmett Dedmon, Kirk Douglas, Peter Duchin, M. Stanton Evans, Robert H. Finch, Stephen O. Frankfurt, Mayor Corinne Freeman, Betty Friedan, Congressman Robert Garcia, Earl Graves.

Congressman John Paul Hammerschmidt, Dr. Alexander Heard, Senator John Heinz, III, Marife Hernandez, Terry Herndon, Lenore Hershey, Luther Hodges, Jr., Dr. Phillip Hoffman, Roger Horchow, Norman E. Isaacs, Crawford Johnson, III, Philip C. Johnson, Vernon E. Jordan, Raul Julia, Dr. Herman Kahn.

Buddy Killen, Lane Kirkland, David Kruidenier, Governor Patrick J. Lucey, Dan W. Lufkin, Senator Richard G. Lugar, Lawrence C. McQuade, Vilma S. Martinez, John D. Montgomery, Reg Murphy, Gordon Parks, Gregory Peck, Senator George S. Pillsbury, Leontyne Price, Michael Pulitzer, Dr. Isador I. Rabi, Judge Edmund Reggie, Dr. George A. Roberts, Winthrop P. Rockefeller.

Congressman Peter W. Rodino, Jr., Mary G. Roebling, Leo Rosten, William A. Rusher, Robert T. Sakowitz, Hon. Terry Sanford, John Seigenthaler, Robert Shults, Neil Simon, William E. Simon, Howard K. Smith, Bruce Sundlun, Arthur Toupin, R. Emmett Tyrrell, Jr., Cicely Tyson, Jack Valenti, Ernest van den Haag, Hon. Sterry R. Waterman, Mayor Louie Welch, Andrew Wyeth.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a withdrawal which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations and withdrawal received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 2 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 541. Joint resolution concerning the successful completion of the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle program.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill:

S. 2706. An act to amend title 28, United States Code, to modify the bar membership requirements for U.S. magistrates.

The enrolled bill was subsequently signed by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following joint resolution was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.J. Res. 541. Joint resolution concerning the successful completion of the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle program.

HOUSE BILL HELD AT DESK

The following bill was ordered held at the desk until the close of business on Wednesday, July 28, 1982, by unanimous consent:

H.R. 6663. An act to delay the effective date of proposed amendments to rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil procedure.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary reported that on today, July 27, 1982, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S. 2706. An act to amend title 28, United States Code, to modify the bar membership requirements for U.S. magistrates.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

S. 2174. A bill to recognize the organization known as American Ex-Prisoners of War.

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment and with a preamble:

S.J. Res. 207. Joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate the week of August 1, 1982, through August 7, 1982 as "National Purple Heart Week".

By Mr. COHEN, from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, without amendment:

S. Res. 438. An original resolution waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 2059.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ROTH, from the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

Peter E. Voss, of Ohio, to be a Governor of the United States Postal Service for the term expiring December 8, 1990.

By Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

The following-named persons to be members of the National Council on the Humanities for terms expiring January 26, 1988:

A. Lawrence Chickering, of California;
Gertrude Himmelfarb, of New York;
James Clayburn La Force, Jr., of California;
Rita Ricardo-Campbell, of California;
Peter J. Stanlis, of Illinois;
Walter Berns, of Maryland;
George Carey, of Virginia; and Ellis Sandoz, of Louisiana.

(The above nominations were reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

J. Lawrence Irving, of California, to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of California.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. MITCHELL:

S. 2778. A bill to require the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to establish an experimental program to determine the feasibility of furnishing diagnostic health-care services to certain veterans in areas of the United States that are geographically remote from health-care facilities of the Veterans' Administration; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MITCHELL:

S. 2778. A bill to require the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to establish an experimental program to determine the feasibility of furnishing diagnostic health-care services to certain veterans in areas of the United States that are geographically remote from health care facilities of the Veterans' Administration; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES EXPERIMENT ACT OF 1982

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to help meet the health care needs of the veterans living in northern Maine, in what I believe to be a novel and cost-effective manner.

My bill would establish, on an experimental basis, a diagnostic medical clinic in northern Maine. The pilot project would be established for 3 years and would serve as a useful experiment to assist the Veterans' Administration in determining the feasibility of establishing similar diagnostic clinics in other rural States.

Maine has a veteran population of 155,000. Approximately 11,000 of these veterans live in Maine's northern-most county, Aroostook County. All of Maine's veterans are served by one VA hospital located in Togus, just outside of Augusta in the south central part of the State. This hospital and those who staff it do an excellent job of providing Maine's veterans with necessary health care. The problem is that because Maine is a large, rural State many thousands of veterans simply cannot, or do not, travel to Togus for treatment.

Many of the 11,000 veterans living in Aroostook County live up to 250 miles from Togus. As a result, they must travel some 500 miles round trip in order to receive care. Besides being extremely time consuming, the trip is expensive. In addition, the journey to Togus is made even more arduous during Maine's severe winters.

Maine's veterans have tried for a number of years to obtain some type of health-care facility in Aroostook County. In 1981, the Maine State Legislature passed a resolution urging Congress to establish a satellite outpatient clinic in northern Maine. On a number of occasions I, too, have tried to obtain such a clinic.

According to the VA, however, outpatient satellite clinics must be located at least 40 miles from an existing VA health-care facility and in a "Standard Metropolitan Area" with a population of at least 150,000. Based on this latter criteria, none of Maine's northernmost cities qualify for an outpatient clinic.

Given the inconvenience and expense associated with traveling to Togus for health care, I am convinced that many eligible veterans simply do not seek health care until an emergency arises. And even then, it is often impossible to transport these veterans to Togus. As a result, treatment is often provided at a local hospital at considerable expense to the VA and the taxpayer in general.

According to the VA at Togus, in calendar year 1981 there were 20 inpatient visits to Togus per 1,000 veterans living in Aroostook County. Statewide, this figure was almost twice as high, or 35 visits per 1,000 veterans. These statistics simply reinforce the belief that many eligible veterans living in Aroostook County find it impossible to travel to Togus for health care.

Another problem associated with traveling to Togus is that many veterans who make the 250-mile trip do so unnecessarily. In many instances, these veterans are hospitalized overnight at Togus simply because they have traveled 5 to 6 hours to receive care. This results in substantial costs to the VA and represents an inefficient use of scarce resources.

My bill would help address these problems by establishing a diagnostic health-care clinic in Aroostook County. The purpose of this clinic would be to determine if an eligible veteran needed to travel to Togus for either inpatient or outpatient care. As such, it would encourage veterans who currently do not seek treatment to come forward for a diagnostic exam when a health-care problem arises, rather than waiting until it is too late.

Eligibility for the exam would be limited to those veterans who are currently eligible for inpatient health care at a VA hospital. The reason for linking eligibility for the diagnostic exam to eligibility for inpatient care is that the primary purpose of the exam is to determine a veteran's need for hospitalization. As such, it only makes sense to link the two.

The diagnostic clinic would be administered by the VA in consultation with an advisory committee comprised of representatives from the VA, the hospital where the clinic is established, and a local veterans' organization. Although this committee would advise the Administrator on the operation of the clinic, the final authority to establish the guidelines governing the diagnostic exam would be left up to the Administrator.

It is envisioned that the clinic would operate in the following manner: The clinic would presumably be open only certain days of the week. A veteran with a medical problem could set up an appointment at the clinic for a diagnostic exam. If the veteran were eligible, the exam would be given to determine if he or she needed to travel to Togus for treatment. No decision would be made to send a veteran to Togus without first consulting the VA.

If it were determined that the veteran was not eligible for either inpatient or outpatient health care at Togus, the veteran would be advised of this and some other arrangement to provide treatment would be made.

By providing a diagnostic exam for eligible veterans, what this bill would really do is to say to the veterans of northern Maine: If you have a health-care problem and are eligible for treatment by the VA, come forward and let us take a look at it. I believe this proposal makes a good deal of sense and could, in the long run, save the VA and the taxpayers a substantial amount of money by diagnosing health-care problems before they become acute and more costly to treat.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to emphasize my commitment to providing our Nation's veterans with adequate medical care regardless of where in the country they live. I believe the establishment of a diagnostic health-care clinic on an experimental basis in northern Maine would go far toward meeting that commitment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2778

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Diagnostic Services Experiment Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) many thousands of veterans with service-connected disabilities reside in areas of the United States that are geographically remote from health-care facilities over which the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs has jurisdiction;

(2) for many veterans such health-care facilities are practically inaccessible and for many other veterans the inconvenience of travel to such facilities discourages the veterans from seeking health-care services except under the most compelling of circumstances;

(3) an experimental program of diagnostic health-care services conducted by the Administrator in northern Maine, where many of the approximately 11,000 veterans reside more than 250 miles from the nearest of such health-care facilities, would provide valuable information on the feasibility of establishing a permanent program of furnishing diagnostic health-care services in remote areas of the United States.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Administrator" means the Adminstrator of Veterans' Affairs;

(2) the term "veteran" has the same meaning as provided in section 101(2) of title 38, United States Code;

(3) the term "service-connected" has the same meaning as provided in section 101(16) of such title;

(4) the term "disability" has the same meaning as provided in section 601(1) of such title;

(5) the term "eligible veteran" means any veteran to whom the Administrator may furnish hospital care under section 610(a) of such title; and

(6) the term "remote area" means any area of the United States that is geographically remote from the health-care facilities over which the Administrator has jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. (a) The Administrator shall establish an experimental program to determine the economic and functional feasibility of furnishing diagnostic health-care services to eligible veterans in a remote area. The experimental progam shall commence on January 1, 1983, and shall terminate on January 1, 1986.

(b)(1) In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Administrator shall enter into a contract with any health-care facility described in paragraph (2) and located in Aroostook County, Maine, to serve as a diagnostic clinic for eligible veterans. The function of the diagnostic clinic under such contract shall be to determine any eligible veteran's need for health-care at a facility over which the Administrator has jurisdiction or at a Department of Defense facility with which the Administrator has contracted for the care of eligible veterans.

(2) A health-care facility satisfies the requirements of paragraph (1) if the facility—

(A) is suitable in staff and facilities, as determined by the Administrator, to furnish diagnostic health-care services to eligible veterans; and

(B) will serve as the diagnostic clinic for and furnish diagnostic health-care services to eligible veterans at the lowest cost offered to the Administrator for the contract referred to in paragraph (1).

(c) Any contract entered into under subsection (b) shall include a provision requiring that—

(1) diagnostic health-care services be furnished to eligible veterans in accordance with guidelines established by the Administrator; and

(2) the Administrator pay the health-care facility an agreed charge or charges for the diagnostic examination of any eligible veteran examined at the facility based on the extent of the examination required for such veteran.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator may accept any donation of the use of any health-care facility in connection with a contract entered into under subsection (b).

SEC. 5. (a) In carrying out the experimental program extablished under section 4(a), the Administrator shall establish an advisory committee consisting of such representatives of the Veterans' Administration, the health-care facility that is a party to the contract entered into under Section 4(b), and any local organization of veterans demonstrating an interest in health-care services for veterans as the Administrator considers appropriate.

(b) the advisory committee shall advise the Administrator on—

(1) the operating procedures of the diagnostic clinic; and

(2) the general kinds and elements of diagnostic examinations that are required for eligible veterans receiving diagnostic medical services at the diagnostic clinic.

(c) The advisory committee shall transmit to the Administrator each calendar year prior to January 1, 1986, at such times as the Administrator requires a comprehensive report on the operation of the diagnostic clinic including such committee's findings regarding the economic and functional feasibility of furnishing diagnostic health-care services to eligible veterans under a contract of the type entered into under the experimental program established under section 4(a). Such report shall include information, additional findings, and recommendations on such matters relating to the experimental program as the Administrator requires.

SEC. 6. Not later than July 1, 1985, the Administrator shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the operation of the experimental program. The report shall include—

(1) the annual reports of the advisory committee transmitted to the Administrator under section 5(c);

(2) the findings of the Administrator regarding the economic and functional feasibility of contracting for diagnostic health-care services to be furnished to eligible veterans who reside in remote areas; and

(3) such recommendations for legislative action as the Administrator consider appropriate.

By Mr. HART:

S. 2779. A bill to specify that the release of water from dams is not the discharge of water pollution; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

DISCHARGE OF WATER FROM DAMS

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to specify that the release of water from dams is not a discharge of water which requires a permit from the Environmental Protection Agency.

This bill would reverse a decision by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, in National Wildlife Federation against Gorsuch, interpreting the Clean Water Act to require the Nation's 2.3 million dams to have permits as "point sources" of water pollution, and directing EPA to establish comprehensive effluent standards for all dams within 90 days.

This decision is not only contrary to the clear congressional intent in writing the Clean Water Act and the consistent decade-long interpretation of that law, under four administrations, it also is bad policy.

As the court opinion states, "It is not disputed that the existence and operation of dams sometimes cause water quality problems." For example, water released from the bottom of a reservoir may be colder than the natural stream temperature, causing adverse effects on aquatic life susceptible to changes in water temperatures. Also, sediment carried by a stream often settles out of the water when it enters a reservoir, and the subsequent release of water lower in sediments can increase the downstream growth of algae and aquatic plants.

But the Clean Water Act is not intended to regulate these relatively minor effects of water release from dams on water quality under the act's provisions requiring point sources of water pollutants to receive permits under the national pollution discharge elimination system. As the court stated in National Wildlife Federation against Gorsuch:

It does appear that the typical situation the legislators had in mind for the NPDES program was an industrial facility or a sewage treatment plant taking waste materials produced outside of the water and discharging them into the water, essentially treating the waterway as a waste receptacle.

This clearly is not the situation with dams, which release just water itself.

In those individual situations when the effects of dams on water quality are significant enough to require Government control, action is possible under other provisions of the Clean Water Act, such as the regulation of "nonpoint sources" under section 208 and regulation of "dredge and fill" activities under section 404, and under State law. In Colorado, for example, although State law precludes the issue of NPDES permits for dams (Colo. Rev. Stat. § 25-8-503(5)), the Colorado Water Quality Commission is authorized to "promulgate control regulations" imposing mandatory requirements on any activity "that does cause the quality of any State waters to be in violation of any applicable water quality standard." (Colo. Rev. State § 25-8-205(1)).

Attempting to bring all the Nation's 2.3 million dams under the Clean Water Act's permit program would be a tragic waste of EPA's and the States' limited staff and funds. In pursuit of relatively small environmental benefits, a nationwide program regulating all dams would slow our progress toward other environmental objectives which are far more important than any of the impacts of water flowing over dams. Toxic substances, hazardous waste disposal, and similar matters pose much more important environmental and public health concerns than do dams, and deserve our priority attention.

I am therefore introducing an amendment to section 502(12) of the Clean Water Act to overturn the impact of this recent decision, clarify the intent of Congress, and affirm past interpretation and practice, since enactment of the act, that the release of impounded waters with water quality effects caused solely by the impoundment, or with water quality effects resulting solely from the method of release, do not constitute the "discharge of pollutants" as defined in section 502(12).

It is not my intention that this amendment alter or affect other aspects of the existing Clean Water Act programs. Nor is it my intent by this amendment to alter or affect existing requirements associated with nonpoint sources of pollution under section 208, the construction of dams under section 404, or the operation of dams under section 304(f)(2)(F), or to interfere with the established policy of Congress as expressed in section 101(g) that the authority of each State to allocate quantities of water within its jurisdiction shall not be superseded, abrogated, or otherwise impaired by this act.

The distinguished Senator from Alaska, Senator MURKOWSKI, my colleague on the Committee on Environment and Public Works, has already introduced a similar bill, and I am pleased to join him as a cosponsor of his bill. While the precise wording of our proposals varies slightly, either would accomplish the clarification of law which is necessary.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in urging prompt consideration and passage of legislation to avoid the absurdity of regulating dams as if they were sources of industrial water pollution or sewage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2779

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 502(12) of the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. et seq.) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"These terms do not include controlled or uncontrolled flows of water through, over, or around dams with water quality effects resulting solely from impoundment or from the method of release.".●

By Mr. COCHRAN:

S. 2780. A bill to limit the insanity defense and to provide a procedure for commitment of defendants found guilty who are mentally ill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LIMITING THE INSANITY DEFENSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, the citizens of this country are deeply disturbed by the verdict in the recent trial of would-be Presidential assassin, John W. Hinckley, Jr. That verdict is the "last straw" for many Americans who are concerned that the criminal justice system in this country is out of control. Hinckley severely wounded the President, a secret service agent, a policeman, and James Brady on national TV, in full view of millions of Americans. The video tape of that horrible scene has been replayed over and over, leaving no doubt as to what Hinckley did, and yet, a jury found that he was "not guilty" of the crime because he was "insane." To many this verdict was an outrage. Where should the blame be placed for such an apparent travesty of justice?

We cannot blame the judge who presided over Hinckley's trial, nor can we blame the jurors that found him "not guilty by reason of insanity." We must instead place the blame on the provision of the law defining the Federal criminal insanity defense. The Hinckley verdict was simply a reflection of that law—a law that must be changed. The confidence of the American public in our Federal criminal justice system must be restored.

Today, I am introducing a bill to restore that confidence. The bill does essentially four things to reform the insanity defense: First, it establishes the familiar common law M'Naghten rule as the standard for all future Federal criminal prosecutions; second; it shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant to prove his insanity by a preponderance of the evidence; third, it prohibits expert psychiatric testimony on the ultimate issues to be decided by the trier of fact; and fourth, it creates a special verdict of "guilty but mentally ill."

The modern insanity defense stems from the English rule of law in M'Naghten's case. Under that rule, currently in use in 20 States, a person is held responsible for his actions unless a mental disease or defect that was present when the crime was committed prevented that person from knowing the nature and quality of his acts or that those acts were wrong.

Over the last 30 years this test has been criticized by many legal and medical scholars as too narrow, thus the trend has been in recent years to broaden the use of the insanity defense. The culmination of the move to broaden the defense came in 1954 when the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia decided Durham against United States. In Durham the court decided that a person should not be held responsible for any unlawful act that was the product of a mental disease or defect. This broad test, accepted only by the District of Columbia circuit and two States, created a flurry of criticism and has been substantially abandoned.

In the early 1960's the American Law Institute offered an insanity test as a replacement for both the M'Naghten test, which was seen as too narrow, and the Durham test, which was seen as too broad. Under the ALI test a person is not held responsible for criminal conduct if at the time the crime was committed, as a result of a mental disease or defect he lacked the substantial capacity to appreciate the criminality of the conduct or conform his conduct to the requirements of the law. In 1972, the D.C. Court of Appeals abandoned the Durham rule and adopted the ALI test.

In fact, the ALI test is in current use in the majority of our Federal district courts and was the basis of the jury's decision in the Hinckley trial. Some of the members of that jury have recently testified before this committee that they felt "strait-jacketed" by that law and the parade of expert medical witnesses to find Hinckley had some "mental problem" that prevented him from conforming his conduct to the law. Thus, the ALI test for insanity was met and the jury reached the only verdict that they could have reached under the circumstances—that John Hinckley was legally insane.

Mr. President, it is time for a change. The bill that I have introduced substitutes the much narrower M'Naghten test for the ALI test currently used in the Federal courts. Under the M'Naghten test, for example, the Hinckley jury would have only had to answer one simple, commonsense question: Did John Hinckley understand right from wrong when he attempted to assassinate the President? If the answer had been yes, then Hinckley would have been held legally responsible for the results of his intentional criminal actions. He would not have been absolved of the responsibility simply because he had a "mental problem" that prevented him from obeying the law.

I would also like to note for the record that the M'Naghten test has been the common law test in many States, including the State of Mississippi, for over 100 years. Thus, it is eminently familiar to the Federal judges that will be required to implement and interpret it if it should become law. There will be then, unlike the new mens rea test offered by other bills, no period of judicial interpretation required. The law can be immediately and successfully applied by the Federal judges.

The second major provision of the bill shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant to prove his insanity by a preponderance of the evidence. Again, the Hinckley trial offers an excellent example of just how our insanity defense system should be changed. The prosecution in that case was required by current law to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Hinckley was sane. It would be a difficult task indeed to prove anyone sane beyond a reasonable doubt, yet this is what the prosecution was required to do in order to hold Hinckley accountable.

Understandably, the prosecution failed. As a result, the jury was compelled by the law to find Hinckley insane. I believe that it should be the other way around—if a criminal wants to use the defense of insanity he should have the burden of proving insanity—and if he fails, the jury must find him sane and responsible for his intentional criminal acts.

Mr. President, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that it is constitutional for the States to shift this burden to the defendant and the Congress should join those States, like Mississippi, that have done so.

The third major component of the bill would limit the use of expert medical testimony. Under the general rules of evidence and under common law, an expert witness cannot testify on an ultimate issue to be submitted to the trier of fact. For example, an expert in automobile accidents cannot testify in a negligence suit that the defendant was in fact negligent. That is the question that the jury must decide—the ultimate issue is whether the defendant was negligent.

Likewise, in a criminal trial involving the question of insanity and the insanity defense, an expert witness should not be permitted to testify that the defendant was or is insane. That is the ultimate issue, the question that the jury is asked to decide. Therefore, expert medical testimony should be limited to the findings of the doctors as to the defendant's general mental condition. The jury may then, after hearing the judge's instructions on the law, draw their own conclusions as to whether the defendant was or is legally insane. Testimony from numerous conflicting expert witnesses as to whether the defendant is sane or insane serves only to confuse the issue and the jury and should be eliminated. My bill would do so.

Finally, in a case in which the insanity defense has been invoked, my bill offers the jury the option of finding a defendant "guilty but mentally ill" or "not guilty by reason of insanity."

For example, the jury may find from the evidence that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged and is not legally insane, but he instead has some "mental problem." In that situation, by applying the new "guilty but mentally ill" verdict, the jury can find that defendant guilty of the crime and at the same time provide the defendant with proper medical treatment for a mental problem.

Again, the Hinckley case is illustrative. The five jurors from that case that testified before this committee, as a group, acknowledged that Hinckley had a "mental problem." All stressed that they were bound by the law to find Hinckley legally insane. One juror testified, and others agreed with her, that if it had been possible to have found Hinckley "guilty but mentally ill," then she would have done so. She also testified that if such a verdict had been available then the result of the trial would have been completely opposite.

This new verdict, offered in my bill, provides a much needed "middle ground" for future "Hinckley" juries—to give them an option—something between turning an offender loose because he has a "mental problem" and sending that same offender to prison with absolutely no psychiatric help for his problem.

In effect, the new "guilty but mentally ill" verdict will be different from current law. A person found by the jury to be "guilty but mentally ill" will not be released when he is later determined to be sane and not dangerous to society. Instead, that person must return to prison to finish any remaining sentence. The public is thereby protected from a potentially dangerous criminal's future crimes while the criminal receives the medical help that he needs.

On the other hand, Mr. President, there are those persons that are truly legally insane and should not be held legally responsible for their actions. It is for these people that we retain the verdict of "not guilty by reason of insanity." The law and society has always recognized that those individuals that did not know that what they were doing was wrong should be held blameless. Further, a person who is so disturbed mentally that he or she cannot form the intent element of the crime cannot be constitutionally held responsible. I believe that none of us would want to send a person to prison who thought, for example, that they had chopped down a tree when in fact they had killed someone with the axe. That individual should not be held criminally responsible for his or her actions.

At the same time, however, the law should prevent that axe wielder from being loosed upon society if he is still insane. Unfortunately, current Federal law does not do so. In the overwhelming majority of Federal jurisdictions, once a defendant is found "not guilty by reason of insanity" he is free to go—just as any other defendant found not guilty. The only way to prevent this effect is through an agreement between the U.S. attorney involved and the appropriate State authorities to initiate civil commitment proceedings immediately after the trial. If the State refuses to do so then the defendant found insane and not guilty is free to go. There is no provision in the current Federal law allowing the U.S. attorney to initiate commitment proceedings. The bill that I have introduced will close this loophole.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2780

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That chapter 1 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 16. Insanity defense

"(a) It shall be a defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that the defendant, as a result of a mental disease, could not at the time the offense was committed—

"(1) understand the nature and quality of his actions constituting the offense; or

"(2) determine the wrongfulness of his actions constituting the offense.

"(b) The defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(c) Expert witnesses shall not be permitted to offer opinions on the ultimate legal issues presented to the trier of fact.".

SEC. 2. (a) The first sentence of paragraph (a) of Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended by adding after "guilty" the following: ", not guilty by reason of insanity".

(b) Rule 12 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(i) The plea of not guilty by reason of insanity shall be entered pursuant to Rule 12.2.".

SEC. 3. Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended to read as follows:

"Rule 12.2.—Notice of Plea of Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity

"(a) If a defendant intends to rely upon the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity based on section 16 of title 18, he shall, within the time provided for the filing of pretrial motions or at such later time as the court may direct, notify the attorney for the government in writing of such intention and file a copy of such notice with the clerk. If there is a failure to comply with the requirements of this paragraph, the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity may not be entered. The court may for cause shown allow late filing of the notice or grant additional time to the parties to prepare for trial or make such other order as may be appropriate.

"(b) If a defendant intends to introduce expert testimony relating to a mental disease, defect, or other condition bearing upon the issue of whether he had the state of mind required for the offense charged, he shall, within the time provided for the filing of pretrial motions or at such later time as the court may direct, notify the attorney for the government in writing of such intention and file a copy of such notice with the clerk. The court may for cause shown allow late filing of the notice or grant additional time to the parties to prepare for the trial or make such other order as may be appropriate.

"(c) In an appropriate case the court may, upon motion of the attorney for the government, order the defendant to submit to a psychiatric examination as provided by 18 U.S.C. 4242 by at least two qualified psychiatrists designated for this purpose in the order of the court. No statement made by the accused in the course of any examination provided for by this rule, whether the examination shall be with or without the consent of the accused, shall be admitted in evidence against the accused on the issue of guilt in any criminal proceeding.

"(d) If there is a failure to give notice when required by paragraph (b) or to submit to an examination when ordered under paragraph (c), the court may exclude the testimony of any expert witness offered by the defendant on the issue of his state of mind.".

SEC. 4. Chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 313—OFFENDERS WITH MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT

"Sec.

"4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial.
"4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense.
"4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty by reason of insanity.
"4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4247. General provisions for chapter 313.

"§ 4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY OF DEFENDANT.—At any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable—

"(1) for such a reasonable period of time as is necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; and

"(2) for an additional reasonable period of time until—

"(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may proceed; or

"(B) the pending charges against him are disposed of according to law.

If a defendant's mental condition is determined to be such that there is not substantial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed, the defendant is subject to the provisions of section 4245.

"(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of the facility in which a defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine the competency of the defendant. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, the court shall order his immediate discharge from the facility in which he is hospitalized and shall set the date for trial.

"(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF FINDING OF COMPETENCY.—A finding by the court that the defendant is mentally competent to stand trial shall not prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the offense charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence in a trial for the offense charged.

"§ 4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense

"(a) MOTION FOR PRETRIAL PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION.—Upon the filing of a notice, as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the court, upon motion of the attorney for the government, may order that a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(b) SPECIAL VERDICT.—If the issue of insanity is raised by notice as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure on motion of the defendant or, of the attorney for the government, or on the court's own motion, the jury shall be instructed to find, or, in the event of a nonjury trial, the court shall find, the defendant—

"(1) guilty;

"(2) not guilty;

"(3) guilty but mentally ill; or

"(4) not guilty by reason of insanity.

The defendant shall be found guilty but mentally ill if the jury or court finds that the defendant is guilty but at the time of the commission of the offense was suffering from some mental disease or defect that impaired his ability to conform his actions to the law.

"§ 4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty by reason of insanity

"(a) DETERMINATION OF PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CONVICTED PERSON.—If a person is found not guilty by reason of insanity, the court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another. The court may make any order reasonably necessary to secure the appearance of the person at the hearing.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that a person found not guilty by reason of insanity is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the state in which the person is domiciled if such state will assume responsibility for his care, custody, and treatment. If such state will not then assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such state will assume such responsibility or until the person's mental condition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another.

"(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of the facility in which a person found not guilty by reason of insanity is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearings, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, the court shall order his immediate discharge.

"§ 4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CONVICTED DEFENDANT.—A defendant found guilty of an offense or found guilty but mentally ill, or the attorney for the government, may, within ten days after the defendant is found guilty or guilty but mentally ill, file a motion for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or at any time prior to the sentencing of the defendant shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c). In addition to the information required to be included in the psychiatric report pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(c), if the report includes an opinion by the psychiatrists that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect but that it is not such as to require his custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital, the report shall also include an opinion by the psychiatrists concerning the sentencing alternatives that could best accord the defendant the kind of treatment he does need.

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court is of the opinion that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect and that he should, in lieu of being sentenced to probation or imprisonment, be committed to a mental hospital for custody, care, or treatment, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable. Such a commitment constitutes a provisional sentence to the maximum term authorized for the offense of which the defendant was found guilty.

"(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the provisional sentence imposed pursuant to subsection (d) has not expired, the court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether the provisional sentence should be reduced. After the hearing, the court may order that the defendant be released, be placed on probation, or be imprisoned for the remainder of the sentence or for any lesser term.

"§ 4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF IMPRISONED DEFENDANT.—A defendant serving a sentence of imprisonment, or an attorney for the government at the request of the director of the facility in which the defendant is imprisoned may file a motion with the court for the district in which the facility is located for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital. A motion filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the defendant pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court is of the opinion that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until he is no longer in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital or until the expiration of his sentence of imprisonment.

"(e) DISCHARGE MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the sentence imposed upon the defendant has not expired, the court shall order that the defendant be reimprisoned.

"§ 4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDING.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to this chapter certifies that a person whose sentence is about to expire, or who has been committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to section 4241(d), or against whom all criminal charges have been dropped, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, and that suitable arrangements for the custody and care of the person are not otherwise available, he shall transmit the certificate to the clerk of the court for the district in which the person is confined. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person, and to the attorney for the government, and, if the person was committed pursuant to section 4241(d), to the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another. A certificate filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the person pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that, a psychiatric examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the state in which the person is domiciled if such state will assume responsibility for his care, custody, and treatment. If such state will not then assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such state will assume such responsibility or until the person's mental condition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another.

"(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by the preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another, the court shall order his immediate discharge.

"§ 4247. General provisions for chapter 313

"(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this chapter, 'insanity' means a mental disease as a result of which a person could not at the time the offense was committed—

"(1) understand the nature and quality of his actions constituting the offense; or

"(2) determine the wrongfulness of his actions constituting the offense.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATIONS.—A psychiatric examination ordered pursuant to this chapter shall be conducted by at least two qualified psychiatrists. The psychiatrists shall be—

"(1) designated by the court if the examination is ordered under section 4241, 4242, 4243, or 4244; or

"(2) designated by the court, and shall include one psychiatrist selected by the defendant, if the examination is ordered under section 4245 or 4246.

For the purpose of an examination pursuant to an order under section 4241, 4242, 4243, or 4244, the court may commit the person to be examined for a reasonable period, but not more than sixty days, to the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable mental hospital or another facility designated by the court as suitable.

"(c) PSYCHIATRIC REPORTS.—A psychiatric report ordered pursuant to this chapter shall be prepared by the psychiatrists designated to conduct the psychiatric examination, shall be filed with the court with copies provided to the counsel for the person examined and to the attorney for the government, and shall include—

"(1) the person's history and present symptoms;

"(2) a description of the psychological and medical tests employed and their results;

"(3) the psychiatrists' findings; and

"(4) the psychiatrists' opinions as to diagnosis, prognosis, and—

"(A) if the examination is ordered under section 4241, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense;

"(B) if the examination is ordered under section 4242, whether the person was insane at the time of the offense charged;

"(C) if the examination is ordered under section 4243 or 4246, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial danger to himself or to the person or property of another; or

"(D) if the examination is ordered under section 4244 or 4245, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which he is in need of custody, care, or treatment in a mental hospital.

"(d) HEARING.—At a hearing ordered pursuant to this chapter the person whose mental condition is the subject of the hearing shall be represented by counsel and, if he is financially unable to obtain adequate representation, counsel shall be appointed for him. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present evidence, to subpena witnesses on his behalf, and to confront and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing.

"(e) PERIODIC REPORTS BY MENTAL HOSPITAL.—The director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to—

"(1) section 4241 shall prepare semiannual reports; or

"(2) section 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246 shall prepare annual reports; concerning the mental condition of the person and recommendations concerning his continued hospitalization. The reports shall be submitted to the court that ordered the person's commitment to the facility and copies of the reports shall be submitted to such other persons as the court may direct.

"(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF A DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT AT TRIAL.—A statement made by the defendant during the course of a psychiatric examination pursuant to section 4241 or 4242 is not admissible as evidence against the accused on the issue of guilt in any criminal proceeding.

"(g) HABEAS CORPUS UNIMPAIRED.—Nothing contained in section 4243 or 4246 precludes a person who is committed under either of such sections from establishing by writ of habeas corpus his eligibility for release under such sections.

"(h) AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General—

"(1) may contract with a state, a locality, or a private agency for the confinement, hospitalization, care, or treatment of, or the provision of services to, a person committed to his custody pursuant to this chapter;

"(2) may apply for the civil commitment, pursuant to State law, of a person committed to his custody pursuant to section 4243 or 4246; and

"(3) shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services in the general implementation of the provisions of this chapter.".

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2781. A bill to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK SMALL BUSINESS ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1982

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today will amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 by adding a new section. The purpose of this section is to reserve 12 percent of the Eximbank's direct loan authority each year for applications amounting to less than $5 million.

This is, in effect, a small business set-aside.

Mr. President, these are very hard times for small businesses in the United States—for all businesses actually—but especially so for those in the small to medium range. About 12,000 businesses have failed in the past 6 months alone—over 400 a week. We are witnessing more business failings this year than any year since the "trough" of the Great Depression. Many thousands more are on the brink of failure and are just trying to hang on long enough to last through a recession that seems to have no end. Most of these businesses have had to reduce inventories, reduce new orders, and reduce drastically the number of their employees. We have an unemployment rate of about 9.5 percent. But that does not really tell the story. There are at least 10½ million Americans out of work and desperately looking for jobs; 10½ million people who want to work but cannot. A look at our economic strength indicators for the first half of this year has got to be shocking—for even the most hopeful and cheerful optimist.

The American businessman is looking for markets and frankly they are going to be hard to find in this country unless the economy turns around dramatically—and turns around soon. Since we might all agree that this miracle recovery does not appear to be just around the corner, we need to look at the vast potential of foreign markets to help us get moving.

The first question is: How are we doing in developing foreign markets for our products? Mr. President, we have had a trade deficit every year since 1975. By May of this year—even with a glut of oil on the world markets—we had a trade deficit of $3.29 billion in nonoil imports. Japan, on the other hand, with trade surpluses, experienced real economic growth of 5.3 percent in 1981—with an inflation rate of only 5.5 percent. And this was with a budget deficit of about $71 billion out of a $213 billion budget—about 33 percent.

The next question is: What are we doing, as a nation, to improve our world trade position? Are we, like the Japanese and most of our European competitors, developing an international trade strategy? No. As a matter of fact, the administration is proposing a vastly reduced lending authority for the Export-Import Bank again this year. The Bank is the major source of export financing available to American companies. In contrast to the strategy of most of our competitors, the administration is proposing a cut in loan authority available to the Bank to a level of $3.83 billion. The fiscal year 1982 request was $37 billion but was increased to $4.4 billion by the Congress. Still far below the $5.5 billion level for direct loans in fiscal year 1981. This is not new money that has to be appropriated—the Bank is self-sustaining—this is simply loan authority. But the Office of Management and Budget believes there is no justification for export assistance. The administration believes that Eximbank services "distort market forces." Frankly it is this kind of thinking that is distorted. Eximbank financing is an investment, not a subsidy. The administration's policies are simply opening vast markets in the developing nations to our competitiors.

But even an increase in loan authority, or the creation of a "war chest," which has also been proposed, is not going to directly benefit the small companies looking to enter foreign markets. As it was pointed out recently in congressional testimony by Mr. Donald E. Stingel, a former director of the Export-Import Bank:

Small and medium-sized companies, particularly those selling only technical components, not a complete product, are relegated to the Bank's discount loan program or merely to insurance and guarantee coverage which results in higher commercial loan rates which are uncompetitive. Our OECD competitors finance about anything large or small, at the same loan cover and interest rates.

Mr. Stingel also said in his testimony that the Bank has an established practice—an unwritten rule—that $5 million is the lower limit for financing. As a result, about 14 companies are responsible for 50 percent of our nonmilitary capital goods exports.

There are, of course, other barriers to small- and medium-sized businesses the most formidable being our interpretation of our own antitrust laws. But the badly needed trading company legislation, S. 734, has passed the Senate unanimously and similar legislation is moving forward in the House. Once this legislation is enacted into law, and a lot of small- and medium-sized companies get together in export trading companies, there will be a tremendous need for competitive financing—for direct loans. The first question asked to these new companies by a developing nation considering the purchase of equipment and technology will be to the extent of external financing available. If the Congress accepts even the limited request for loan authority by the President, $3.9 billion, about $500,000,000 will be available for applications under $5,000,000—if this legislation I am introducing today is enacted.

Mr. President, the technological lead we hold in this country is severely jeopardized. The survival of many of our domestic industries is in question. By not aggressively pursuing a strategy of competition in foreign markets, we risk being limited to only one market. Most of our toughest competitors look at all of the markets in the world as a comprehensive whole. When entering a foreign market they are not always concerned with short-term profits.

We need to look to the fastest growing markets also. We need to get to the developing nations with the products and technologies they need. For example, Japan and West Germany, among others, are making all-out efforts to support export sales of energy conservation and solar energy systems. They want to get a foothold now to dominate and gain future control over the high potential markets in developing but energy-poor nations throughout the world.

We have to remember that small business is the cutting edge of technology development and if we give small business half a chance we are not going to lose the worldwide economic leadership we have worked so hard for. My Arizona companies tell me they can bring down unit costs with increased production—they can bring down production costs 30 percent by doubling plant capacity. By meeting foreign demands they can bring down costs for their products in this country. And, I believe we can do this—include small business in Eximbank financing—without sacrificing large exports.

Mr. President, the Eximbank was originally formed in 1934 by Executive order and was legislated in the 1945 act, Public Law 79-173. The law directs the Bank "to provide guarantees, insurance, and extensions of credit at rates and on terms and other conditions which are competitive" with the financing provided by countries which compete with U.S. companies in the world markets.

To do this, the Bank provides several services. Primarily, it makes direct loans to foreign buyers of U.S. goods and services. Its ability to compete with other lending sources depends to a great extent on the interest rates and terms of maturity it is able to offer. Usually it requires a down payment from the buyer and requires private financing for the balance. It also provides exporters with insurance against political and commercial risk, provides guarantees to private banks financing exports and provides discount loans to discount debt obligations that U.S. commercial banks acquire.

The Eximbank is self-sustaining in that it receives no Government funding. The Bank operates on retained earnings and borrowings from the Treasury and from private capital markets. It receives no funds through the appropriations process, but its overall lending authority is approved annually in the Federal budget.

I would hope, Mr. President, that this proposed legislation will be given prompt and positive consideration by the Senate, and ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2781

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may cited as the "Export-Import Bank Small Business Assistance Act of 1982".

Section 7 (a) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Not less than 12 per centum of the loan authority of the Bank in any fiscal year shall be available only for transactions involving loans in amounts of $5,000,000 or less.".

By Mr. DODD:

S. 2782. A bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release on behalf of the United States a reversionary interest in certain land previously conveyed to the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EKONK CEMETERY LAND RELEASE

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am introducing a bill today which would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release for sale 1 acre of land in Connecticut which is presently bound by U.S. reversionary interests. This release would apply exclusively to 1 parcel of State-owned land and would be used solely for the purpose of expanding the adjacent Ekonk Cemetery.

In an attempt to avoid foreclosure of lands and to offer farmers some financial relief during the thirties, the U.S. Government bought up many parcels of farm lands. Under the Bankhead Jones Farm Tenant Act of 1935, the Government gave this land to the States provided that these lands be used strictly for public purposes.

The Connecticut attorney general has ruled that the State cannot sell the desired land to the Ekonk Cemetery because of this public purpose reversionary clause. This bill would strike the public purpose clause with the exclusive aim of expanding by 1 acre the cemetery which is already at capacity. Once this has been accomplished, the State will no longer have any objections to its sale.

Furthermore, Mr. President, this bill would not authorize the sale, lease, or otherwise summarily dispose of such lands except to the Ekonk Cemetery and only for the purpose of expansion.

Mr. President, I urge that the Senate act promptly on this bill which would merely provide an additional 0.93 acres of land for sorely needed burial grounds in the town of Sterling.

I ask that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2782

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a)(1) Subject to subsection (b) the Secretary of Agriculture shall release on behalf of the United States, with respect to the land—

(A) described in section 2 of this Act, and

(B) conveyed, along with certain other parcels of land situated within the Town of Sterling, County of Windham, State of Connecticut by a quitclaim deed dated November 18, 1954, the condition in such deed which requires that such lands be used for public purposes, and if not so used, that the lands revert to and revest in the United States.

(2) Section 32(c) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act (7) U.S.C. 1011(c) shall not apply to the release authorized in paragraph (1) of the subsection.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture shall not execute the release authorized in subsection (a)(1) until the State of Connecticut, in consideration of such release, enters into an agreement satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture which provides that the state will not sell, lease, exchange, or otherwise dispose of the lands to which the release applies—

(1) except to the Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated, of Sterling, Connecticut, exclusively for the expansion of its existing cemetery; and

(2) unless the proceeds from such disposal are—

(A) deposited and held in an account open to inspection by the Secretary of Agriculture, and

(B) used, if withdrawn from such account, exclusively for public purposes.

SEC. 2. The land referred to in section 1(a)(1) is the certain parcel of land formerly vested in the United States (a portion of the land designated as the J. E. Tanner Tract 6b) and situated in the Town of Sterling, County of Windham, State of Connecticut, containing .93 acres of land, more or less, bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a stonewall corner located in the southerly line of the "Cedar Swamp Road", so-called being the northeast corner of the herein described premises and the northwest corner of the existing Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated; thence south 14 degrees, 49 minutes east, 152.1 feet, more or less, along a stonewall to a wall corner; thence north 64 degrees, 50 minutes east, 145.7 feet, more or less, along a stonewall to a wall corner, the last two courses bounding easterly and northerly on the aforesaid Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated; thence south 14 degrees, 53 minutes east, 50 feet, more or less, to an iron pin; thence south 64 degrees, 50 minutes west, 308 feet, more or less, to an iron pin; thence north 14 degrees, 49 minutes west, 204 feet, more or less, to an iron pin set in the southerly line of the aforesaid "Cedar Swamp Road", the last three courses bounding easterly, southerly, and westerly on remaining land of the State of Connecticut; thence north 66 degrees, 26 minutes east, 162.9 feet, more or less, to a wall corner the place of beginning, bounding northerly on the said "Cedar Swamp Road".●

S.J. Res. 220. Joint resolution to authorize the erection of a memorial on public grounds in the District of Columbia to honor and commemorate members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean war; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

MEMORIAL TO HONOR THE MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES WHO SERVED IN KOREA

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today we have the opportunity to rectify an old injustice which has gone unnoticed for almost 30 years. We have failed to honor a group of dedicated Americans and citizens of other lands who suffered and died for the cause of freedom. I am speaking, of course, of the brave men and women who served their countries during the Korean conflict. With work on the Vietnam memorial underway, this is the only major war in the history of this country which has no national monument to honor those who fought and gave their lives in it. Today, July 27, 1982, on the 29th anniversary of the Korean armistice, it is fitting and appropriate that we introduce a joint resolution which would authorize construction of such a monument.

We all remember the Korean war and remember the fears and horrors which accompanied it. This was a critical period in world history, for the free world was being tested as to how it would react when the freedom of another nation was being threatened. We and other peace-loving nations reacted strongly, bravely, and admirably. But in our victory, we suffered great losses. Over 100,000 were wounded and over 54,000 were killed. It is these Americans who suffered and died who unquestionably deserve to be memorialized by those of us who continue to reap the benefits of the freedom for which they fought.

A committee has already been established to oversee the fundraising, design, and construction of a monument to honor the victims of the Korean war. This national sponsoring committee is made up of many notable individuals including Gen. Mark Clark, Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff John Vessey, and Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway who served as the commanding general of both the U.S. 8th Army with attached foreign contingents and the Army of the Republic of Korea and later as the Commander in Chief of all United Nations forces there.

I was most honored when another member of this committee, retired Col. Scooter Burke, asked me to introduce this legislation on behalf of the committee. Some of you may remember Scooter who served for 11 years as Chief Congressional Liaison Officer in the House of Representatives for the Secretary of the Army. Others may know him by his reputation as the most decorated soldier in the Korean war. I know him as a friend and a fellow Arkansan and will never forget the day in 1969 when I traveled back with him to the Korean hilltop overlooking the Imjiin River where his valiant actions many years before won him the Medal of Honor. Scooter has also won the Distinguished Service Cross, the Silver Star, the Bronze Star for Valor, three Purple Hearts, and the combat infantry badge.

Mr. President, there were many other brave men and women who gave their time and lives during this war. Six of them now serve their country in a different way—in the U.S. Senate. They are Senators WARNER, GLENN, STAFFORD, RUDMAN, CHAFEE, and CHILES.

I might emphasize again that no public funds will be used in construction of this monument. The Secretary of the Interior along with the National Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capitol Planning Commission would select the site and approve the design. Maintenance of the memorial would be the responsibility of the Interior Department or, if a site owned by the District of Columbia is selected, the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, in closing I might point out that the Korean conflict represents one of the few moments in history when a group of 16 allied nations banded together to protect the freedom of another nation. The United States, which sent in more than 5 million troops, was the leader in this effort. Now that the sons and daughters of those who fought in Korea have grown into adulthood, it is far past time to honor these defenders of freedom.

I hope that by the 30th anniversary of this armistice, the first steps will have been taken to erect this monument and correct this longstanding injustice.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 220

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

AUTHORIZATION OF ERECTION OF MEMORIAL

Section 1. A memorial is authorized to be erected on public grounds in the District of Columbia to honor and commemorate members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean war, particularly those who were killed in action, listed as missing in action, or held as prisoners of war.

SELECTION OF SITE AND APPROVAL OF DESIGN

Sec. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Interior shall select, with the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Planning Commission, a suitable site on public grounds in the District of Columbia upon which the memorial may be erected. The selection of any such site on public grounds belonging to, or under the jurisdiction of, the government of the District of Columbia, shall be subject to the approval of the Mayor of the District of Columbia.

(b) The design of, and any plans for, the memorial shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary, the National Commission of Fine Arts, and the National Capital Planning Commission.

COST OF ERECTION

SEC. 3. No moneys belonging to the United States or the District of Columbia shall be expended for the erection of the memorial.

LAPSE OF AUTHORITY TO ERECT MEMORIAL

SEC. 4. The authority conferred by this joint resolution shall lapse unless—

(1) the erection of the memorial is begun not later than five years after the date of the enactment of this joint resolution; and

(2) before the beginning of the erection of the memorial, funds are certified to be available in an amount which the Secretary considers sufficient to assure completion of the memorial.

MAINTENANCE OF MEMORIAL

SEC. 5. The maintenance of the memorial shall be the responsibility of the Secretary or, if the memorial is erected upon public grounds belonging to or under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, the responsibility of the government of the District of Columbia.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 6. For purposes of this joint resolution—

(1) the term "memorial" means the memorial authorized to be erected by section 1; and

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am proud to cosponsor Senate Joint Resolution 220 authorizing the construction of a national memorial to the veterans of the Korean conflict. On this the 29th anniversary of the Korean armistice, it is entirely appropriate that we take this action. I commend my friend, Senator PRYOR, on his initiative.

It is an unfortunate fact, Mr. President, that the veterans of the Korean war have been largely forgotten. But the fact is that thousands of Americans died in Korea—fighting for the democratic freedoms we cherish above all else.

According to the 1981 annual report of the Veterans, Administration, over 5.7 million Korean war veterans are still alive—5.7 million Americans who, despite their willingness to make the supreme sacrifice, are as yet unrecognized in an appropriate national monument.

The legislation being introduced today will require no Federal funding. While the site selection and maintenance will be coordinated by the Secretary of the Interior, the National Capital Planning Commission and the U.S. Fine Arts Commission, the responsibility of raising the funds for construction will rest with the National Committee for the War Memorial of Korea. All funding will come from private sources.

Harry Truman once said, "There is a right kind and wrong kind of victory, just as there are wars for the right thing and wars that are wrong from every standpoint * * *." The Korean war was fought for the protection of a free and democratic government, and in this resolution we have the opportunity to recognize the sacrifices of our Korean-era veterans.

Recognition for a job well done is not a partisan issue, Mr. President. I commend this joint resolution to the Senate, and ask that it receive the earliest possible consideration.

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. EAGLETON):

S.J. Res. 221. A joint resolution to require the President to include with the budget transmitted to the Congress for fiscal year 1984 a statement identifying for fiscal years 1982, 1983, and 1984 the amounts expended or estimated to be expended for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of nontactical motor vehicles, to reduce the total amount expended by executive agencies for motor vehicle operations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

MANAGEMENT OF THE FEDERAL MOTOR VEHICLE FLEET

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, today I am introducing for myself, Senator ROTH, and Senator EAGLETON the Federal Motor Vehicle Expenditure Control Act of 1982, legislation that hopefully will trigger a multiyear effort to substantially reduce the cost of operating and maintaining the Federal motor vehicle fleet, a fleet that costs the American taxpayers more than $1.1 billion annually.

I am particularly pleased to have as original cosponsors of this legislation the distinguished chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator ROTH, and the ranking minority member of that committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri, Senator EAGLETON. Both of my colleagues have a fine record on the Governmental Affairs Committee for vigorously scrutinizing Federal expenditures such as those addressed in this bill and in other administrative areas as well.

According to a March 1982 study prepared at my request by the General Services Administration (GSA), the cost to own, operate, and maintain the Federal motor vehicle fleet is in excess of $101 billion a year, an increase of $959 million or 680 percent since 1954 and a jump of $724 million or 192 percent in just the last 10 years. To add insult to injury, the GSA study team found that the actual cost of Federal motor vehicle operations could be even higher than $1.1 billion since some agencies do not even identify all fleet costs.

Mr. President, the GSA study also confirmed my suspicions that the number of nontactical motor vehicles used by Uncle Sam is excessive and must be pared back. In 1980, the number of federally owned vehicles had reached a staggering 445,000, almost double the number of federally owned vehicles in 1954. What makes this increase all the more astounding is that the Defense Department, our largest owner of motor vehicles, has actually reduced its fleet by 48,690 over the past 10 years.

Mr. President, my legislation takes a number of essential "first steps" in bringing the size, cost, and management of the Federal motor vehicle fleet under control. I also want to say at the outset that my bill has the full support of the Administrator of the General Services Administration, Mr. Gerald Carmen. Here is what this legislation will do:

1. Instructs the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to direct each agency head to establish a central monitoring system for the oversight of agency motor vehicle operations and related activities.

2. Instructs the Director of OMB to require each agency head to develop a system to identify, collect, and analyze data with respect to all costs incurred by the agency in operating motor vehicles, including Government-owned vehicles, leased vehicles, and privately-owned vehicles used for official purposes, and to promulgate standards for the agencies to follow in establishing and identifying the costs associated with the Federal fleet.

3. Directs the heads of all executive branch agencies to tell the Congress in their annual budget justifications the amounts spent or requested for motor vehicle acquisition, maintenance, leasing and operations and to justify why the existing and new motor vehicle operations requirements of the agency cannot be met by using the GSA motor pool system.

4. Directs the President to include in his annual budget of the United States a compilation of the agency reports on their motor vehicle operating costs.

5. Directs the Director of OMB to require the head of each agency to identify opportunities for consolidating intraagency motor vehicle facilities where shown to be cost effective, and to report to OMB on any possible impediments to such consolidations.

6. Instructs the OMB Director, in cooperation with GSA, to require each agency to identify opportunities for consolidation of motor vehicle administration and maintenance between executive agencies of the Government where shown to be cost effective.

7. Directs the head of GSA to take steps necessary to reduce motor vehicle storage and disposal costs and to improve the rate of return on motor vehicle sales through better reconditioning of vehicles on sale.

8. Requires the Dir OMB Director to reduce the cost of operating and maintaining the Federal motor vehicle fleet governmentwide by $150 million in fiscal 1983.

10. Directs OMB, GSA, and GAO to make various reports to the Congress on the implementation of the provisions and directives made in this legislation.

Mr. President, improving the management and reducing the cost of the Federal motor vehicle fleet is not going to happen overnight. It is not going to grab any headlines nor will it ever compete with taxes, the defense budget, or social security in dominating the time, attention, and energy of the Congress over the next 3 years: Improving this important General Government activity is mundane and will take a lot of hard work. But a systematic effort by OMB, GSA, and the Congress to reduce the cost of the operation and maintenance of the Federal fleet has the potential to save hundreds of millions of tax dollars through better management and closer scrutiny both the executive and legislative branches. This legislation will force OMB and the executive agencies to roll up their sleeves and get this important jobe done.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and to enact it as soon as possible.

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this resolution which will help to crub the astounding waste and inefficiencies existing in the Federal Government's management of its motor vehicle fleet. I also commend Senator DECONCINI and the Senate Committee on Appropriations for requesting the General Services Administration to prepare a report on Management of the Federal motor vehicle fleet which is the basis for this resolution.

The findings of the GSA report are very disturbing. The report documents that the costs of owning, operating, and maintaining the Federal motor vehicle fleet is in excess of $1.1 billion a year. This marks an increase of $959,000 or 680 percent since 1954 and an increase of $724,000 or 192 percent in the last 10 years. GSA documents that the actual costs of Federal fleet operations could rise well beyond the $1.1 billion spent in 1980 in future years.

There is a need for reliable motor vehicles to conduct essential Government business. There are thousands of employees who conduct inspections, deliver mail, conduct law enforcement activities check grazing lands and irrigation networks, review health and safety activities and other oversight, inspection and review function vital to the Government's day-to-day operations. But the number of vehicles in the Federal motor vehicle fleet raises the question of whether the agencies have gone well beyond necessity in stockpiling cars and trucks. The Department of Agriculture, for example, has 4,019 sedans and 659 station wagons. This is just a small portion of the 445,000 federally owned vehicles and does not include the "shadow fleet" of privately-owned vehicles used for official Government business.

What makes all this more astounding is that the agencies not only have huge vehicle fleets, they also have duplicative staffs to control their vehicles. For example, the Treasury Department has 12 different staffs to handle its 11,500 cars and trucks, Interior's fleet of 14,000 vehicles is overseen by seven different agency divisions and Justice has seven separate staffs to control its 6,800 vehicles. "Leave the driving to us" has characterized the attitude of Congress toward agency purchasing and operating of motor vehicles and the result has been excessive waste and duplication in the management structure of agency fleet vehicle operations.

The GSA report also documents a proliferation of related cost accounting and information systems at the field level. Insufficient control over intra-agency vehicle operations exists because central or top management officials have not exercised their authority over the fleet activities of their agency. Duplicate fleet operations have caused unnecessary expenditures for facilities, vehicles, and equipment to meet support needs. Vehicle acquisition methods are subject to laws and regulations that result in limiting competition in procurement. Budgetary and legislative procedures to acquire vehicles are not standardized. All this leads to an incredible need for the type of resolution that Senators DECONCINI, EAGLETON, and I are introducing today.

This resolution will begin the process of improving the management of the Federal fleet. It has the full support of the GSA and the administration. The resolution would establish a central monitoring system in which each agency will be required to develop a system to collect and interpret the data of vehicle costs including Government-owned, leased and privately-owned vehicles used for official purposes. This legislation, in addition, would, first, require agencies and departments to develop full-cost disclosure systems, second, identify through a report to the Senate Governmental Affairs and Appropriations Committees, for fiscal years 1981, 1982, and 1983 the actual amounts spent or requested by every agency and department for the purchase, lease, operation, and maintenance of motor vehicles, and third, direct these agencies and departments to reduce their fiscal year 1983 motor vehicle operations, maintenance, leasing, and procurement budgets by at least $150 million and report the results to the Committees on Governmental Affairs and Appropriations.

I urge support of this legislation and will work closely with my colleagues to enact it.●

olution proposing an amendment to the Constitution altering Federal fiscal decisionmaking procedures.

SENATE RESOLUTION 433—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. PACKWOOD, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 433

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of H.R. 6273. Such waiver is necessary because H.R. 6273 authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1983, and such bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1978 as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Specifically section 2 of H.R. 6273 would authorize the appropriation of $53,580,000 for fiscal year 1983 for various programs under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 and the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act. These programs include: overall motor vehicle safety responsibilities of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) ($51.4 million); establishment of bumper standards ($320,000); compilation and provision of information to the public on passenger motor vehicles ($1.677 million); and prevention of odometer fraud ($183,000).

Congress has not authorized appropriations since 1978 for NHTSA operations under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 and the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act. The authorizations contained in H.R. 6273 are necessary to assure that sufficient funds are available for NHTSA to carry out its safety programs, which include continuing development and promulgation of safety standards, conducting safety research, and ordering recalls or remedies of automotive defects.

SENATE RESOLUTION 434—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 434

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of H.R. 6260. Such waiver is necessary because H.R. 6260 authorizes appropriations for the Patent and Trademark Office which includes the implementation of new patent and trademark fee schedules on October 1, 1982, and such a bill or a companion Senate bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1982, as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The waiver of section 402(a) is necessary to permit enactment of H.R. 6260 in a timely manner so (1) the Patent and Trademark Office of the Department of Commerce can be authorized for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985, and (2) new patent and trademark fee schedules can be implemented by October 1, 1982. With regard to the latter point, time is of the essence since a notice period and hearing on the proposed fee schedules must occur prior to October 1, 1982.

The levels of appropriations authorized by H.R. 6260, although $8 million above the President's request for fiscal year 1982, are supported by the Reagan Administration and would be within budget outlay levels for that purpose.

The Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives have therefore had adequate notice of this authorization. Thus, congressional consideration of this authorization will in no way interfere with or delay the appropriations process.

SENATE RESOLUTION 435—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 435

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 2222. Such waiver is necessary because S. 2222 authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1983, and such bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1982, as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Act of 1974 for such authorization.

The waiver of section 402(a) is necessary to permit enactment of important reforms of the immigration laws and policies of the United States. S. 2222 is the result of two years of deliberations by the bipartisan Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy, as well as a year's series of hearings in the Congress, including joint hearings conducted by the appropriate subcommittees in the Senate and the House of Representatives.

S. 2222 provides an authorization for fiscal year 1983 of $60 million to implement measures which will improve control of both illegal and legal immigration to the United States.

At the time of the 1983 budget hearings, the Attorney General testified before both the Committees on the Judiciary and the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives that the Administration would support appropriations needed to carry out immigration reforms in 1983. Furthermore, because the 1983 appropriations process is not yet complete, congressional consideration of this authorization will in no way interfere with or delay the appropriations process.

SENATE RESOLUTION 436—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED RELATING TO RADIO AND TELEVISION COVERAGE OF THE SENATE

Mr. MATHIAS, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, reported the following original resolution; which was placed on the calendar:

S. RES. 436

Whereas on April 21, 1982, the Senate agreed to S. Res. 20, which provided for television or radio coverage, or both, of proceedings of the Senate, and

Whereas such S. Res. 20 directed that the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, within 60 days from the adoption thereof, report to the Senate a resolution containing such regulations and such rules changes as are needed to implement television or radio coverage, or both, of proceedings of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That (a) the Senate hereby authorizes and directs that there be both television and radio broadcast coverage (together with videotape and audio recordings) of proceedings in the Senate chamber.

(b) Such broadcast coverage shall be—

(1) provided in accordance with the provisions of this resolution,

(2) provided continuously at all times when the Senate is in session (or is meeting in committee of the whole), except for any time when a meeting with closed doors is ordered, and

(3) provided subject to the provisions pertaining to the Senate gallery contained in the following Standing Rules of the Senate: Rule XIX, paragraphs 6 and 7, Rule XXV, paragraph 1(n), and Rule XXXIII, paragraph 2.

SEC. 2. The radio and television broadcast of Senate proceedings shall be—

(a) supervised and operated by the Senate,

(b) made available on a "live" basis and free of charge to (1) any accredited member of the Senate Radio and Television Correspondents Gallery, (2) the coaxial cable system of the Architect of the Capitol, and (3) such other newsgathering, education, or information distributing entity as may be authorized by the Committee on Rules and Administration to receive such broadcast.

SEC. 3. The television broadcast of Senate proceedings shall follow the Presiding Officer and Senators who are recognized to speak by the Presiding Officer (including Senators who are so recognized with the consent of another Senator to interrupt such other Senator).

SEC. 4. (a) The broadcast coverage by radio and television of the proceedings of the Senate shall be implemented as provided in this section.

(b) The Architect of the Capitol, in consultation with the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, shall—

(1) construct necessary broadcasting facilities for both radio and television (including a control room and the modification of Senate sound and lighting fixtures),

(2) employ necessary expert consultants, and

(3) acquire and install all necessary equipment and facilities to (A) produce a broadcast-quality "live" audio and color video signal of such proceedings, and (B) provide an archive-quality audio and color video tape recording of such proceedings:

Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol, in carrying out the duties specified in clauses (1) through (3) of this subsection, shall not enter into any contract for the purchase or installation of equipment, for the employment of any consultant, or for the provision of training to any person, unless the same shall first have been approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

(c) The Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate shall (1) employ such staff as may be necessary, working in conjunction with the Senate Recording and Photographic Studios, to operate and maintain all broadcast audio and color video equipment installed pursuant to this resolution, (2) make audio and video tape recordings of Senate proceedings, (3) make copies of such recordings available, upon payment to him of a fee fixed therefor by the Committee on Rules and Administration, to Members of the Senate and to each person described in subsection (b) (1) and (3) of section 2 of this resolution, and (4) retain for 90 days after the day any Senate proceedings took place such recordings thereof, and as soon thereafter as possible, transmit to the Librarian of Congress and to the Archivist of the United States copies of such recordings: Provided, That the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, in carrying out the duties specified in clauses (1) and (2) of this subsection, shall comply with appropriate Senate procurement and other regulations.

(d) The Librarian of Congress and the Archivist of the United States shall each receive, store, and make available to the public, at no cost for viewing or listening on the premises where stored and upon payment of a fee equal to the cost involved through distribution of taped copies, recordings of Senate proceedings transmitted to them by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 5. (a) As soon as practicable after the necessary equipment has been installed, there shall begin a test period during which tests of radio and television coverage of Senate proceedings shall be conducted by the staffs of the Committee on Rules and Administration and of the Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate. Such test period shall end on such date as may be agreed upon by the Majority Leader, the Minority Leader, the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and the ranking minority member of such Committee.

(b) During such test period—

(1) final procedures for camera direction control shall be established.

(2) coverage of Senate proceedings shall not be transmitted, except that, at the direction of the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, such coverage may be transmitted over the coaxial cable system of the Architect of the Capitol, and

(3) no recordings of Senate proceedings shall be required to be made or retained by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 6. The use of tape duplications of broadcast coverage of the proceedings of the Senate for political or commercial purposes is strictly prohibited; and any such tape duplication furnished to any person shall be made on the condition that it not be used for political or commercial purposes.

SEC. 7. Any changes in the regulations made by this resolution shall be made only by Senate resolution. However, the Committee on Rules and Administration may adopt such procedures and such regulations, which do not contravene the regulations made by this resolution, as it deems necessary to assure the proper implementation of the purposes of this resolution and S. Res. 20, 97th Congress.

SEC. 8. Not to exceed $3,500,000 shall be expended by the Architect of the Capitol in carrying out the duties and functions imposed on him by this resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 437—RELATIVE TO JAMES G. WATT, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. HART, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. DIXON, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. SASSER) submitted the following resolution which was referrred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 437

Whereas, on June 17, 1982, Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt wrote to the Ambassador of Israel to the United States that, "if the liberals of the Jewish community join with other liberals of this nation to oppose [the administration's energy policies] they will weaken our ability to be a good friend of Israel"; and

Whereas this statement unjustly and egregiously impugns the loyalty of American Jews; and

Whereas an administration spokesman has stated that Secretary Watt's statement does not represent administration policy; and

Whereas Secretary Watt's statement indicates a profound misunderstanding of the reasons the United States is committed to the security of an independent and democratic Israel;

Whereas America's commitment to the security of Israel is not conditional upon popular support for the energy policy or any other policy of this or any other administrtion; and

Whereas the right of Americans to speak freely, individually or in assembly, in support of or opposition to the policies of any administration's policies is fundamental to the preservation of the American democracy; and therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Secretary Watt's statement is unacceptable and is hereby repudiated and denounced.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in submitting this resolution stating the sense of the Senate that the recent statement by Secretary of Interior James Watt, on the administration's energy policies and support for Israel, is unacceptable and intolerant. From the worst member in the President's Cabinet we have now heard one of the worst appeals to prejudice from any national official in many years. His statement deserves to be denounced.

As I have said before, and there is now more reason to say it again, Mr. Watt should have the good sense to resign. If he continues to cling to an office for which he is so clearly unfit, the President should dismiss him. He may be a good fundraiser for right-wing candidates, but he is a bad Secretary of the Interior. And he is even worse as a diplomat. Given the chance, Mr. Watt will do for our foreign policy what he has done for our environmental policy. Just as he regards our coastal and offshore areas as commodities to sell to the highest bidder, he seems to think our Mideast policy can be bought or bartered. Mr. Watt appears to be a bit confused. We already have a Secretary of State—and his name, we can be grateful, is not James Watt.

And when it comes to energy, Mr. Watt's cheerleading for the regressive Reagan policy is hardly helpful, since that policy leaves the Nation dangerously vulnerable to foreign oil cutoffs. The President's actions—his veto of the standby Petroleum Allocation Act, his refusal to provide an adequate fill rate for the strategic petroleum reserve, his rejection of sound conservation programs, and his opposition to the development of an emergency plan to sudden energy shortages—amount to playing Russian roulette with the Nation's security and the well-being of its citizens.

On June 17, Mr. Watt wrote to the Ambassador of Israel that:

> If the liberals of the Jewish community join with other liberals of this Nation to oppose [the administration's energy policies], they will weaken our ability to be a good friend of Israel.

Mr. Watt's letter impugns the loyalty of American Jews; it denies the essence of our democracy.

No American is any less an American because he or she disagrees with the energy policies of this administration. But Mr. Watt suggests a different standard. He has sent a clear message to all American Jews: If they do not support this administration's energy policies, this administration's attitude toward Israel will become hostile. That is an unconscionable threat—and the American people fortunately will never let any President go down that prejudiced path.

All Americans believe that they should be able to take positions and hold opinions without fear of such unworthy reprisals. The right to speak freely is the foundation of our democracy. The Constitution protects it. And no administration should ever be permitted to abridge it—no matter what its Secretary of the Interior may think.

This Nation's support for the State of Israel is firmly founded on our national security needs. Israel is the only democracy and our strongest ally in the Middle East. Support for Israel must not be misused as a stick by this administration to extort support for domestic policies.

Secretary Watt's words threaten political blackmail of both the American Jewish community and the State of Israel. He has neither the right nor the authority, as a Cabinet official of our Government, to write such a letter to the Ambassador of Israel. He owes the Nation an apology. He owes Ambassador Arens an apology. And he owed the first amendment an apology. The Senate of the United States should go on record today against this insult not only to American Jews, but to all Americans.

I therefore urge our colleagues to support this resolution, which I am proud to support. A Senate vote for this resolution will be a vote for constitutional principle, for fair play in debating domestic policy, and for our Nation's overriding interests in the Middle East.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Moynihan resolution and to express my objections to the letter which Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt sent on June 17 to Israel's Ambassador to the United States, Moshe Arens.

In his letter, Secretary Watt made several statements which he, as a member of the President's Cabinet, should not have made.

First, Secretary Watt suggested that our Nation's commitment to Israel is based primarily on the ability of the United States to meet its present and future energy requirements. For a U.S. Cabinet officer to make such a suggestion does a disservice to those who, in good faith, seek to formulate a coherent American foreign policy.

This suggestion is harmful not only because it came from a Cabinet officer, but also because it is untrue. U.S. support for Israel is based on many factors, not the least of which is the desire on our part to encourage the development of democracy in the Middle East, to have in that region a state willing to sympathetically consider U.S. concerns and interests, and to encourage the development of a society in which the discrimination and hatred experienced by Jews earlier in this century is not present. While America's access to adequate petroleum supplies must remain an important concern, it does not now, and should never, dictate our foreign policy decisionmaking. If we let it, we are, in fact, giving in to international blackmail of the most serious nature.

Second, Secretary Watt should not have suggested in his letter that American Jewry and particularly "* * * liberals of the Jewish Community * * *" undermine Israel's security objectives when they fail to agree with the President's energy policies. This is a truly preposterous suggestion.

Does Secretary Watt really think that everyone who disagrees with the policies advanced by him and the President are engaged in some kind of effort to weaken our country? Does he truly believe that blind obedience to the President's production-only oriented energy policy is the only path patriotic Americans can follow? Does he not acknowledge the policy benefits which can be realized from an open discussion of the merits and deficiencies associated with the administration's energy plans?

This brings me to my last objection to Secretary Watt's letter to Ambassador Arens. The Secretary was wrong to suggest in his concluding paragraph that the Ambassador could help the Secretary get in touch with groups of the Ambassador's supporters in this Nation so that the Secretary might share with them "the truth of what this administration is trying to do for America and the free world."

This is a member of the Cabinet writing.

Has Secretary Watt become so ineffectual that he has to request the help of the Israeli Ambassador so that he can carry his message to the American people? Why does he resort to surreptitious indirect lobbying? Why does not the Secretary simply pick up his telephone and ask for an audience with those groups he seeks to reach? Despite the apparent universal lack of enthusiasm for his policies, I cannot believe that his requests to express his views would be denied.

Mr. President, 1 year ago I called for Secretary Watt's resignation on the grounds that his energy and environmental policies are damaging this country and are destroying worthwhile resource management programs which have taken us many years to develop. Today I renew my call for the Secretary to step down. I do so now not only because I think his policies are bad, but because I believe his judgment is unsound as well.

Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATE RESOLUTION 438—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. COHEN, from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 438

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 2059, a bill to change the coverage of officials and the standards for the appointment of a special prosecutor in the special prosecutor provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, and for other purposes. Such waiver is necessary to permit reauthorization of funds for the functions of the Department of Justice under section 601(c) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, with respect to independent counsels appointed under chapter 39 of title 28, United States Code.

ed by existing law; S. 1978, to quiet title and possession with respect to a certain private land claim in Livingston Parish, La.; S. 2279, to designate the Alben Barkley National Historic Site; S. 1705, to amend the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1979 (43 U.S.C. 1701) to permit temporary use by Federal departments and agencies of public lands controlled by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior; House Joint Resolution 207, to require the Secretary of the Interior to place a plaque at the U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial honoring Joseph Rosenthal, photographer of the scene depicted by the memorial; S. 2308, to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain property to the city of Show Low, Ariz.; Senate Joint Resolution 168, to establish reciprocal entrance fees for Canadian citizens entering Glacier National Park in connection with the 50th anniversary of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park; S. 1661, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain lands by exchange for addition to Effigy Mounds National Monument in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; and Senate Joint Resolution 155, redesignating the Saint Croix Island National Monument in the State of Maine as the "Saint Croix Island International Historic Site."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON TOXIC SUBSTANCES AND ENVIRONMENTAL OVERSIGHT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight of the Environment and Public Works Committee, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, July 28, to consider S. 2131, a bill to amend the Safe Drinking Water Act, and ground water protection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Environment and Public Works Committee be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 10 a.m. on Tuesday, July 27, to hold a full committee markup on S. 1606, the Nuclear Properties Insurance Act, and the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1982.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I appreciate this opportunity today to express my concern about S. 2105 and S. 2106, the Public Employees Retirement Income Security Act legislation. These bills would establish Federal reporting and disclosure standards for public employee pension plans. These pension plans have grown and prospered under local management and control, and I think it is unwise to impose Federal regulations at the State or local level unless there are documented reasons to do so. In addition, increased regulations at the Federal level would raise the administrative costs incurred by these public plans and diminish the participant's potential return on an investment.

State and local employees around the Nation have invested much time and money in the planning of secure pension plans for their retirement. The pension boards that administer these plans have a great financial responsibility to participants to insure that their retirement plans are invested wisely and are actuarially sound. With the investment of billions of dollars in these programs, the need for establishing proper regulations that guarantee the accountability of these pension plans is obvious. However, I do not believe that the currently proposed legislation is warranted, especially in my home State of Texas.

The interests of participants and annuitants in public employee pension plans in Texas are protected by current State law. The Texas Legislature, for example, has established the State Pension Review Board to supervise the investments and to monitor the accountability of public pension plans in my State. In addition, State law requires that disclosures be made to participants and that information about the plans be available for public and government review. The record indicates that these measures have led to prudent investments by the public pension plans in Texas and successful returns for public employees across the State who rely on these plans for financial security in retirement. Thus, I will oppose any unwarranted intrusions by the Federal Government in State and local public pension plans.●

IRON CURTAIN COMING DOWN AGAIN?

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been recently informed of a disturbing development which represents, I believe, a serious regression in the course of East-West relations, and a violation of the Helsinki Final Act of 1975. I am referring to the announcement that the Soviet Union is in the process of drastically reducing the number of telephone lines between that country and the West. For instance, British Telecom, the British national telephone company, has been informed by the Soviet Ministry of Communications that the number of lines to Britain will be reduced form 46 to 14, while those to the Soviet Union will be cut from 42 to 14. On July 15, 20 of the 24 lines from Vienna, Austria, to Moscow were taken out of service. France, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Finland have also been informed by the Soviets of similar projected reductions. The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe has also been told by an American Telephone & Telegraph Co., representative that their international section has been notified of upcoming long-line reductions between the United States and the Soviet Union.

In addition, these measures have been accompanied by the suspension of direct-dial telephone connections from Moscow to the West, while direct-dial capabilities from the West into the Soviet Union have, for all intents and purposes, been reduced to nil.

Curiously enough, the nation that persistently lays claim to the "most advanced science in the world" now maintains that these reductions are necessitated by "technical factors" that will not be corrected until 1984. I daresay that telephome communications between Soviet and Polish military facilities will not be threatened by any technical problems.

Perhaps a more plausible explanation might be found in a comment which Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko is reported to have made to Austrian President Kirchschlaeger during the latter's recent visit to Moscow: "There are good phone calls, and there are bad phone calls." Translation: Too many Soviet emigrés are calling their relatives and friends still in the Soviet Union and telling them the truth about the free world.

Mr. President, the U.S. State Department has characterized these telephone service cutbacks as "creating additional obstacles in the path of the already difficult effort of putting United States-Soviet relations on a more normal course." I fully agree with this assessment and furthermore, as Cochairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I consider these moves to be a serious violation of the human contacts section of the Helsinki Final Act, in which:

> The participating states . . . make it their aim to facilitate freer movement and contacts, individually and collectively, whether privately or officially, among persons, institutions and organizations of the participating states, and contribute to the solution of the humanitarian problems that arise in that connection . . .

Mr. President, Congressman DANTE FASCELL, Chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and I have forwarded a letter to the Soviet Ambassador to the United States Dobrynin protesting this breach of the Helsinki accords and calling upon the Soviet Government to take the necessary steps to restore international telephone communications to at least their former level. I would like at this time to place into the RECORD a copy of this letter to Ambassador Dobrynin.●

FORMATION OF COUNCIL FOR EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, as a primary sponsor of legislation to foster the development of American exports through trading companies, I welcome and applaud the formation of the new Council for Export Trading Companies, Inc.

Many of us in Congress maintain that the ETC concept is an idea whose time not only has come but is long overdue. Its success will depend in large measure on how effectively the private sector meets the test of putting our legislation to use. That is where the council can fill a vital need for innovative leadership.

I wish the council every success, and look forward to its contributions toward realizing the Nation's true export potential. I ask that the council's announcement of its formation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The announcement follows:

COUNCIL FOR EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES, INC.,
Washington, D.C., July 15, 1982.

U.S. EXPORTERS FORM TRADING COMPANY COUNCIL

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 15, 1982.—A group of American exporters today announced the formation of a new trade organization to promote exports by small and medium-size companies by fostering the development of U.S. export trading companies (ETC's).

The new association, the Council for Export Trading Companies, Inc., is a national, bipartisan, non-profit organization headquartered in Washington, D.C., with a west coast office in Orange, California. Composed of entities and individuals interested in promoting export trade, the Council will provide information and assistance in organizing and operating trading companies.

The Council also will support efforts to enact federal legislation, and to adopt regulations and guidelines that facilitate the formation and operations of ETCs as well as encourage greater export activity. Of particular importance is the imminent passage of legislation which would authorize the development of U.S. ETCs with bank ownership participation and limited antitrust exemption clearances.

The Council is a private sector initiative in response to the fact that more than 80% of American exports are currently accounted for by only about 10% of some 300,000 U.S. enterprises, and of the four leading U.S. exporters, two are Japanese trading companies, which have long enjoyed the encouragement and support of the Japanese government.

The board of directors of the new Council is made up of individuals representing a broad range of large and small business organizations in banking, transportation, manufacturing, insurance and other trade service industries, as well as government and the academic community.

The Council's directors are: George Galland, Commissioner, Virginia Port Authority; The Honorable Ed Herschler, Governor of Wyoming; Charles R. Johnston, Jr., Partner, Johnston, McGeorge and Davidson; Charles Keown, President, Portsmouth Terminals, Inc.; Arthur B. Laffer, Professor of Business Economics, University of Southern California, and President of A.B. Laffer Associates; John A. McKinney, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Manville Corporation; A.E. (Ted) Michon, President, Burlington Northern International Services, Inc.; E. Anthony Newton, Senior Vice President, Philadelphia National Corporation; Richard A. Nielsen, President, Johnston & Higgins of Delaware; William K. Rapp, Senior Vice President, Valley National Bank, William A. Reinsch, Legislative Assistant, United States Senate; Gilbert Simonetti, Partner, Price Waterhouse; Jurgen F. Strasser, Senior Vice President, North Carolina National Bank; John H. Tillotson, Jr., Chairman, Century International.

Executive director of the Council is John C. L. Donaldson, a consultant in international business and public affairs and former Assistant United States Trade Representative. The law firm of Johnston, McGeorge & Davidson will serve as general counsel. Edward Lindquist is deputy executive director of the Council, and head of its west coast office. Officers of the Council also are ex-officio members of its board of directors.

Membership in the Council is open to interested companies and individuals at an annual dues rate of $450. Trade organizations, municipalities and other groups are eligible for associate membership at $250 per year. Charter memberships are available at an initial year's fee of $1,000.●

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BONDS

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, early Friday morning the Senate approved two amendments introduced by Senator D'AMATO dealing with industrial development bonds. These amendments responded directly to issues raised by a number of businessmen in my State who have been concerned about the direction and health of the IDB program. At that point time was running short, but I do want to make a brief statement on this issue.

The first amendment, which I cosponsored, had three major elements: Elimination of the sunset date of December 31, 1985, for small issue bonds; extension of faster depreciation schedules to users of IDB's; and restrictions on the type of activity eligible under the program.

For the past year the small issue IDB program has been under attack and its future blurred with uncertainty. This program has been abused in the past, but I am convinced that the program—with some restrictions—should remain in place to play an important role in this country's economic recovery. While the Finance Committee has left the door open for the renewal of the small issue program, I believe that it is useful to confirm the Senate's intent to revise—not destroy—this program, and the extension of the program through September 30, 1987, will give us that opportunity.

The depreciation provision of the amendment—retaining straight line depreciation but over a shorter life—will be an incentive for businesses to invest in plant expansion and will provide the means for them to do so. In these days of high interest rates and low demand, a faster writeoff can mean the difference between success and failure for many businesses, and with businesses failing at a rate of more than 400 per week we should look for any opportunity to keep otherwise healthy firms in operation.

The committee is correct in its concern over the revenue impact of the depreciation proposal, but it seems to me that this problem would be better addressed by a further tightening of the scope of eligible activities under the program. For that reason I am pleased that the D'Amato amendment takes a step in that direction by prohibiting the use of IDB's for country clubs, racquet sports facilities, skating clubs, racetracks and other sports facilities. In fact, I think we should go even further and eliminate IDB's for office buildings, restaurants and auto and motorcycle sales facilities for example.

I sympathize with the committee's deep concern over the immediate revenue effects of any changes in the program. The committee members, quite properly, are working to increase current revenues and reduce today's deficit.

We must also be concerned, however, about the longer term health of our economy. We are aware of the unacceptably high national unemployment figures. My own State of Arkansas has had an unemployment rate well above the national average, with plants closing down in all corners of the State, so I see the IDB section of the tax bill not just as a potential way to reduce the deficit but also as a means to create jobs and eventually raise revenue as new jobs generate new taxable income. Moreover, the incentives created by the D'Amato amendment will enable U.S. businesses to compete with strong, often subsidized, foreign industry.

Senator D'AMATO's second amendment removed the interest on IDB's from coverage under the minimum individual tax. This amendment puts IDB's on equal footing with all other tax-exempt bonds and, in combination with the Dodd amendment passed late Thursday night, will encourage individuals to invest in municipal bonds, IDB's and mortgage revenue bonds.

I should like to commend Senator D'AMATO for his amendments and Senators STENNIS, STEVENS, LONG, and DOLE for the valuable work they did. I hope we can continue to refine and restrict this program to make it work to create jobs and provide capital for further growth.●

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS OF JON HASSLER AT ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, all of us, over the years, have had the pleasure, and just as often, the agony, of delivering commencement speeches. Every so often, if we are lucky, a particular line or maybe even an entire paragraph might stand out and be remembered by our audiences.

Only rarely do commencement speeches really live up to their intended purpose; that is, leave the graduating students with a message to which they can return throughout their lives for guidance, reassurance and inspiration.

Recently, I had the pleasure of coming across such a speech. The experience was made all the more pleasurable by the fact that the speaker was a college classmate of mine and his audience were graduates of my alma mater, St. John's University in Collegeville, Minn.

Jon Hassler offers an important insight into one of the most pressing problems of modern society, vocational burnout. He is speaking from the vantage of a teacher and writer—two professions most commonly associated with burnout—but his words have meaning for everyone.

Jon gives us the seven discoveries he has made about burnout. They are more than just unrelated revelations; Jon's discoveries serve as useful guidelines for dealing with burnout. I commend them to all my colleagues and ask that Jon Hassler's commencement address be included in today's RECORD.

The address follows:

THE BELIKOV SYNDROME

(By Jon Hassler)

If I hadn't rejected it for sounding too dismal, the title of this talk might have been, "Burnouts I Have Known."

The subject of vocational burnout has been on my mind ever since I delivered a commencement address in a small high school in northern Minnesota, where I was seated on the stage next to the superintendent of schools, and as we watched the graduates come forward to receive their diplomas from a member of the school board, I was astonished to hear the superintendent muttering into my ear about how much he hated his job. He spoke in the bitterest terms. He said the town was provincial, the men and women of the town were ignorant, and the students—he said this pointing to several examples—were savages. He said he would soon qualify for his pension and he could hardly wait.

Put yourself in my place. It was one of those rare moments in life when two opposing alternatives become so tangible that you can reach out and touch them. In front of me were four dozen 18-years-olds wearing their caps and gowns and expressions of hope, and beside me was a man coming to the end of his career in a state of absolute cynicism. In front of me, punctuated by flashbulbs, was that community's most important ceremony of the year, and beside me the man who had organized the ceremony was insisting, in the gloomiest terms, that the community was not worthy of him.

I came away believing that I had never seen such a graphic case of the Belikov Syndrome, which is my term for life-avoidance, which is also my term for what I see in people who suffer from severe cases of burnout. By life-avoidance I mean the constant desire to hold life—and particularly one's vocation in life—at arm's length. I mean the refusal to immerse oneself in the stream of the human condition. I call it the Belikov Syndrome because Chekhov portrays it too well in a short story about a man named Belikov, a schoolmaster in 19th-century Russia. The story is entitled, appropriately, "The Man Who Lived in a Shell," and this is one of the opening paragraphs:

"You have heard of Belikov no doubt. The curious thing about him was that he wore rubbers, and a warm coat with an inner lining, and carried an umbrella even in the finest weather. And he kept the umbrella in its cover, and his watch in a gray chamois case, and when he took out his penknife to sharpen his pencil, his penknife too was in a little case. And his face seemed to be in a case as well, because it was always hidden in his turned-up collar. He wore dark spectacles and a sweater, stuffed his ears with cotton wool and when he got into a carriage he always told the driver to put up the hood. In short, the man showed a constant and irrepressible inclination to keep a covering about himself, to create for himself a membrane, as it were, which would isolate him from outside influences. Actuality irritated him."

How could actuality possibly irritate us—we wonder on the day we receive our bachelor's degree or our master's degree. On that day, for most of us, life is still too fresh to irritate us or bore us or repel us. When I left this university 27 years ago, what did I know about burnout? In those days, as now, literature was my guidebook to life, but Graham Greene had not yet published his novel A Burnt-Out Case. I had seen Hamlet but was more interested in the swordplay than in Hamlet's decision to be or not to be. It was only after I went out and took up my vocation that I saw the symptoms of life-avoidance first-hand among some of my colleagues, and discovered the germ of it in myself, and by reading closer realized that authors had been writing about it for centuries.

So now I'm back to say seven things about burnout. For all I know, my seven discoveries might be old discoveries, but each one, in its time, was news to me.

One, the less tangible the rewards of a particular profession, the higher the incidence of burnout. Teaching, for example—that strange profession that has us constantly giving away all we know—indeed more than that: all we think we know—and giving it to people who rarely come back to us to tell us what they did with it. Which is not to say that most teachers are burnouts. The vast majority of teachers I have known have been supremely conscientious, but we are all acquainted with the two or four or six percent who are so lethargic that the high point of their school year is the day they go on strike.

Two, no one is immune from the Belikov Syndrome, the periodic urge to give up and withdraw. No matter how zealous you are about your calling, there comes a day when the novelty of your vocation disappears and you discover that the race you entered was not, as you thought, the 100-yard dash in front of the grandstand. The 100-yard dash isn't even on the program, and what you're running instead is the crosscountry marathon, which only begins and ends in front of the grandstand. Between the degree and the pension you do a lot of running through the woods.

I remember the day I made this discovery for myself. I won't say what year or in which high school, but it was January and I was standing on hall duty outside my classroom between period two and period three and wondering as never before where in the world I would find the strength to persevere through periods four and five and six and February and March and April and May. I was doubly disheartened because I was really quite fond of teaching, and how could a job I liked be so hard? My students had turned into cannibals, it seemed, consuming me by eating away at my spirit. I felt I had to quit giving so much of myself away.

Now as it happened, there were two veteran burnouts on that faculty who for years had been quietly going about the business of not teaching, and I took a sudden interest in their methods. One of them, a history teacher, showed films of World War Two five hours a day, and the other, a physical education teacher, threw out a ball and said to his class, "Go chase it." I had just enough imagination left to be dissatisfied with these two methods, so I devised my own, or I should say a certain book company devised one for me, for this was the era when the programmed-learning textbook first came upon the scene.

This was a kind of super workbook which led the students through the syllabus by a clever system of questions and answers and saved the teacher the trouble of teaching. There was in that school a roomful of these workbooks which the school board had bought from a zealous book salesman, whose rewards had been so tangible that the district tax mill rate had had to be raised. I issued those workbooks to my classes and I sat at my desk, never having to come out of my shell except to answer some rare question the workshop couldn't handle, such as, What's for hot lunch? It was life-avoidance in its pure form and within a week I was alarmed to discover that a crippling sort of malaise was spreading out from my teaching and pervading all my waking hours. Burnout turns up at work and follows you home. The following week I gathered up the workbooks, along with my strength, and went back to giving myself away to my students, having made discovery number three—namely that the fatigue of doing nothing.

Pascal knew this approximately 300 years before I did. Pascal defined the awful consequences of burnout in the year 1650 when he wrote: "Nothing is so insufferable to man as to be completely at rest, without passions, without business, without diversion, without study. There will immediately arise from the depth of his heart weariness, gloom, sadness, fretfulness, vexation, and despair." It was those very things—weariness, gloom, vexation and despair—that I was hearing from that superintendent in northern Minnesota who spoke to me from inside his shell.

Four, we all carry within ourselves the seeds of life-avoidance, and for good reason. We all need respite from our calling. We all need to step out of the marathon from time to time and sit in the shade. That's what vacations and retreats and leisure time are for, and professions that do not have a system of sabbaticals ought to institute them. There is a term for such measured withdrawal. It's called rest, and it serves as an immunization against burnout.

But the danger is in assuming that if a little withdrawal is good, a lot of withdrawal is better. A lot of it gets you exactly where it got Belikov, who after years of living in his shell, fell in love with a young woman who moved into his village, and he discovered that he had grown too hidebound, too remote from life, to relate to her. He had spent so much of his life evading life that he no longer knew how to live. His shell had grown to tough and he couldn't hatch.

Five, be forewarned, the vocation you love, like a person you love, will make the most demands on you. I found this fact illustrated recently in a novel by Shirley Hazzard entitled The Transit of Venus. One of her characters, a dedicated astronomer, has gone off to a foreign country to oversee the installation of an enormous new telescope and he writes this in a letter home: "What an atrocious, sustained effort is required, I find, to learn to do anything thoroughly—especially if it's what you love. A vocation is a source of difficulty, not ease. To do is difficult enough. To be, more difficult still."

To do or to be. There is a difference. It's one thing to teach and another to be a teacher. It's one thing to write and another to be a writer. The difference is in the degree of investment. To do is to fulfull your job description. To be is to invest so much of yourself into your calling that you and your calling begin to blend. We have all known certain teachers or nurses or parents or carpenters or clergy or shopkeepers whose dedication made them the emblem of their calling. "A natural style" is Pascal's term for this. In speaking of a book he admired, Pascal wrote, "When we see a natural style, we are astonished and delighted, for we expected to see an author and we find instead a human being." This, then, is the opposite of the Belikov Syndrome—instead of withdrawing, investing. It requires great effort and leads to great satisfaction. It's been my observation that those men and women in whom the flame of dedication burns the highest are the least likely to burn out. Or, to put it another way, the more of yourself you invest in your calling, the more interesting your calling becomes. We are all narcisstic enough to be intrigued by our own reflection, and the more of ourselves we see reflected in our work the longer it holds our interest. Without investment, there is no interest.

Six, most burnouts I've known have been men. And this in a profession almost equally divided between men and women. I believe this is because a man is less likely than a woman to keep his mind alive after college. In other words, a man is less likely to read books. I mean fiction and nonfiction generally, which serve to stretch the mind and keep it agile. "Go forth and read books," I have been saying to my students for 27 years and my students have promised to do so, the boys as well as the girls, the men as well as the women; but then I began publishing books of my own and discovered that precisely 5 out of 6 people who read books and think about books and respond to books are women. In the days when I was addressing civic groups and study clubs about my books, I was invited to a dozen women's clubs before I was invited to a men's club; and therefore I thought it quite a breakthrough when the program chairman of the Rotary Club called me up and asked me to speak at Rotary on the following Tuesday. Telling myself that at last I had discovered a group of literate men, I said yes, I would be happy to speak on Tuesday, to which the program chairman replied, "That's wonderful, because Tuesday is ladies' day, and we like to have something for the ladies." So I say it once more: I challenge the men of this class to break out of that masculine stereotype that has me believing that the last thing a man is likely to read is his degree, to keep in mind that if graduation marked the end of intellectual development, it wouldn't be called commencement.

Seven, every burnout I've known has come to the point of thinking (usually by mistake) that he is unsuited for his work. Either he will come to believe that he is not worthy of his work, or (and this is more common) that his work is not worthy of him. Sometimes it's true, but more often it's not. I have been struck by the almost miraculous instinct people have for matching themselves up to work that suits them. In the burnout's case the problem is usually not his being in the wrong profession, but rather his faulty vision of that profession. By that I mean most burnouts are either too nearsighted or too farsighted. The nearsighted become so preoccupied with small irritations and interruptions—that is, the actualities of their calling—that they lose sight of their long-range aspirations. The farsighted, on the other hand, spend so much time dreaming of their long-range aspirations that they have trouble dealing with the day-to-day actualities. I am reminded of what it was like to walk a rail as a young boy. If you don't watch your feet you lose your balance. If you don't look ahead down the track you lose your balance. The trick is to do both at once.

I conclude with two quotations illustrating that success requires a balance between the nearsighted and the farsighted, a combination of the visionary and the mundane.

About the mundane, C. S. Lewis says: "The great thing, if one can, is to stop regarding all the unpleasant things as interruptions of one's real life. The truth is that what one calls the interruptions are precisely one's real life—the life God is sending one day by day."

And about the visionary, I quote from Henry David Thoreau. I wrote this passage on a card and pinned it to the wall over my typewriter when I began writing the first draft of my first novel. If my prose became too prosaic, it was very helpful to look up from my labors and see this: "If one advances confidently in the direction of his dreams, and endeavors to live the life he has imagined, he will meet with a success unexpected in common hours. If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them."●

U.S. RELATIONS WITH TAIWAN

● Mr. EAST. Mr. President, American relations with China—whether the totalitarian Communist regime on the mainland or the most democratic government in Southeast Asia on Taiwan—are once again in the news. Today, the issue is whether the United States will continue to abide by the terms of the Taiwan Relations Act and provide the Republic of China on Taiwan with the arms it needs to resist the aggressive and genocidal threats of the mainland Communists.

Mr. Philip Kent, himself a former Senate staff aide and now an editor of the Augusta, Ga., Chronicle, the oldest newspaper in the South, analyzes our relations with Taiwan in a recent column in the Washington Times of July 26, 1982. I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues and request that it be printed.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Times, July 26, 1982]

ADRIFT, DIVIDED ON TAIWAN

(By Philip Kent)

When visiting the anti-communist Republic of China on Taiwan in April, Defense Minister Soong Chang-Chih told me that the Falklands crisis and Mideast troubles should not distract observers from watching how the Reagan administration formulates new policy toward the communist mainland.

Admiral Soong's observation has more meaning now, especially since it has come to light that one of former Secretary of State Alexander Haig's last acts was the sending of a memo to President Reagan recommending language for a joint U.S.-Communist Chinese communique that "would inevitably lead to a cessation in arms sales to Taiwan."

This memo, coupled with what the New York Times calls current State Department option papers submitted "in the hope of achieving an early break-through" regarding U.S.-Communist Chinese relations, has caused quite a stir among Reaganites.

The president campaigned as a supporter of Taiwan before his election, and he has tried to allay fears in the Republican Party that he would abandon the island regime that has been our longtime friend, trading partner and military ally. But a June 23 meeting with key Republicans, including Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has not calmed the fears of friends of Taiwan.

At that meeting National Security Adviser William Clark said that the administration is "not backing away" from the Republic of China and that the president will not accept a Taiwan arms cutoff. Unfortunately, National Security Council staffer Don Gregg (soon to be Vice President George Bush's foreign policy adviser) followed Clark with a strong, pro-Peking pitch. He claimed it would be a mistake to "downgrade" relations with the Red regime that President Carter recognized as the official Chinese government.

The Red Chinese have openly threatened to curtail relations if the United States continues to sell arms to Taiwan, a move they claim infringes on Peking's claim to "sovereignty" over the island. But my Taiwanese hosts reminded me that the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979 obliges the United States to provide the island with "defense articles and defense services in such quantity as may be necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficent self-defense capability."

The White House, to try again to demonstrate its support for Taiwan, said several months ago that it would send Congress a formal letter authorizing the Northrup Corporation to continue co-production in Taiwan of the F5E jet.

That promised letter has not as yet been sent. (In fact, some 40 senators are on record pressing the administration to give the green light to the F5E co-production.)

One can see, with all this jockeying back and forth, that Reagan is drifting and that his advisers are divided on the Taiwan arms issue between pro-Taiwan and pro-mainland factions.

It must be admitted that America should try to continue current relations with the mainland—but on our own terms. We should try to maintain trade and political relations at a level consistent with keeping the Red Chinese suspicious and fearful of the Soviet Union (and keeping Soviet troops tied down on the Red Chinese border).

But this policy should not be pursued at the expense of cutting off arms to loyal Taiwan—and the president must take a firm stand on this point.●

STATUS REPORT ON THE BUDGET

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate a status report on the budget for fiscal year 1982 pursuant to section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act. This report takes account of the urgent supplemental appropriation for 1982, H.R. 6685.

The report follows:

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE U.S. SENATE FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET—STATUS OF THE FISCAL YEAR 1982 CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ADOPTED IN SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 92

REFLECTING COMPLETED ACTION AS OF JULY 23, 1982

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays	Revenues
Second budget resolution level	$777,672	$734,100	$628,400
Current level	766,929	732,113	628,600
Amount remaining	10,743	1,987	200

BUDGET AUTHORITY

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and which exceeds $10,743 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of budget authority for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

OUTLAYS

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and which would result in outlays exceeding $1,987 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of outlays for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

REVENUES

Any measure that would result in revenue loss exceeding $200 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause revenues to be less than the appropriate level for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92.●

EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I bring to my colleagues' attention an article entitled "Trading Companies Needed Now for Textile Industry's Future Plan", written by the chairman of the First Union National Bank, Mr. Theodore B. Sumner, Jr.

Mr. Sumner discusses America's trade deficit and the potential of export trading companies in helping to eliminate that deficit. He asserts that export trading companies can be particularly useful to small to medium-sized firms that have been reluctant to export because of too many obstacles. Among the obstacles cited by the leaders of small firms are "the difficulty in obtaining financing, the lack of tax incentives, tariff and nontariff barriers, and insufficient advice and assistance from the Government". Mr. Sumner points out that export trading companies "would be a good start" in improving America's ability to export and reducing the trade deficit.

Indeed, by opening the door to the establishment of export trading companies, we can break down the barriers that we have erected over the years to the creation of meaningful institutions to help our firms export.

I ask that Mr. Sumner's article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TRADING COMPANIES NEEDED NOW FOR TEXTILE INDUSTRY'S FUTURE PLANS

Last month in this space, I said the United States could learn a valuable lesson from the textile industry. The lesson to which I referred was the technique with which our textile industry has negotiated trade quotas with Japan.

I believe we also could learn from some of our international trading partners who long ago discovered the importance of foreign trade to their Gross National Product (GNP).

Foreign trade is becoming increasingly important to all Americans, because sales of goods abroad has a major impact on our standard of living. It is essential that America establish as a national priority the development of expanded international markets. Every $1 billion in goods we export ensures the creation or continuation of about 27,000 domestic jobs and results in an eventual trickle down of up to $400 million in tax revenues to federal, state and local governments.

It is important to realize that the United States currently is less involved in world trade in proportion to our size than is any other developed country. This is partly because the vast size of the U.S. market historically satisfied the growth objectives of most domestic companies. We therefore had little need to export. That picture, however, is changing rapidly.

Despite the obvious importance of international trade to our economy, the growth is projected to drop from a two per cent rate in 1981 to a negative one per cent this year. Compare our negative growth to the projected world economic growth rate of 2.4 per cent, and the importance of encouraging U.S. companies to trade abroad becomes more apparent.

The need becomes even more critical in light of anticipated performance by America's best trading partners, especially Japan, whose economy is expected to grow at an impressive 4.25 per cent this year.

Thanks to the export of services such as hamburger and fried chicken franchises, our economy managed to produce a favorable balance of trade in both 1980 and 1981. The services portion of our export economy topped $40 billion last year.

Our balance of trade with individual countries was not so impressive. Our purchases exceeded sales to Japan ($16.2 billion), Nigeria ($8 billion), Saudi Arabia ($7.3 billion), and Canada ($6.9 billion).

The time has come for our government to take a more active role in encouraging companies to export. Currently, only 7.5 per cent of our GNP is composed of exported goods and services. By comparison, exports comprise almost one fourth of the GNP for both Great Britain and Italy, 17 percent of Japan's GNP.

Our relatively low level of world trade in comparison to our size indicates a lack of interest among domestic companies in trading beyond our shores. Part of that lack of interest is based on our historical reliance on domestic markets. But underlying that historical reason is the common complaint of many small-to-medium sized businesses.

The leadership of small companies responding to a recent survey believes there are too many obstacles to their establishing foreign markets. Among the most frequently mentioned obstacles are the difficulty of obtaining financing, the lack of tax incentives, tariff and non-tariff barriers and insufficient advice and assistance from the government.

The trading process can be rather intimidating to those who are unfamiliar with it.

There is some good news in the near future for companies such as those who expressed sympathy with the comments above, yet still are interested in pursuing foreign markets. The good news comes in the form of pending legislation which would allow the establishment of export trading companies (ETCs) similar to those in Japan. Small-and-medium sized businesses could join together to form an ETC and share the expenses and problems of foreign trade.

The legislation also would exempt participating companies from the antitrust laws.

That would be a good start, but only a start. We must work harder to encourage a change of attitude on the part of our government leaders and the nation's business leaders. We must accept the challenge of improving our ability and desire to compete in the world market if we are going to succeed in reducing our balance of trade deficits.●

BOISE CASCADE

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to pay tribute—along with the residents of International Falls—to Boise Cascade. The remarkable achievements of this company in promoting employment and job opportunities for the people of northeastern Minnesota deserve our loudest applause and appreciation.

Apparently, the folks in International Falls feel the same way. The people of International Falls are gathering tonight to thank Boise Cascade.

It is not often that I hear about a community and the employees of a company getting together to just say,

Thanks for being here. . . . thanks for choosing our town to build your company and expand your operations. . . . thanks for taking such good care of our people.

Those actions speak louder than any words that I could add to what the people in International Falls already feel.

Boise Cascade, in the relatively short 17-year period it has been in Minnesota, has made a tremendous positive impact on the economy of northeastern Minnesota. Boise Cascade provides over 1,500 jobs, making it the largest employer in this part of the State. Its payroll of over $39 million annually, plus over $17 million more in employee benefits, shows the impact of direct manufacturing jobs. That is not where the payroll ends, however. Boise Cascade payed out over $17 million last year to independent logging and trucking contractors who supplied harvesting and trucking services and other wood cost for International Falls.

Throughout the years, Boise Cascade has been a wise manager of our State's natural resources. Just since 1975, Boise Cascade has spent $51 million on equipment to keep our air and water clean for us today and for our children tomorrow.

Boise Cascade has built a reputation for its admirable corporate contributions program which has done everything from purchase band uniforms for the high school to starting a family counseling program.

Being a good neighbor and a good friend to the community is what makes for a successful and well respected company. Taking on community responsibilities and taking an active part in the day to day life of International Falls residents is what Boise Cascade is all about.

As a national leader in forest products, as a good community neighbor * * *. Boise Cascade is the kind of company that makes Minnesota a great place to live and work.

HOW PURE MUST ONE BE?

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, according to the Congressional Quarterly ("Interest Groups Rate Members of Congress," July 3, 1982) there are more than 70 special interest groups which now conduct voting surveys of Members of Congress.

And as CQ points out: "While ratings often are used as a political shorthand to depict politicians as 'liberal' or 'pro-business' or 'pro-environment,' what they actually show is a good deal more limited. They measure how often a lawmaker voted the way the interest groups wanted on an imperfect, subjectively selected sample of votes."

For the most part, these voting indexes are not really designed to inform the public about the overall voting record or the politics of Members of Congress. Instead, they are used by the special interest pressure groups to promote their own narrow political views and objectives.

What is most unfortunate about this practice is that the ratings are often taken at face value by the media and the public.

This was not the case, however, when an organization called Conservatives Against Liberal Legislation sent its "report card" to the Times, of Shreveport, La.

Rather than simply passing the information along to its readers, as is the practice with so many other newspapers and wire services, the Times made an effort to put the organization and its voting survey in perspective through an editorial entitled "How Pure Must One Be?"

I commend the Times for its enlightened position on the subject of special interest voting surveys and ask that the editorial of July 26, 1982, be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows.

HOW PURE MUST ONE BE?

One wonders, these days, just how conservative a Member of Congress has to be to qualify as a True Conservative with some groups. Several organizations now "rate" representatives and senators according to their conservative or liberal stances. The groups record votes on specific issues, and issue "report cards."

One of them, an outfit called Conservatives Against Liberal Legislation, issued its report card the other day. Louisianians reading it may be surprised to discover that they don't any have True Conservatives in the state delegation—none that made an A, anyhow, which is strange in a delegation that's obviously one of the most conservative in Congress.

It may come as no surprise that Reps. Gillis Long and Lindy Boggs scored F with this particular school-marmish group, but how about an F for Sen. J. Bennett Johnston—author of anti-busing legislation, pusher of oil decontrol and a lot of other conservative things? Sen. Russell Long didn't fare much better, with a D. Neither did Reps. Billy Tauzin and John Breaux, with C. Even Rep. Robert Livingston, a conservative Republican, got only a C–. The only delegation members to score above that were Reps. Buddy Roemer and Jerry Huckaby, with B–, and the highest-ranked from Louisiana, Rep. Henson Moore, with a B.

To score higher than any member of the Louisiana delegation and win even an A–with this particular group, a representative or senator had to vote "right" on at least 90 percent of the 20 issues monitored by Conservatives Against Liberal Legislation. And what were some of those issues?

Well, they don't describe their issues in full, preferring instead to tell you something like "funding for Legal Services Corporation," which provides legal services to people who couldn't afford it otherwise. The CALL group, though, sees LSC as "government funding of liberal causes." Every one of Louisiana's congressmen voted against cutting LSC funds, which in CALL's view apparently makes them all pinko suspects. There were also such landmark issues as aid to Zimbabwe and anti-communist forces in Angola.

All of which leads us to the conclusion that we really don't care a whit for the "ratings" or "report cards" issued by this group is so narrow that it really doesn't provide a true picture of most congressmen's philosophies. Frankly, given the strictures of a report such as CALL's, we'd be a bit suspicious of anyone who scored an A.●

A MAINE AIRLINE'S SUCCESS STORY

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, at a time when economic hardship is permeating the airline industry, a Maine-based commuter airline is experiencing growth and expansion. For Bar Harbor Airlines—which now ranks ninth among the country's commuter carriers—the fight for survival and success has not been easy. In 1978, the family owned airline experienced a tragic setback when its founder and president, Thomas Caruso, his son Gary, and two pilots were killed in a plane crash. The business was salvaged by Caruso's widow, Barbara, and was taken over by his son Allyn, under whose hand it has grown far beyond the expectations for a commuter airline in a rural State.

Today Bar Harbor Airlines flies to 14 Northeast cities, including Boston and New York City, and has plans to serve an even wider public with larger aircraft in the future. Mr. President, an article in the Portland Press Herald tells the inspirational story of this airline's turbulent route to success, and how a Maine family has turned what began as a one-passenger seaplane in a resort town into a multimillion-dollar operation. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

BAR HARBOR LINE REVELING IN ITS MAINE IMAGE

BANGOR.—When fast-growing Bar Harbor Airlines began serving cities like Albany, N.Y., and Hartford, Conn., some people thought it was time for the company to change its name.

The name was appropriate enough in the early days when the airline's only route was between Bangor and Bar Harbor, a 30-mile flight that took 12 minutes. And it's true that Bar Harbor traces its history to the famous resort town, where its founders took turns piloting a one-passenger seaplane on sightseeing runs for the tourists.

But by the time Bar Harbor Airlines began serving 14 cities in the Northeast with a fleet of 17 planes, there were some critics who thought the name seemed quaintly provincial.

"We got all sorts of complaints," airline President Allyn J. Caruso recalls with a chuckle. "But I think we've gotten over that. People no longer associate it with the place. Now it's like the Santa Fe (Railroad)."

In fact, Caruso and others at Bar Harbor delight in both the name and the company's Maine origins and image. Airline advertising has been known to feature lobstermen in slickers and the seat pockets on its planes are crammed with Maine periodicals. It's planning a promotion in which each passenger would be given a complimentary bag of Maine potatoes.

The passengers seem to enjoy it just as much. "When we talk to people about Bar Harbor, they say, 'it's not Bar Harbor, it's Bah Hahbah.' They even put on the Maine accent," said sales manager Gary Linscott.

Bar Harbor now ranks No. 9 in the nation among commuter carriers following a period of phenomenal growth that dates back to 1978, a year that brought both tragedy and opportunity to the privately owned company.

That May, Bar Harbor founder and president Thomas Caruso, his son Gary, and two of the airline's most experienced pilots perished when their twin-engine Beechcraft 402 crashed in flames during a rainstorm near Bar Harbor.

"That was a big blow, a very big blow. It was like starting all over again," recalled Caruso. Thomas Caruso's widow, Barbara, ran the company that summer until her son took over later that year.

Allyn Caruso's return to the airline from his father's general aviation business in Portland coincided with one of the biggest changes ever to hit the industry—deregulation. As trunk carriers took advantage of their new freedom to abandon shorter and less profitable routes, the smaller commuter lines had to decide whether to move in to fill the void.

In Bar Harbor's case, the decision came in 1979 when Delta served notice that it was pulling out of Presque Isle and Caruso elected to take over service there. Within four months, the company found larger planes, trained new crews and mechanics, and met the stiffer regulatory requirements governing larger airlines.

"We doubled the size of the company that year," Caruso recalled. "But it changed the whole philosophy of our business," subjecting the airline to the same type of federal reporting requirements as those governing the major trunk carriers, he said.

"Deregulation was really deregulation for the major airlines. It was regulation for the smaller ones," he said. "We didn't have any regulation prior to 1978."

In taking over service to Presque Isle, Bar Harbor acquired larger planes—the 40-passenger Convair 600 and the 25-passenger CASA C212—that made it easier to move into other cities when the opportunities arose.

When Delta pulled out of Manchester, N.H., and western Massachusetts, Bar Harbor moved in. Those markets, oriented toward business travel, were viewed as year-round ones that could help offset its highly seasonal business in Maine.

The airline has always been a seasonal business. Its peak traffic comes in the summer months, and Caruso has been looking for ways to build up volume during the winter.

That's why Bar Harbor was hit so hard last summer when the nation's air controllers went on strike. "It took our third quarter, our biggest profit quarter, and wiped it right out," said Caruso, citing the strike as a reason his company, like most commuter airlines, lost money in 1981.

The lingering effects of the strike are still hurting Bar Harbor. Until early this summer, the airline had been unable to regain all its "slots" for flights in and out of Logan Airport in Boston and LaGuardia in New York.

Depite that problem, Caruso says traffic is up nearly 24 percent, and he expects 1982 to be "a very good year," with total passenger boardings projected at more than 266,000. By contrast, the figure for 1978—before the impact of deregulation—was 111,453.

One cause for optimism, Caruso said, is Bar Harbor's new joint arrangement with Eastern. In the past, Bar Harbor's timetable had been keyed to Delta's. But the commuter line recently signed a 10-year agreement with Eastern, which agreed to handle Bar Harbor's reservations. Bar Harbor says the change has already boosted its feeder traffic to the popular Eastern shuttle to New York.

Looking toward the future, Caruso wants to continue to equip Bar Harbor with larger planes. The 15-seat Beech 99s, once the workhorse of the fleet, are being replaced by the Convairs and the Spanish-built CASAs, which offer amenities not found on the smaller aircraft.

He also foresees a return to Canadian markets, with an eye toward the Maritimes. Bar Harbor had served Quebec City and Sherbrooke during the '70s, but those routes proved to be too seasonal and were eventualy abandoned.

Despite his company's success, Caruso, 32, seems a bit wistful about the airline's early days, when it was a far smaller and less complex operation. A pilot who soloed for the first time at age 16, he flew commercial three years later, making him the youngest pilot in New England to acquire a commercial rating.

Those were the days when the family's tiny airport outside Bar Harbor was more widely known for his grandmother's pizza at the snack bar and weekly dances in the empty hangars than for its aviation-related enterprises.

"Wednesday nights, they took all the airplanes out. My mother played the trumpet, my father played the sax and clarinet. My uncle was the bouncer and my aunt sold tickets," he recalled.

"They made more money on the dances than they did in the aviation business."

Today, however, the demands of running a multimillion-dollar business with 350 employees and operations in five states leaves no time for running dances or even piloting any of the Bar Harbor flights.

"I don't fly commercial anymore because I don't have time to stay current," he said.●

IMPORTED STEEL NEGOTIATIONS

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, heavily subsidized foreign steel imports have received prominent national and international attention recently. Yesterday, a number of my colleagues addressed the Senate concerning the current negotiations between the European Community and the administration. Today, I wish to add my voice and my commitment to obtaining a fair and meaningful result from the negotiations.

Mr. President, I believe that many people have the misconception that only Japan subsidizes its exports to the United States. This misconception should be easily dispelled by the recent experience of the steel industry. In 1981, 6.48 million tons of steel were imported from the European Community, representing 32.6 percent of all imports. In the same year, 6.22 million tons were imported from Japan, 31.3 percent of imports. For the first 5 months of 1982, 2.43 million tons of European Community steel have been imported and 2.63 million tons of Japanese steel have been imported. Clearly, subsidized European Community steel imports are a major threat to our domestic industry.

Last January, the steel industry filed petitions with the Department of Commerce and the International Trade Commission seeking relief from dumped and subsidized products imported from 10 countries. In February, the International Trade Commission issued a preliminary ruling that unfair trade practices by these countries had injured domestic steelmakers. On June 10, the Commerce Department made its preliminary determinations finding substantial subsidies on many steel products by most of the European Community countries—its preliminary determinations on dumping duties will be made on August 9. On August 24, the Commerce Department will issue its final determinations on the countervailing duties.

This time-consuming and expensive process has all been conducted within the framework of our trade laws and international agreements. The decision by the Department of Commerce and the efforts of the administration have thus far representated the appropriate—and necessary—enforcement of those laws and agreements. Yet even as the petitions wind their way through the process, the European Community has been trying to avoid the duties imposed for violating these laws and agreements.

Last weekend, the negotiating deadline for settling these cases without U.S. industry approval expired—without reaching a settlement. The administration rightly rejected the European Community offer to limit its steel shipments to the United States to 90 percent of their 1981 levels. Given the fact that European Community exports to the United States increased 67 percent between 1980 and 1981—from 3.89 million tons to 6.48 million tons—such an offer is clearly unacceptable. Indeed, the offer itself is tantamount to an admission that the European Community is unfairly exploiting an open American market.

Mr. President, the international steel market has changed substantially since 1948, when the United States produced 45 percent of the world's steel. A changing international market does not warrant the violation of, and disregard for, trade laws and international agreements. Nor does it warrant accepting a series of bilateral settlements favorable to the Europeans and unfavorable to our domestic industry, over its objections.

On the contrary, the current state of our domestic steel industry requires firm commitment and resolve to the vigorous enforcement of our trade laws and agreements, Over 115,000 steelworkers are currently laid off, plants are operating at only 40 percent of capacity, and record losses have been and will be reported in the second quarter and first half of this year, while market penetration by steel imports is now nearly 40 percent.

Mr. President, it is the responsibility of America's officials, both the Congress and the administration, to maintain the resolve and continue the commitment to strict adherence to international rules and agreements. Such a commitment is not "protectionism"—it simply requires the European Community to live up to their part of the agreement. I urge the administration and my colleagues to maintain this commitment in the days and months ahead. Our steel industry has been injured by the European Community's unfair trade practices. This fact must be the driving force in any further negotiations with the European Community. I believe we must pursue the course that most benefits our domestic steel industry—carrying the current cases to their conclusion or reaching an equitable and fair settlement that meets the requirements of our laws and the needs of the industry.●

LET'S DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, one of the basic human instincts is the need to communicate with one another. No matter what age, profession, background or training, we all have the need to have the other person understand our hopes and fears, our likes and dislikes and our wants and needs. No matter what profession or training we may have selected for a career, one of the prime requisites for success is the ability to express our thoughts in clear, concise language. What good would it do if the brightest engineer in the world could not adequately express the results of his research? Another important factor in the art of effective communicating is timing. As an example, if we were here on the Senate floor deeply engrossed in the military budget, how long would we stay around if one of our colleagues suddenly began talking about farm policy?

These and other facets of communicating were outlined in a recent speech by Jack R. Hunt, who is president of Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University. While this speech was prepared for an aviation safely seminar, the basic principles which he outlines are applicable to just about any trade or profession that I can think of.

Mr. President, I ask that this speech appear in the RECORD in order that all of us can benefit from the principles that are contained in Jack Hunt's speech.

The speech follows:

"LET'S DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT"

(Speech by Jack R. Hunt)

Good afternoon, it is a pleasure to be here with you.

(At this point, "accidentally," drop a half dozen sheets of paper, nervously pick them up, while saying)

Communication has, really, only one basic requisite—a sine qua non—everyone must want to communicate.

(Return to lectern, stack the sheets neatly, and say)

Please excuse my clumsiness, I just wanted you to understand the basic premise of communication if we are going to do something about it.

(Tear sheets and throw them away)

You came here, today, to hear me speak. Most of you were not prepared to see me speak.

If any of you did not hear what I said while you were watching me pick up the papers, I'll repeat it. For those of you who did hear what I said, please bear with me—repetition can be reinforcing.

I said, "Communication has, really, only one basic requisite—a sine qua non—everyone must want to communicate."

Since we are here to discuss Communicating for Safety, we are primarily talking about a situation or occurrence, of a serious nature, developing suddenly and unexpectedly, and demanding immediate action. Ladies and Gentlemen, that can be stated in one word, which according to the dictionary, is Emergency.

The first thing we look for in an accident is what went wrong. It is deemed axiomatic that safe operations are a result of abiding by rules, regulations, guidelines and using approved communication procedures. An accident is an exception!

We could get into a rather technical discussion about communication, which would include identifying most of the important means of communicating we take for granted because when we use them properly, there is no emergency. I'm talking about such commonplace things as colored lights, buzzers, runway striping, taxi lights verbal and non-verbal communication, pictures and many more.

So, let's talk briefly about something we all do and believe we understand. I spend more time in the passenger section than in the cockpit of an airplane and most of us spend more time driving a car than piloting an airplane—so, let's talk about cars.

Most of us have forgotten how complicated a car really is. We have learned the four basic communicative skills sufficiently to at least get a driver's license.

A car is so commonplace in our lives that we take virtually everything about it for granted. Imagine how helpless an aborigine would be if he were thrust into the driver's seat, or try to remember how meaningless everything was before you decided to learn to drive.

Think back to the four communicative skills you learned to use:

SCAN

You needed to know where everything was Ignition, starter, instruments, controls, etc., and you learned to scan them as needed.

MANIPULATION

You found it necessary to operate various controls in order to make the system work and you needed to know how to manipulate them to make the car go.

OPERATIONAL CONTROL

You were able to scan and manipulate the controls in order to get the car to your desired destination with reasonable safety. You began to be able to cope with unexpected exceptions such as a stop sign, slippery roads, a child chasing a ball, or other limited emergencies. You gained operational control of your car.

By now you felt you had it all together. You gradually became more confident in your ability to drive a car. Now you were ready for—

CONVERSATION

Your confidence level rose to the point that you felt comfortable, perhaps smugly capable, of handling just about anything that would happen. You no doubt survived some hairy moments and probably some exhilarating close calls. Now, you were able to redirect your concentration from the fundamentals. You were in control—you were ready to carry on a conversation. Unlike the pilot, your conversation was limited almost exclusively to others in the car with you—with the possible exception, of course, of a few expletives shouted at an errant soul who failed to communicate accurately his intentions.

Because instructors and you communicated, you can go where you want to when you want to. But have you been communicating for safety? My guess is—not really!

In our research into communicating for safety in the cockpit or car, we have made an important discovery. In fact what we have discovered was so obvious that all of us were oblivious to it—and it is true in your car as well as the cockpit.

Those basic four communication skills we acquired, independently, have become so dependent upon each other that they are no longer independent. Those basic communicative skills—Scan, Manipulation, Operational Control and Conversation become inseparable in an Emergency!

Both in analyzing accidents and conducting experiments, we found that until an individual has received repetitive training in every known emergency evolution and unless he frequently reviews the proper evolutions in a simulated environment, all four skills will abandon him at once. That's what happens when we say he came "unglued."

"That's a bunch of technical gobbledy gook," you say. Have you ever seen an amateur juggler juggling four balls? He does pretty well, he has the four balls going round and round—then he's thrown another ball. An "emergency!" What happens? He drops all the balls!

Have you heard the country western song about the truck driver who dropped his cigar in the cab? Have you ever been in a car with someone who dropped a lighted match—or whose baby just fell on the floor? Emergency, panicsville! Forget the steering wheel, don't worry about the controls, who cares about the instruments? Grab the kid—or put out the match. Emergency!

Believe it, or not, the same thing happens outside the car and outside the cockpit. It can happen in the passenger compartment—and sometimes does.

We need guidelines and rules—to cope with emergency situations. Some guidelines don't seem important enough to follow. How many of you have suffered because you failed to heed any of these simple guidelines?

Never play cards with a man called, "Doc."

Never eat at a place called, "Mom's."

Never seek sympathy from someone whose troubles are worse than your own.

Perhaps those aren't really pertinent to our topic today. But how about giving a little thought to these:

Pilots have an unsurpassed view of the scenery—but, there is always the possibility that it may collide with them.

A good scare is worth more to a man than good advice.

It's not the things you don't know that get you into trouble. It's the things you think you know for sure.

The airlines and educational institutions are becoming more aware of the challenges we face with communications in the cockpit and cabin. We are trying to do something about it.

"So what," you say. "How does that affect me? You people can take care of that in training." You're partially correct. We could take care of most of it if we learn from you and this conference, and then do something about it, but we need your help. You need to give us more feedback. You can identify problem areas, communicate them to us, and together we can communicate for safety.

Also, for your own safety, you can take a good hard look at your personal situation. Look around you, at home, on the job, in the car. Talk with others about possible emergency situations. Discuss them, walk through emergency procedures and stay alert.

Up until now, I have been taking advantage of the aura of Academe while wearing the academician's mantle. I have asked you for your cooperation. The ball is in your court—identify specific safety concerns, bring them to our attention and we will work with you to design safety training programs.

Now, let me lay aside the Academic mantle and share with you my Airline Passenger Pet Peeve—the so called "Emergency Procedures Briefing."

Thoreau once said, "You do not get a man's most effective criticism until you provoke him. Severe truth is expressed with some bitterness."

That is a masterpiece of understatement.

You are just before getting my most effective criticism. Don't misunderstand. I ain't mad at nobody. I'm mad at the system and unhappy with the situation. Right now, my pet peeve is the after boarding, pre-flight passenger briefing. We certainly are not Communicating for Safety as it is presently conducted.

There is a story about the motorist who was lost on a back road in Alabama. He asked a farmer, who was sitting on a fence, "How do I get to Montgomery?" The farmer looked down the road, scratched his head and gave explicit directions. Half an hour later, after following the farmer's directions carefully, he found himself back where the farmer was still sitting on the fence. "Hey, what's the idea?" demanded the motorist. "I did what you told me and look where I wound up." Well, young fellow, the farmer explained, "I didn't aim to waste my time telling you how to get to Montgomery till I found out if you could follow simple directions."

Why don't the Flight Attendants just give simple directions?

How about, "Please fasten you seat belts, put your seat backs forward, your tray tables in the locked position and refrain from smoking?"

Yes, of course, I know that the Friendly Aviation Administration requires certain messages. We all know about Federal Aviation Regulations, in fact, we hide behind them, sometimes, even though we don't always agree with them. Right now. I'm suggesting we begin to do something about a Regulation that is archaic and counter-productive to safety.

Let's examine what I mean by saying the present system is counter-productive to safety. Remember my opening remark, communication has, really, only one basic requisite—a sine qua non—everyone must want to communicate.

Most of you have forgotten your first flight and have overcome any qualms you might have had. But there are a lot of people out there who are just flat out afraid to fly. They want to be assured—not scared to death! They are confused enough by simple things like finding their seat, getting settled and adjusting to strange surroundings. They don't want to hear about crashing, they don't understand what's being said, so they just "tune out." They do not want to communicate!

What about the seasoned traveler? He's heard all that garbage before—except, he hasn't really listened. He won't read the information on the card. He might look at the Flight Attendant playing "catch up" with the seat belt, oxygen mask and life vest "pantomime." But he doesn't really want to communicate!

Some DC-10's are presently configured with closed circuit TV for emergency procedure briefings. The cassette presentation is done professionally and is very thorough. The use of emergency equipment is shown in complete detail. Passengers are shown with oxygen masks on, life vests are worn much as a model wearing the latest styles at a fashion show. The audio is calm and clear. It is an excellent example of not Communicating for safety—the problem is that it is shown during all of the hustle and bustle just before takeoff rather than the calm—do nothing—period while the Flight Attendants are seated during climb out.

Remember your emotional reaction when I dropped the papers earlier? Were you embarrassed for me? Were you disgusted at such clumsiness? Were you curious? Whatever it was, it was counter-productive to our communication—at least till things got sorted out. You weren't ready to communicate.

How many times have you seen the Flight Attendant desperately looking for a mask, fumbling for a life jacket or looking for the emergency card? Were you watching the attendant or listening to the announcement?

I submit that most passengers do not "want to communicate" during that hectic period before takeoff. We may be satisfying the FAA, the Public Relations people may be happy because we are satisfying the regs without unduly alarming the passengers but, Ladies and Gentlemen, we are not communicating for Safety.

Let me share a possible scenario with you. Take a good hard look at it, build on it, change it, pick it apart, or throw it away and suggest something else. But, at least think about it and do something about it.

Scenario: The passengers board the airplane, Flight Attendants assist individuals who need assistance; monitor proper carry-on luggage on an as needed, individual basis; observe that seat belts are fastened and seat backs are as required. The only safety announcement made by the Flight Attendant is "Ladies and Gentlemen, please fasten your seat belts, bring your seat back forward, place your tray tables in the locked position and refrain from smoking. Thank you."

After takeoff, during climb out, when some passengers have begun to breathe normally again, the appropriate announcement about oxygen masks is made. They won't pop out automatically until the airplane gets to a higher altitude, anyway.

You have noticed that this scenario does not mention emergency exits or life jackets. Would it serve a purpose? Or, should "emergency" announcements be made only in case of an impending emergency?

Of course, some people will ask, "What if you crash on takeoff?" My response, which may not be acceptable to some, is that the passengers weren't paying attention anyway, and that passengers with experience will lead the way to exits. I would say further that the exits are clearly marked just as they are in theaters, hotels, restaurants and other buildings. You probably have noticed that no one makes an announcement about exits when you go to a show or to dinner.

Experience has shown that motivation makes communication more effective. If you are lost, you will listen to directions. If you're scared, you'll welcome comforting guidance. If there is an impending emergency, you'll pay close attention to a Flight Attendant who has been thoroughly trained to keep calm, assess the situation, take charge and lead the way.

Well, if you agree, Let's do Something About it.

What can we do? Just two simple things, to start with:

● Let's communicate what we need to develop as emergency procedures in the cockpit and the cabin so that we can design effective emergency procedure training programs and implement them.

● Let's use this Seminar to establish a task force with representatives from airlines, passengers, u... s, and the FAA to analyze existing regulations and recommend changes as appropriate.

You have probably heard about the old Mountaineer who, after being examined by the doctor, was given instructions as to what he should do. Just as he was about to leave, the doctor said, "Look here, you forgot to pay me." "What for?" asked the old fellow. "For my professional advice," replied the doctor. "Don't owe you nothing," said the Mountaineer on his way out, "cause I ain't gonna take it."

You also know about the friend of Lincoln's who asked Abe to endorse a machine he had just invented. Not wishing to endorse it, nor to disappoint his friend, Lincoln said, "For the sort of people who want this sort of thing, this is the sort of thing that that sort of people will want."

If you accept my advice, you can pay me by really doing something about it. If you "ain't gonna accept it," please at least give it a qualified endorsement. In either case, in order to Communicate for Safety, here is my disclaimer.

I know you believe you understand what you think I said, but I am not sure you realize that what you heard is not what I meant.

Thank you—and Let's do Something About it.●

MORMON PIONEER DAY

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I would like to urge my fellow colleagues to share in the celebration of the 135th anniversary of the Mormon pioneers' arrival in the Great Salt Lake Valley.

The Mormon pioneer story is a story of heroism, hardships, struggle, and tragedy. The Mormon pioneers were forced in the middle of the winter to leave their homes, businesses, and all else they could not pack in a wagon or carry on their shoulders.

Their destination was unknown, though the Mormons knew that God would direct them to a place where they could settle with a sense of permanency.

Journal entry after journal entry expressed the sorrow at the death of family members and other hardships encountered on their journey from Nauvoo, Ill., to the Great Salt Lake Valley. Many entries also told the story of a determined, positive attitude by God-fearing pioneers who would never give up, even under hard times.

A story is told when one evening, as a group of Mormon pioneers were to settle down for the night, a faint voice could be heard echoing throughout the camp. A man was singing a song that he had adapted to an old English tune. As they quietly listened they heard the words:

Come Come ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear. But with joy wend your way. Though hard to you this journey may appear,

Grace shall be as your day. Tis better far for us to strive,

Our useless cares from us to drive. Do this and joy your hearts will swell—All is well, All is well.

All might not have been well for the pioneers as they made their way across the Plains, but the song's word of encouragement was carried with them.

After months on the trail, they entered the Great Salt Lake Valley where Brigham Young, the Mormon prophet, proclaimed to his people that this was the place where they were to settle. The valley was a desolate desert, but the hard-working Mormons changed the desert into a green western oasis.

Soon, a total of 500 settlements were established from Mexico to Canada. In fact, the oldest town in Idaho, Franklin, was settled by the Mormons, as were Inkom, Rexberg, and many other cities and towns in my State.

The pioneers who settled the region of Idaho and Utah in search of religious freedom displayed an independent spirit, a strong belief in God, their families, and country. It was this determination that led them through the hardest of times.

One of the most inspiring aspects of the Mormon faith is the emphasis on individual initiative. The unique blend of cooperation, belief in God, and the striving for excellence is the very essence of the pioneer spirit.

Today that same pioneer spirit still exists in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. The aim of the Mormon Church is to help people help themselves. Work is enthroned as a ruling principle in the lives of the Mormon Church membership.

Too many people in our country today have developed the attitude that government is obligated to care and provide for them. In many ways government has fostered this view, but the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints have a different view.

First, the Mormons believe that each individual should value his independence, and labor to maintain it by being self-sustaining. Next, is the Mormon belief that the responsibility for sustaining an individual rests upon the family—parents for their children, and children for their parents. Only when the individual has done all that he can do to maintain himself, and the members of his family have done what they can to assist him, then the church, through its own welfare plan, stands ready to see that its members receive the help they need.

The Mormon Church has its own welfare program. Last year LDS lawyers, businessmen, teachers, farmers, and housewives worked together and donated over 4 million hours of voluntary services. They worked on welfare farms, in Deseret Industries' stores, and canning facilities to store food and basic supplies to help those who need them.

An example of the use of the program was well expressed during the Teton Dam disaster. Within a few hours after the announcement of the tragedy, several large semitrucks were on their way from Salt Lake City to Rexberg full of food, clothes, and other necessities.

Ricks College, a Mormon-operated school, opened its doors to people as place of refuge until they could find other places to stay.

Busloads of people came from Utah, Wyoming, and Idaho donating thousands of hours toward cleaning and rebuilding the flooded area.

Recently when cyclone Isaac, a 172-mile-per-hour wind, hit the country of Tonga, destroying everything in its path, the Mormon Church shipped from Salt Lake City or purchased from other areas of the world tons of flour, sugar, canned fish and two or three changes of clothes for over 4,000 Tongan people. Even building supplies equivalent to 370 homes were shipped to supplement materials salvaged from damaged homes.

Additional assistance came from church members who came to Tonga from Samoa, Hawaii, and the Fiji Islands to help in the cleanup.

The Mormon welfare system was designed to assist the ill, injured, the incapacitated, and those who had been in a disaster, and to rehabilitate them to a productive life. The welfare system offers basic necessities to people in need until they can get back on their feet and become once again self-sustaining.

Due to the success of the Mormon Church's welfare program and the principle of self-reliance, Utah, which is predominantly a Mormon State, has 50 percent fewer people on welfare than the national average.

Another LDS organization which exemplifies the pioneer spirit is the Woman's Relief Society. This year the organization celebrated its 140th birthday, making it the oldest woman's organization in the world. The goal of the society is to help each woman grow spiritually, intellectually, socially, and culturally, and to assist women in reaching their highest potential in life.

The Mormons also believe in the importance of the family unit. A former leader of the Mormon religion, David O. McKay, said, "No other success can compensate for failure in the home."

The Mormon Church places great emphasis on building family unity. In a day when families seem to be breaking apart, Mormons stress the importance of building family unity and have established a program to do so. This family home evening program provides the opportunity to bring families together on a specific night and under optimal conditions for parents to teach and strengthen their children.

Mormon family home evenings consist of activities such as family games, culture events, family service projects, sharing talents with family members, and family council meetings.

I feel that when a program helps bring about an atmosphere where family members learn to listen, respect the opinions and feelings of others, and offer honest communication, as this program does, the final product is likely to be a successful family. Such practices seem to produce great happiness and love in LDS homes.

Brigham Young often said, "The way to achieve success as a person, as a family, as a community, and as a nation is to work hard, plan well, and trust in God." That formula, a major factor in the success of the Latter-Day Saints who crossed the Plains, continues in LDS Church members today.

The Mormons have made and continue to make invaluable contributions wherever they are found. I praise their achievement and their dedication to the traditional American values of morality and family life, and to the principles held by the Founding Fathers of this great Nation.●

THREE MILE ISLAND

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am very pleased today that we are one step closer to cleaning up the damaged reactor at Three Mile Island.

Today, the members of the Environment and Public Works Committee, reported my legislation S. 1606, providing for the contribution of the nuclear industry. With today's 10 to 6 vote, and the favorable report from the Energy and Natural Resources Committee taken in March, the bill is now ready for the Senate calendar.

This issue is a tremendously complex and difficult question for my Senate colleagues. Some constituents have labeled this legislation and the entire cost-sharing plan as merely a bailout for GPU. The truth is, as members of both committees have determined, that the cost-sharing plan represented by my legislation will avoid leaving millions of consumers without electricity, the site remaining contaminated, and the Federal Government shouldering the entire cost.

My legislation, S. 1606, and the cost-sharing plan as a whole, avoids this outcome. My colleagues who have voted to report this bill from both the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and today from the Environmental and Public Works Committee, recognized this, and I extend my heartfelt thanks to each of them.

I hope that the House of Representatives will take action on a similar bill in the very near future. Without a positive sign from the other body, getting the bill from the Senate calendar to the Senate floor is very difficult. The Senate, with approximately 45 legislative days remaining, has over 200 bills on its calendar, most of which have either been passed by the House, or have had substantial committee action taken on them. Unfortunately, that is not the case with companion legislation to S. 1606. I hope that the House of Representatives when it looks at the positive action these Senate Committees have taken, they too will recognize the gravity of the need.●

TIME-LIMITATION AGREEMENT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Chair and my good friend from West Virginia to make sure this agreement is correct. It is a very complicated agreement dealing with the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 58.

I do ask unanimous consent that as the Senate considers Senate Joint Resolution 58 that it be considered under the following time agreement: That there be eight amendments considered to be offered by Senator LEAHY, 2 hours on the first amendment dealing with unemployment to be equally divided; 20 minutes on each of seven remaining amendments, if offered by Senator LEAHY, the time to be equally divided; two amendments, if offered by Senator FORD, 2 hours on an amendment of Senator FORD's dealing with a 2-year budget concept, the time to be equally divided; and 1 hour equally divided on Senator FORD's printed amendment No. 1934—1 hour on Senator FORD's amendment equally divided on his printed amendment numbered 1934; two amendments, if offered by Senator HART, on which there would be 6 hours with the time equally divided. As I understand it, it is to be allocated by Senator HART to either of his two amendments which deal with capital expenditures.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Either or both.

Mr. STEVENS. It is a total of 6 hours that he may use as he sees fit on two amendments, if offered by him.

One or two amendments to be offered by Senator HEFLIN, if he offers them, on which he would have 8 hours equally divided on each amendment, with a limit of two to be offered by Senator HEFLIN to deal with national defense emergencies—I amend that and make the Heflin time the same as the Hart time, 8 hours equally divided, which Senator HEFLIN can use for either one or two amendments dealing with national defense emergencies; seven amendments to be offered by Senator CRANSTON, if offered, as follows: Two hours on printed amendment No. 1945, which is a substitute constitutional amendment; 2 hours to strike the three-fifths requirements, that is printed amendment 1989; 1 hour on an amendment to strike section 2, which is printed amendment No. 1992; 1 hour on the amendment to permit an increase in recipients by majority vote; 1 hour on a national emergency amendment, which is printed amendment No. 1994; 1 hour on the clause pertaining to three-fifths present-and-voting requirement in the amendment; and 2 hours to require a budget statement, an amendment to require a budget statement, to include monetary policy.

That time for Senator CRANSTON is to be equally divided on each amendment.

Two hours on each of two Bumpers amendments dealing with the subject of the constitutional amendment, to be equally divided;

Three hours, equally divided, on an amendment, if offered, by Senator DODD, dealing with the pay-as-you-go substitute;

Six amendments to be offered, if offered, by Senator MOYNIHAN, which would be 1 hour each, equally divided, and those are printed amendments numbered 1979, 1980, 1927, 1928, 1929, and an unprinted amendment dealing with prior notice of unexpected expenditures;

Three hours, equally divided, on a Baucus-Mathias amendment dealing with the statutory rather than the constitutional amendment approach;

Four hours, equally divided between the majority and minority leaders or their designees, from which they may yield time to other Members;

On all remaining first-degree amendments, there be a time limit of 1 hour, equally divided;

All second-degree amendments will be limited to 30 minutes, equally divided; 20 minutes on any debatable motion, appeal, or point of order, if submitted to the Senate;

And provided that the final vote on the adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 58 occur not earlier than 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, August 3, but no later than Wednesday, noon, on August 4;

And finally, I ask unanimous consent that paragraph 4 of rule XII be waived.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I add to that unanimous-consent request 1 hour on an amendment, if offered, by Senator LEVIN on the national emergency provisions to the constitutional amendment; 4 hours total, equally divided, on two Gorton amendments dealing with judicial review under the constitutional amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the words "judicial review," they do not pertain to matters not germane to this resolution, do they?

Mr. STEVENS. They do not. Senator GORTON has discussed those amendments on the floor. They deal with the concept of the court's review of action taken by the Congress pursuant to the constitutional amendment, if ratified.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Further reserving the right to object, would the distinguished acting majority leader specify that any second-degree amendment be germane and that all remaining first-degree amendments that have not been specified therein be germane to the subject matter of this constitutional amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I am pleased to have that addition and make that a part of our unanimous-consent request, that amendments in the first degree not specified must be germane and all second-degree amendments must be germane to the amendment to which they are offered.

Mr. President, it is my understanding, so that the distinguished minority leader will have a chance to comment, that as a result of this time agreement, if it is granted, all of the amendments that we have discussed would be germane to the constitutional amendment which is pending, Senate Joint Resolution 58.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Some of them would be germane by virtue of the specification of some of them. Otherwise, let us say, under cloture they would not.

Mr. STEVENS. But they all pertain to the balanced budget concept. They do not enter into any other constitutional amendment. We do not evisage any amendment not germane to the concept of the subject matter would be offered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes. Further reserving the right to object.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, Senator DIXON——

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. One amendment deals with national emergency and, of course, that would be germane to the concept, and one deals with line item veto. That would be germane to the concept.

Mr. STEVENS. Senator DIXON has two amendments. We ask that his amendment 1941 and an unprinted amendment that deals with the line item veto concept be allowed 1 hour equally divided. We think they would be entitled to that in any event under the first-degree amendment limitation. But just to be certain, we ask that his amendment be specifically listed with the time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, would the distinguished acting majority leader be in a position to assure that the votes on these amendments, on each of the amendments, would be up-or-down votes? May I say that I raised this question with the distinguished majority leader before he had to leave the floor. He said that personally he would have no objection to that, but inasmuch as Mr. THURMOND, the manager of the joint resolution, had left the floor, that he, Mr. BAKER, would not be in a position to give me a definite, affirmative answer to that question. I assume that the distinguished acting Republican leader would be in the same position at this point.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader is correct. We did discuss this subject with the majority leader. I would be similarly constrained.

I might state that it would be our intention to urge that there be up or down votes on these amendments in view of the fact that we have been able to obtain a time agreement and that it is the constitutional amendment process that we are dealing with. But without the concurrence of the distinguished chairman of the committee and Senator HATCH, who has been working on it, we would not be able to enter that into the unanimous-consent agreement at this time. It is our hope that Members of the Senate will agree that we have up or down votes on the amendments that have been qualified under this time agreement.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, I certainly cannot complain with the response that has been given to me by the acting Republican leader or by the majority leader before he left the floor. It is perfectly understandable that neither of them is in a position, under these circumstances, to give an affirmative answer.

I believe I understand, however, from the answer that has been given, that both the majority leader and the acting Republican leader would certainly do whatever they could within their power to see there will be up-or-down votes on each of the amendments. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. STEVENS. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I do have one final condition. I would have to object if the vote on the substitute, the overall substitute by Mr. CRANSTON, is not an up-or-down vote. I would have to object to the time agreement. So, if we could enter into a time agreement with that one reservation, I would, therefore, have no objection. I would not expect a response until the acting Republican leader has had an opportunity to talk with Mr. THURMOND and Mr. BAKER.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I do ask unanimous consent that there be an order specifically entered that there be an up-or-down vote on the Cranston substitute. I do that on my own motion. I think, if I understand the circumstances, I shall take the responsibility for that myself.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection to the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further objection?

Without objection, it so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I understand that Mr. STENNIS wants 1 hour to speak on the resolution. I have 2 hours under my control. Would the distinguished Republican leader put the request, which I think is his responsibility and right to do, that of the 2 hours under my control, 1 hour would be under the control of Mr. STENNIS?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, so that there be no problem, I ask unanimous consent that the time to be equally divided between the majority and minority leaders or their designees be increased to 6 hours equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the agreement follows:

Ordered, That during the further consideration of S.J. Res. 58, proposing a Constitutional Amendment to provide for a balanced budget, that time on any germane first degree amendment be limited to one hour to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of such amendment and the manager of the joint resolution, and that time on any second degree amendment, which must be germane to the first degree amendment be limited to 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of such amendment and the manager of the joint resolution.

Provided, That on 8 amendments to be offered by Senator Leahy there be 2 hours equally divided on the 1st amendment dealing with unemployment and 20 minutes equally divided on each of the 7 remaining amendments.

Provided further, That on 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Ford there be 2 hours equally divided on an amendment dealing with a 2 year budget and 1 hour equally divided on amendment No. 1934.

Provided further, That on 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Hart dealing with capital expenditures, there be a total of 6 hours equally divided.

Provided further, That on 1 or 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Heflin dealing with national defense emergencies, there be a total of 8 hours equally divided.

Provided further, That on 7 amendments to be offered by Senator Cranston there be 2 hours equally divided on amendment No. 1945 with an up and down vote to occur on the amendment, 2 hours equally divided on amendment No. 1989 and an amendment to require the budget statement to include monetary policy, and 1 hour equally divided on amendments No. 1992, No. 1994, an amendment to permit an increase in recipients by majority vote, and an amendment to provide for ⅗ present and voting.

Provided further, That on 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Bumpers there be 2 hours on each equally divided.

Provided further, That on 1 amendment to be offered by Senator Dodd, a pay as you go substitute, there be three hours equally divided.

Provided further, That on a Baucus/Mathias amendment dealing with a statutory approach there be three hours equally divided.

Provided further, That on each of 6 amendments to be offered by Senator Moynihan, No. 1979, No. 1980, No. 1927, No. 1928, No. 1929, and an unprinted amendment dealing with prior notice there be 1 hour equally divided.

Provided further, That on 1 amendment to be offered by Senator Levin dealing with a national emergency there be 1 hour equally divided.

Provided further, That on 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Gorton on judicial review there be a total of 4 hours equally divided.

Provided further, That on 2 amendments to be offered by Senator Dixon there be 1 hour each on No. 1941 and an unprinted amendment dealing with line item veto.

Ordered further, That on any debatable motion or appeal or point of order if submitted there be 20 minutes equally divided.

Ordered further, That there be 6 hours on the joint resolution, with 3 hours under the control of the majority leader, 2 hours under the control of the minority leader and 1 hour under the control of Senator Stennis which may be yielded at any point during the consideration of the joint resolution.

Ordered further, That final passage occur no earlier than 12 noon, August 3 and no later than 12 noon, August 4, 1982.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Republican leader for his courtesy and understanding and for his diligence and cooperation in working out this complex agreement, which I think is a reasonable one, which should give the Senate ample time to discuss fully the constitutional amendment and the amendments that will be offered thereto.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I thank both leaders for their diligent cooperation in working out a very fine agreement.

I thank the Senator from Alaska for agreeing to an up-or-down vote on a substitute I shall offer.

I thank my leader for his wisdom and for his strength and forcefulness in insisting that that be part of the agreement. I am grateful to him for his leadership.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, while we are passing around expressions of gratitude, I want personally to thank Mr. Charles Kinney on this side and Ms. Elizabeth Baldwin on the Republican side for the work that they did in putting this agreement together. It took a lot of their time and it certainly, I am sure, imposed upon their patience. They are to be highly congratulated for the work that they did in assisting the leadership in putting this agreement together.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, there are in excess of 25 amendments and in excess of 50 hours allocated under this agreement. It means that the Senate will vote on, I think, a very controversial and meaningful proposed constitutional amendment no later than noon a week from tomorrow. I think that the Senate should be on notice that this means there will be votes throughout this week and the early part of next week.

We hope, of course, to be able to finish the constitutional amendment by Tuesday so we can go to the reconciliation bill.

It is the majority leader's intention to go to the reconciliation bill as soon as this constitutional amendment is disposed of.

There may be other matters on which we will seek cooperation of the distinguished minority leader that we might handle on a short-term basis as they come up.

But I do believe, as the distinguished minority leader has indicated, that it is obviously the work product of a long negotiation between our staffs, and I join him in commending those staffs and thank him for his willingness to give us a timeframe within which we can work our way out of this dilemma that has been presented us on what is the reasonable timeframe that the Senate can allocate to the consideration of this resolution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, is there an order for convening tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an order to convene at 10 a.m.

Mr. STEVENS. Is there a time designated for routine morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has not yet been an order so entered.

ORDER FOR A PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS ON TOMORROW

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the leaders' time under the standing order and the special orders that have already been entered, there be a period of time for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 30 minutes during which Senators may speak therein for not to exceed 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess in accordance with the previous order.

There being no objection, at 7:11 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 28, 1982, at 10 a.m.

FATHER MICHAEL J. BURKE

(Mr. COURTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to my colleagues a friend of mine, Father Michael J. Burke, who gave the opening prayer this morning.

Father Burke was, from 1973 to 1976, secretary and notary, tribunal of the second instance, Archdiocese of Baltimore. During that same period of time he served as pastoral assistant and deacon at Our Lady of Good Counsel Parish of Baltimore.

From 1975 to 1976 he served as deacon, Assumption Parish, Morristown, N.J. From 1976 to 1978 he has served as associate pastor, St. Andrew the Apostle Parish, Clifton, N.J. From 1978 until the present, he now serves as a faculty member of the Morris Catholic High School in Denville, N.J.

He was educated at Ogdensburg, N.Y. He received a degree in philosophy, bachelor of arts in philosophy, at LeMoyne College in Syracuse. He received his master of sacred theology at St. Mary's Seminary and University School of Theology in Baltimore, Md., and at the present time he is teaching history, and he is also at the present time preparing to be an attorney at law. So, therefore, it is a pleasure to talk about an individual who is a historian, a philosopher, a theologian, and will soon be a barrister before the bar.

WALTER POLOVCHAK

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor at this time to inform the Members that tomorrow Walter Polovchak, the 14-year-old Ukrainian boy who is fighting to stay in the United States, and the Soviet Union is equally fighting to take him back, he will be here in Washington. At 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, in room 2247, he will be with his sister Natalie, and will be briefing in an informal way Members of Congress on the problems that he would face on returning to the Soviet Union, and also his feelings about the United States.

For those Members who are interested, I think they will find that this young man is very worthwhile hearing and having a chance to meet.

STATEMENT OF MR. PRICE WITHDRAWING HIS NAME FROM SPONSORSHIP OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 521

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 443 was introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) on March 17, 1982. I subsequently became a cosponsor of that resolution. The resolution was reintroduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin as House Joint Resolution 521 on June 23, 1982. House Joint Resolution 521 now contains several substantive changes to House Joint Resolution 443 that alter the basic thrust of the original resolution.

Mr. Speaker, several major events have occurred subsequent to the introduction of House Joint Resolution 443 with respect to negotiations toward agreements for the reduction of strategic nuclear weapons and reductions in intermediate range nuclear forces. Strategic arms reduction talks with the Soviet Union began in Geneva on June 29, and the second round of intermediate-range nuclear forces talks began in Geneva early in July. In my opinion, House Joint Resolution 521, as now written, would tend to weaken the position of the United States in its negotiations in Geneva. Further, I believe that House Joint Resolution 521 places the wrong priorities on its objectives. The proper priority should be to first attempt to make radical reductions in the armaments allocated to the United States and the Soviet Union, and, second, to freeze armaments at those levels. House Joint Resolution 521 would approach the arms control problem in exactly the opposite way by asking the President to first negotiate a freeze on nuclear arms at levels that are so favorable to the Soviet Union as to be dangerously destabilizing, and then seek reductions.

On July 15, 1982, I joined with several other Members in the introduction of House Joint Resolution 538. This resolution fully recognizes and supports the negotiations initiated in Geneva in November of 1981 and in June of 1982 on the limitation and reduction of strategic and intermediate-range nuclear arms. This resolution also recognizes a basic fact that is glossed over by other so-called freeze resolutions; that arms limitation agreements and complicated verification issues must be negotiated; and that such negotiations require time, patience, and public support.

For the above reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that my name be withdrawn from sponsorship of House Joint Resolution 521, but the rules do not permit that request after reporting of the resolution.

RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR JAMES WATT CALLED FOR

(Mr. MOAKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am calling today on President Reagan to take firm disciplinary action against Secretary of the Interior James Watt and to clarify the administration's position with respect to the use of U.S. military in case of a cutoff of Middle Eastern oil.

Although the Secretary's June 17 letter to the Israeli Ambassador has attracted more attention, I am concerned that last week's communication to the Congress may reflect even more reckless and provocative foreign policy notions.

On July 21, 1982, in a response to a letter sent from myself and 28 other Members of Congress, Secretary Watt stated:

> The world's political leadership will secure with economic strength or military force the needed energy.

Watt went on to state:

> America must be prepared. It is much easier to explain to the American people why we have oil rigs off our coasts than it would be to explain to the mothers and fathers of this land why their sons are fighting on the sands of the Middle East as might be required if the policies of our critics were to be pursued.

Frankly I find this type of response totally unacceptable. Not only does it not respond to the legitimate concerns of coastal States as outlined in our original letter, but far more serious, the Secretary is stating that the administration will consider using military force should Middle Eastern oil supplies be cut off.

Is it not enough that there are two wars presently in the Middle East and that at best the situation is highly volatile? Is it proper for an official of our Government, in his official capacity, to irresponsibly make assumptions concerning U.S. alternatives should there be a cutoff of Middle Eastern oil?

While I cannot bring myself to believe that such a policy would be taken seriously even within the Reagan administration, nevertheless, an official of the Reagan administration has made such an outrageous claim.

If this is nothing more than another in a long list of unfortunate statements by Secretary Watt designed to provoke controversy, then he has far overstepped his authority. The administration should not allow the antics of this one man to continue when it clouds the foreign policy position of this Nation.

It is time for President Reagan to take affirmative action with Secretary Watt and to clearly disassociate the administration policy from the Secretary's, which has extended far beyond his legitimate authority.

SECRETARY WATT SHOULD RESIGN FROM CABINET NOW

(Mr. AuCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say something today about Interior Secretary James Watt's recent letter to the Israeli Ambassador. In that letter, Mr. Watt suggests that "The liberals of the Jewish community" are weakening America's ability "to be a good friend to Israel" by their opposition to Mr. Watt's energy programs.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is an unprecedented and crude little effort to stifle domestic debate on Mr. Watt's extremist environmental policies. It attempts to blackmail American citizens who have a right to freely exercise their own views.

What is more, the letter indicates that Mr. Watt gives personal credence to those disgusting "dual loyalty" smears that have always been at the heart of racist attacks against the Jewish community.

Why does Mr. Watt think he has to go through the Israeli Ambassador to communicate with Jewish Americans? Jewish-Americans, like all Americans, have only one foreign minister; that is George Shultz, our Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker, I think James Watt has finally gone too far. This man is sociologically deranged, and I think he should resign or be fired.

SECRETARY WATT MUST BE REMOVED

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I have risen on prior occasions to call for the removal of James Watt as Secretary of the Interior. As steward of our Nation's public lands, we had expected Secretary Watt to serve as protector of our natural resources; as we all know he has miserably failed in that obligation.

Now, Secretary Watt has exceeded all of his previous levels of thoughtlessness and irresponsibility. His letter to the Israeli Ambassador to the United States warning that American Jewish liberals "would weaken America's ability to be a good friend of Israel" by not supporting his energy policies were out of place, out of order, and out of step with reality.

As ineffective and irresponsible as James Watt has been as protector of our environment, he is even worse in his venture into the field of diplomacy. Perhaps now, even those who have defended his environmental policies will realize what many of us have long known—that James Watt is unfit for his position. For the good of America, the President must remove him from office immediately.

JAMES WATT—"A LOOSE CANNON ON THE DECK"

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, the letter recently sent to Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens, is yet another example of Interior Secretary James Watt's almost unique ability to be at once totally inappropriate, distasteful, and highly offensive to the sensibilities of millions of Americans.

Secretary Watt's letter, linking support for controversial domestic environmental programs to support for Israel, is offensive to both Americans and Israelis.

Mr. Speaker, I do not object to his letter because of concern over those environmental policies or even over his erratic stewardship of the Department of the Interior * * * that is another story for another day. My concern here today is as an American. The Secretary is bringing discredit upon this administration and holding it up to ridicule. He seems to lack the sense of appropriateness and discretion that should be indespensible to every Cabinet officer.

Of course, this is not the first time that Secretary Watt has had problems over letterwriting on subjects wildly extraneous to his proper role as a Cabinet Secretary. It was not long ago that he used the power of his department to have a young energy lobbyist, Timothy Donohoe, fired from his job with ENSERCH Corp. for sending Watt a personal letter calling into question the Secretary's publicly stated contention that in Washington a person is "either a liberal or an American."

I think it is high time, Mr. Speaker, that the President review Secretary Watt's propensity for playing the loose cannon on the deck of the ship of state. The President is not well-served by a Cabinet Secretary whose total lack of propriety and restraint has become an embarrassment to his administration at home and abroad.

TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE

(Mr. CONABLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, because of the procedural requirements of the House, complexities resulting from possible Senate amendments to the wording, and uncertainties about how long Congress will be in session this fall, time is of the essence now with respect to the balanced budget/expenditure limitation constitutional amendment. If you have not signed discharge petition No. 18 as yet, please do so today or tomorrow. You may not have another opportunity effectively to use our current fiscal crisis to force needed long term reform. Our economy needs this reassurance now not after the crisis has passed the point of no return. Failure to use this opportunity may find us next spring, when legislatures are meeting across the country, facing an effective call for a constitutional convention the product of which will be uncertain at best, because one way or another the people want the greater presumption in favor of fiscal discipline such a constitutional amendment can bring.

So I ask my colleagues not to delay. The job you save may be your own; but more important, you will be demonstrating representative government's capacity to be both responsive and responsible.

JOURNALIST LIKENS DEMOCRATS TO A "DEAD CIRCUS"

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, William Greider, a journalist familiar to most of you, recently said of the Democrat miniconvention that—

> The Democrats do not have their act together. They are not unified. They seem like a dead circus whose weary performers suddenly see the crowds streaming back into their tent and are not sure how to react. Circuses depend upon illusion for their thrills, but in the Democrats' case, it may be the performers not the audience who are deceived.

Mr. Greider, I think, makes a cogent point. Those who think that the American people are going to be satisfied with political solutions to economic problems are deceiving themselves. Those who think that the easiest vote is always the right vote are just kidding themselves. Those who think they can wash their hands of the responsibility of governing but still win elections are fooling no one but themselves.

Last year we set out on a course that we believe will reverse decades of excesses. Staying on that course now requires us to make decisions on spending particularly and yes, taxes, too that on the surface does not look politically popular.

But I am convinced the American people expect us to be responsible. They want genuine decisions. They do not want deceptive imitations.

SURVEY SHOWS RESULTS OF IRA IMPROVEMENTS

(Mr. MOORE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, sound proof now exists that expansion of individual retirement account terms enacted last year work. On July 7, the Life Insurance Marketing and Research Association released the results of an independent national survey which reported that IRA sales for the current year will total $27 to $35 billion deposited in 14 million accounts. This is more than double the level of IRA activity before the 1981 improvements. Here are the findings.

First, one-third of all households eligible to open an IRA will do so this year and 17 percent have already done so in the first quarter of 1982.

Second, three out of four IRA buyers plan to make maximum contributions and 89 percent of those eligible to open an IRA are aware of their eligibility.

Third, more than 6 out of every 10 households are opening an IRA funded at least partly out of present income. Meaning, in 60 percent of the new accounts, new savings are being formed.

Finally, of those households funding an IRA through regular income earnings, the survey found that 18 percent are doing so through payroll deductions. Savings formation is becoming a savings habit.

We need to explore the further expansion of the individual retirement account as a proven savings incentive.

LIBERALS' DISSATISFACTION WITH SECRETARY WATT TIED TO DEREGULATION

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, this morning four of our colleagues, two from the State of New York, one from Oregon, and one from Massachusetts, all liberals to the core, have called into attention the policies of Secretary of the Interior James Watt.

Why are those four gentlemen standing in the well this morning protesting about those policies? Because the Secretary, in his own inimitable way, has touched to the core the bankruptcy of the energy policies which have been advocated by those four gentlemen in this House and their colleagues who fit within the definition of the liberals in our country who legislatively have brought an energy shortage in this country when they established by law a maximum price below the market for energy subjects in this country, specifically natural gas.

Secretary of the Interior James Watt wants to deregulate the price of natural gas. Why? Because it is the most constructive way that we in this country can establish energy independence. We now import around 4 million barrels of oil a day. If we would have the courage in this institution to deregulate nutural gas prices, we have the realistic assumption or belief that we can back out the use of much of that 4 million barrels of oil that we are importing and establish energy independence for this country. That will establish a course which, in the opinion of some, including this Member from California, will deal the death knell to the OPEC nations of the world by breaking that cartel and establishing energy independence for America.

THE EVANS-CORCORAN HOUSING INITIATIVE

(Mr. BEREUTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to reiterate my support for the Evans-Corcoran housing initiative and to urge my colleagues continued support for this important and innovative measure. Last week our colleague from Delaware (Mr. EVANS) and our colleague from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN) went to the White House to discuss this measure with the President. They took with them a letter in support of it signed by over 60 Members, and they came away with a commitment from the President that he would not oppose such an initiative.

The Evans-Corcoran plan would transfer $1 billion in previously allocated funds into a fund which would be used to write down interest rates on mortgages under the existing mortgage revenue bond programs run by States and localities across the country. This measure would assist approximately 350,000 home buyers without setting up a costly new bureaucracy, without requiring a complicated new program, and without the delay associated with writing a completely new set of program regulations. Realistic estimates have indicated that the program could be up and running within 60 days of passage under the existing MRB (mortgage revenue bond) system. This measure would further create new construction jobs and generate new tax revenues in this construction season.

This amendment was offered this morning as an amendment to the general supplemental appropriations bill in the House Appropriations Committee by our colleague from South Carolina (Mr. CAMPBELL), but was necessarily withdrawn. I strongly urge all my colleagues in the House to support this amendment on the floor if we are given a rule permitting it to be offered. It will be the last chance to support the housing industry during this building season.

TRIBUTE TO ANITA (PAT) McEWEN

(Mr. MARTIN of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of sadness and a heavy heart that I must inform you and my colleagues of the passing of a woman who was very dear to many of us in this Chamber, Anita (Pat) McEwen, wife of my predecessor, Robert C. McEwen, who died last Wednesday night at their home in Ogdensburg, N.Y., after a long illness.

As a good friend of Bob's, Mr. Speaker, and an ardent admirer of his, you well know, as do so many of his former colleagues, how important Pat's devotion, understanding and support were to Bob in his nearly 30 years of public service, 16 of which were in this body. It was just 2 years ago when our former colleague announced his retirement. At that time, reflecting upon his career, he said:

> None of this would have been possible without the support of my wife, Pat. She has given much in the 27 years of my legislative service. Rather than just praise her, it is time to consider her and give her more of my time. This I intend to do.

Bob McEwen was a devoted and loving husband and is a dedicated and loving father. I know that you and my colleagues will join me, Mr. Speaker, in expressing our sincerest condolences to Bob and his daughters, Nancy Wax and Mary Fitzpatrick.

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of New York. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, I had a very close working relationship with Bob McEwen and his wife, and I would like to add my comments to those of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I join my colleague from New York in paying tribute to the late Anita (Pat) McEwen, wife of my former colleague and good friend the Honorable Robert C. McEwen. Pat passed away after a long illness last Wednesday in the beautiful home in Ogdensburg, N.Y., that she shared with her devoted husband.

I have known and admired Bob and Pat for many years. Our close friendship dates from Bob's first days as a freshman Representative from New York's 13th District, in the 89th Congress. During Bob's 16 years as a Member of this body, we worked together on many important issues of mutual concern: he was always a great friend and a great ally. Bob for a short time took my daughter, Beverly Clausen Mendenhall, into his employ as a staff member and she has remained an admirer of Bob and Pat ever since.

My administrative assistant, John Bovard, comes from the McEwen's hometown, and is an old family friend. He has often spoken of the high esteem in which Bob and Pat are held by the residents of St. Lawrence County and northern New York.

My wife Ollie and I fondly remember our association with Bob and Pat during their years of residence in Washington. No words can express fully the sadness we feel at Pat's passing. Our prayers go out to Bob and their daughters Nancy Wax and Mary Fitzpatrick. We know what a loss they have suffered, and pray that God will give them strength.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ALLOWING FOR VOLUNTARY PRAYER IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

(Mr. KINDNESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, today there is on file at the Clerk's desk discharge petition No. 20 concerning House Joint Resolution 493, the school prayer amendment.

This proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States would read only as follows:

Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any State to participate in prayer.

I would ask my colleagues who are interested in having an opportunity to vote on this very important issue to sign discharge petition No. 20 at the Clerk's desk today or hopefully by August 11 when we must have 218 signatures. That time is very short, very critical, and I would urge prompt action on the part of those who are interested. We would like very much to have 218 signatures sooner than August 11.

I would urge my colleagues to join with me in this discharge petition and pray we will have the 218 signatures by August 11.

THE DEMOCRATS' ASSAULT ON THE BUDGET PROCESS

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, the House Democratic leadership is trying to get away with murder by mutilating the congressional budget process.

The weapon being used is a legislative fragmentation grenade aimed at reconciliation—the heart and guts, and teeth of the whole budget process.

Instead of upholding the Budget Act's mandate for a single reconciliation bill, as reaffirmed by the first budget resolution for fiscal 1983, the Democratic leadership is resorting to a nickle and dime strategy of multiple reconciliation bills that would leave us with just that—nickles and dimes in budget savings instead of the $6.5 billion in budget cuts required by the first budget resolution.

The first example of this divide and budget-bust strategy was rushed to the Rules Committee today—a bill out of the Post Office Committee calling for $32 million in savings instead of the $376 million in cuts required by the budget resolution. That is a $344 million shortfall in budget savings—only 8.5 percent of the congressionally mandated goal.

Not only is the leadership condoning this shortchanging in required budget savings, but it is encouraging committees to bypass the Budget Committee which is supposed to package the recommendation of nine committees into a single bill.

This might be a smart, short-term partisan strategy in terms of appeasing special interest groups, but it would not hold down deficits or uphold the integrity of Congress under the budget process.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time we bell this Democrat tomcat and its wild, midnight spending sprees on the town.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONNELLY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken today after debate has been concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

VETERANS' DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND SURVIVORS' BENEFITS AMENDMENTS OF 1982

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6782) to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation for disabled veterans, to increase the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses and children of veterans, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6782

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits Amendments of 1982".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 204. (a) Section 410(b)(1) is amended by inserting "or entitled to receive" after "was in receipt of".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to dependency and indemnity compensation payable for months after September 1982.

ADMINISTRATIVE IMPROVEMENTS TO LIFE INSURANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 205. (a) Section 770 is amended—

(1) by striking out the second sentence of subsection (c); and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h) Insurance payable under this subchapter may not be paid in any amount to the extent that such amount would otherwise escheat to a State. Payment of insurance under this subchapter may not be made to the estate of the insured or the estate of any beneficiary of the insured unless it is affirmatively shown that any sum to be paid will not escheat to a State. Any amount to be paid under this subchapter shall be reduced to the extent necessary to comply with this subsection.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1982.

BURIAL FLAGS

SEC. 206. (a) Section 901 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) The Administrator shall furnish a flag to drape the casket of each deceased person who is buried in a national cemetery under eligibility for burial under section 1002(6) of this title. After the burial, the flag shall be given to the next of kin or to such other person as the Administrator considers appropriate.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to burials after September 30, 1982.

BURIAL BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN VETERANS WHOSE REMAINS ARE UNCLAIMED

SEC. 207. Section 902(a) is amended by striking out "When a veteran" and all that follows through "the Administrator," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "When a veteran dies—

"(1) who was in receipt of compensation (or but for the receipt of retirement pay would have been entitled to compensation) or who was in receipt of pension; or

"(2) in the case of a veteran of any war or a veteran who was discharged from the active military, naval, or air service for a disability incurred or aggravated in line of duty, whose body is held by a State (or a political subdivision of a State) and with respect to whom the Administrator determines—

"(A) that there is no next of kin or other person claiming the body of the deceased veteran; and

"(B) that there are not available, from the deceased veteran's estate or otherwise, sufficient resources to defray the cost of the burial and funeral of the deceased veteran, the Administrator,".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to deaths occurring after September 30, 1982.

CLARIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR BURIAL BENEFITS FOR PERSONS DYING IN CONTRACT NURSING HOME FACILITIES

SEC. 208. (a) Section 903(a) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Where death occurs in a Veterans' Administration facility" and inserting in lieu thereof "When a veteran dies in a Veterans' Administration facility (as defined in section 601(4) of this title"); and

(2) by inserting "or in an institution to which the deceased was properly transferred for nursing home care under section 620 of this title" after "of this title".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to deaths occurring after September 30, 1982.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE SECRETARY OF THE ARMY

SEC. 209. Notwithstanding section 79(b)(2) of the National Cemeteries Act of 1973 (87 Stat. 88), the provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for selection of superintendents of national cemeteries from meritorious and trustworthy members of the Armed Forces who have been disabled in the line of duty for active field service", approved March 24, 1948, as in effect on the day before the effective date of section 7 of the National Cemeteries Act of 1973, shall not apply with respect to the appointment of superintendents of national cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Army.

PROTECTION OF QUALITY OF HEALTH CARE

SEC. 210. (a) Section 5010(a) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, all activities carried out at a medical facility under the direct jurisdiction of the Administrator shall be performed by Federal employees unless the Administrator, after considering the advice of the Chief Medical Director, determines that such facility is not capable of carrying out any such activity through such employees or that contracting for the performance of such activity would enhance the quality of medical care for eligible veterans.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph does not prohibit or restrict any authority of the Veterans' Administration under any other provision of this title or any other provision of law to enter into contracts or cooperative sharing agreements with other Federal agencies or departments or with State or nongovernmental entities for the exchange or sharing of goods, services, facilities, or resources.".

(b) Section 5010(a)(6) of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), does not apply with respect to a contract in effect on May 15, 1982, or to any renewal, extension, or modification of such a contract.

TITLE III—BUDGET SAVINGS PROVISIONS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Veterans' Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982".

LOAN ORIGINATION FEE FOR VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HOME LOANS

SEC. 302. (a)(1) Subchapter III of chapter 37 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1829. Loan fees

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, a fee shall be collected from each veteran obtaining a loan guaranteed, made, or insured under this chapter, and no loan may be guaranteed, made, or insured under this chapter until the fee payable with respect to such loan has been collected and remitted to the Administrator. The amount of the fee shall be one-half of 1 per centum of the total loan amount. The amount of the fee may be included in the loan to the veteran and paid from the proceeds thereof.

"(b) A fee shall not be collected under this section from a veteran receiving or entitled to receive compensation or from a surviving spouse described in section 1801(b)(2) of this title.

"(c) Fees collected under this section shall be deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(d) A fee may not be collected under this section with respect to any loan closed after September 30, 1985.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1828 the following new item:

"1829. Loan fees.".

(b) Section 1829 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall apply only to loans closed after September 30, 1982.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF PAYMENTS

SEC 303. (a)(1) Chapter 51 is amended by inserting after section 3010 the following new section:

"§ 3011. Commencement of payment based on an award

"(a) Notwithstanding section 3010 of this title or any other provision of law and except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, payment of monetary benefits based on an award or an increased award of compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, or pension may not be made for any period before the first day of the calendar month following the month in which the award became effective as provided under section 3010 of this title or such other provision of law.

"(b)(1) During the period between the effective date of an award as provided under section 3010 of this title or other provision of law and the commencement of the period of payment based on such award as provided under subsection (a) of this section, an individual entitled to receive monetary benefits shall be deemed to be in receipt of such benefits for the purpose of all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) If any person who is in receipt of retired or retirement pay would also be eligible to receive compensation or pension upon the filing of a waiver of such waiver shall not become effective until the first day of the month following the month in which such waiver is filed, and nothing in this section shall prohibit the receipt of retired or retirement pay for any period before such effective date.

"(c) This section shall apply to payments made pursuant to section 3110 of this title only if the monthly amount of dependency and indemnity compensation or pension payable to the surviving spouse is greater than the amount of compensation or pension the veteran would have received for the month in which such veteran's death occurred.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3010 the following new item:

"3011. Commencement of payment based on an award.".

(b) Section 3011 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect on October 1, 1982.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN REDUCTIONS OF COMPENSATION AND PENSION

SEC. 304. Effective on October 1, 1982, section 3012(b)(2) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "month".

ROUNDING OF PENSION TO NEXT LOWER DOLLAR

SEC. 305. (a)(1) Chapter 51 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 3023. Rounding of pension payments

"The amount of any pension payment under section 521, 541, or 542 of this title or under section 306(a) of the Veterans' and Survivors' Pension Improvement Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-588), if not a multiple of $1, shall be rounded down to the next lower multiple of $1.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"3023. Rounding of pension payments."

(b) Section 3023 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect on October 1, 1982.

ELIGIBILITY OF COLLEGE STUDENTS FOR PENSION

SEC. 306. (a) Section 501 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) For the purposes of sections 521, 522, 541, 542, and 543 of this title, the term 'child' shall be as defined in section 101(4) of this title except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

"(B) The term 'child' includes a child who is over the age of eighteen if such child is pursuing a program of education for the purpose of receiving a secondary school diploma and is under the age of nineteen but does not include a child over the age of eighteen who is not pursuing such a program unless such child before attaining the age of eighteen became permanently incapable of self-support.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) does not apply to any child to whom or on behalf of whom pension or additional pension for the month of September 1982 is payable under section 521, 541, or 542 of title 38, United States Code, if such child has attained the age of eighteen years before October 1, 1982.

(c)(1) Notwithstanding any provision of section 521, 541, 542, or 3112 of title 38, United States Code, or section 306(a) of Public Law 95-588, and except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, pension or additional pension payable to or on behalf of any child, including a child described by subsection (b) of this section, under section 521, 541, or 542 of such title or section 306(a) of Public Law 95-588, on the basis of the child's pursuit of a course of instruction at an approved educational institution, shall—

(A) not be paid for the months of May, June, July, and August, beginning with the months of May 1983;

(B) not be paid for any month after April 1985;

(C) not exceed for any month the amount of the pension or additional pension (attributable to such child) for the month of September 1982 (or a later month if the Administrator considers a later month appropriate under the circumstances), reduced by an amount—

(i) during the months after September 1982 and before May 1983, equal to 25 per centum of the benefit payable for September 1982 (or such later month);

(ii) during the months after August 1983 and before May 1984, equal to 50 per centum of the benefit payable for September 1982 (or such later month); and

(iii) during the months after September 1984 and before May 1985, equal to 75 per centum of the benefit payable for September 1982 (or such later month); and

(D) not be paid for any month after such pension or additional pension is discontinued at any time after September 30, 1982, by reason of such child's discontinuance of pursuit of a course of instruction at an approved educational institution.

(2) The limitations and reductions provided for under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply to pension or additional pension payable to or on behalf of a child who—

(A) before attaining the age of eighteen became permanently incapable of self-support, or

(B) who, after attaining the age of eighteen and before attaining the age of nineteen, is pursuing a program of education for the purpose of receiving a secondary school diploma.

REPEAL OF AUTHORITY TO PURSUE CORRESPONDENCE TRAINING

SEC. 307. (a) Section 1631(c) is repealed.

(b)(1) Section 1652(c) is amended by striking out "correspondence school,".

(2) Section 1681(b) is amended by striking out ", other than a program exclusively by correspondence,".

(3)(A) Section 1684 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1684. Apprenticeship or other on-job training

"Any eligible veteran may pursue a program of apprenticeship or other on-job training and be paid a training assistance allowance as provided in section 1787 of this title.".

(B) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 34 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"1684. Apprenticeship or other on-job training.".

(c)(1) Section 1701(a)(6) is amended by striking out "correspondence scho ol,".

(2)(A) Section 1734 is amended—

(i) by striking out "(a)"; and

(ii) by striking out subsection (b).

(B) The heading for such section is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1734. Apprenticeship or other on-job training".

(C) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 35 is amended to read as follows:

"1734. Apprenticeship or other on-job training.".

(d)(1) Section 1780 is amended—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by striking out ", other than a program by correspondence,";

(ii) by inserting "or" at the end of clause (4);

(iii) by striking out clause (5); and

(iv) by redesignating clause (6) as clause (5);

(B) by striking out subsection (b) (including the center heading preceding such subsection); and

(C) by redesignating subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g) as subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), respectively; and

(D) by striking out "subsection (d)(2)" in subsection (d) (as so redesignated) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (c)(2)".

(2) Section 1784 is amended—

(A) by striking out "or, in the case of correspondence training, the last date a lesson was serviced by a school" in subsection (a); and

(B) by striking out "section 1780(d)(4)" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1780(c)(4)".

(3)(A) Section 1786, relating to correspondence courses, is repealed.

(B) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 36 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 1786.

(4) The second sentence of section 1798(c) of such title is amended by striking out "correspondence, or".

(e) Section 604(a) of the Vietnam Era Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1972 (38 U.S.C. 1712 note) is amended by striking out "(1) eligible to pursue a program of education exclusively by correspondence by virtue of the provisions of section 1786 of such title (as added by section 316 of this Act) and (2)".

(f) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1982.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to bring before the House a bill that would provide increases in the rates of compensation paid to our service-connected disabled veterans and dependency and indemnity compensation paid to widows and children of veterans who die of service incurred disabilities. The rate increase would become effective October 1, 1982.

The Congress has always given the highest priority to individuals who serve in our Nation's Armed Forces and are disabled as a result of their service. This priority includes monetary benefits for disabilities incurred while serving and medical care and treatment for such disabilites. It is extremely important that veterans know we care about their welfare and that we shall never compromise on our commitment in their behalf.

This bill will provide an increase of 7.4 percent in the rates of compensation and DIC benefits, effective October 1, 1982.

Mr. Speaker, there was some question a few weeks back as to whether the budget resolution would include funding targets allowing a full cost-of-living increase in monthly benefits to be paid. The Budget Committee in the other body had given some thought to placing a cap on the compensation increase at 4 percent—that the 4-percent rate would be paid only to those veterans with disabilities rated 70 percent through 100 percent. Veterans with disabilities rated 10 percent through 60 percent would have received no increase at all under an early proposal.

When I first heard about this I made it known to anyone who would listen that as chairman on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, this would never be accepted by me and other Members of this body. The issue was finally resolved when the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, Mr. SIMPSON, the very able chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, and the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee, my longtime friend, the distinguished gentleman from California, Mr. CRANSTON, joined together in urging the Budget Committee to provide a full cost-of-living increase for compensation purposes. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, how pleased I am that the issue was favorably resolved and the House and Senate are now able to give these veterans and survivors a rate of increase they all deserve.

There are other important provisions contained in the bill which I shall leave to the chairman of our subcommittee on compensation, pension and insurance to explain. But I would like to comment briefly on title III of the bill.

I am happy to report that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has fully complied with the reconciliation instructions contained in the first concurrent budget resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it is never easy to reduce or terminate an existing Federal benefit or service. We all recognize, however, that we cannot live with the current deficit. Projected future deficits must be reduced if the country is to recover from the current economic situation. Every committee must make a serious effort to keep Federal expenditures down. Our committee has fully complied with the mandate of the House.

Before recognizing the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. APPLEGATE) for an explanation of the bill, I want to thank him; the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), my longtime friend and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, and the very able ranking minority member of the full committee, JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, for the splendid cooperation I have received from them in moving this bill to the floor. We reached agreement on the reconciliation instructions in a bipartisan manner. Although I cannot tell the Members of the House that all members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs agreed with the cost savings provisions contained in title I and title III of the reported bill, it was ordered reported by unanimous voice vote. What it does say, Mr. Speaker, is that our Members accepted the will of the House, as a committee, and have acted responsibly. I am grateful to all members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee for their cooperation and support in getting this bill before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Budget Committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to congratulate the chairman and members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee on meeting fully the targets established in the first budget resolution. The reconciliation instructions which were assigned to the Veterans' Affairs Committee were met fully. The committee performed in a manner that is in full keeping with the Budget Act and I commend you and urge all of our colleagues to support this legislation.

As you point out, it is never easy to say no or to retract on programs that exist, but you met fully the requirements and I congratulate you and commend to my colleagues support of the legislation.

□ 1250

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I certainly thank the chairman of the Budget Committee for those kind remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. APPLEGATE) who is the new chairman of our Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, and Insurance. DOUG APPLEGATE has been a member of that committee for 6 years, but since he has assumed the chairmanship of the subcommittee on May 25, a little less than 2 months ago, he has wasted no time in putting this bill together and bringing it to the floor.

I look forward to working with him in future years as chairman of this subcommittee.

Mr. APPLEGATE. I thank the chairman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, the Honorable SONNY MONTGOMERY, to the able gentleman from Arkansas, the Honorable JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, to the ranking minority member of the full committee, and, to my colleague, the Honorable CHALMERS WYLIE of Ohio, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee. I would also like to thank all of the members of the subcommittee for their efforts to help get the reported bill to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering a bill to provide a cost-of-living increase in benefits for veterans who were disabled as a result of their military service and for the widows and orphans of veterans who died of service-connected causes. The bill is designed to assist these individuals to make sure that their level of benefits is not eroded by the ravages of inflation. The bill would provide an average 7.4 percent increase effective October 1, 1982.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure you and my colleagues that the funding level contained in this bill does not exceed the targets established in the first concurrent budget resolution. Additionally, it is not inflationary in that it simply provides a cost-of-living increase based on the anticipated rise in the Consumer Price Index between October 1, 1981 and September 30, 1982. The legislation is necessary since the service-connected program for veterans and widows is not indexed by laws.

Service-connected compensation is payable to veterans who suffer from a disease or disability incurred during service.

The percentage of disability for a specific disability is assigned by the Veterans' Administration. That agency has established a "schedule for rating disabilities" which is the guideline for measuring the degree of disability. Compensation is paid for disabilities at ratings of 10 percent, 20 percent, and so forth up to 100 percent. The rate of compensation payable for each percentage of disability is established by law. Additional compensation is payable for the loss of a limb, blindness, and other severe disabilities. An additional dependency allowance is payable to veterans with a rating of 30 percent or more for a spouse, minor children, or dependent parents.

Historically, the Congress has increased compensation rates whenever there has been an appreciable increase in the cost-of-living index, since the rates are not indexed to the Consumer Price Index by law. This is necessary to insure that inflation does not erode the purchasing power of those drawing compensation and DIC benefits.

Widows and children of veterans who die of causes determined to be service connected are entitled to monthly payments of dependency and indemnity compensation.

The purpose of this benefit is to provide partial compensation to the designated survivors for the loss in financial support sustained as the result of the service-connected death. Income and need are not factors in determining a surviving spouse's or child's entitlement since the Nation assumes, in part, the legal and moral obligation of the veteran to support the spouse and children.

Payments of DIC for surviving spouses are determined on the basis of the veteran's service pay grade and range from $415 monthly for the surviving spouse of an E–1 to $1,061 monthly for the surviving spouse of an O–10. Surviving spouses are entitled to an additional $48 monthly for each child.

It is well established that the Congress has placed the very highest priority on the payment of compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation benefits to eligible veterans and survivors.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also contains several program changes.

First, it would provide entitlement to VA compensation to members of the Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps, if during military training camp, a participant suffers a disabling injury. My very capable colleague from South Dakota, the Honorable THOMAS A. DASCHLE, called to our attention the fact that where an ROTC member suffers a fatal injury during summer camp, his widow is entitled to dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC); but if he is seriously injured and does not die, he is not eligible to receive benefits from the Veterans' Administration. The individual is only eligible for Federal employees compensation under section 8104 of title 5, United States Code, which is substantially lower than VA compensation. The bill would correct this inequity.

The bill would also increase the compensation rate for certain blinded veterans by equalizing benefits for totally blinded veterans without light perception with those who have suffered the enucleation of the eyes or deformity or scarring. An increased compensation rate would also be payable to veterans who suffer from service-connected blindness in both eyes (5/200 visual acuity or less) and who additionally have incurred the service-connected loss or loss of use of one hand or one foot. This increased compensation is considered to be warranted because the loss of an extremity has a greater impact on a blinded veteran than on an individual who has not lost his or her sight. The Honorable CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH of New Jersey, the Honorable ALBERT LEE SMITH of Alabama and the Honorable JOSEPH F. SMITH of Pennsylvania addressed these issues in H.R. 6154 and H.R. 6155.

Mr. Speaker, the bill would reinstate the $300 burial allowance for certain wartime veterans whose remains are unclaimed and whose estates do not contain sufficient resources to defray the cost of the funeral and burial of the deceased. Under the provisions of Public Law 97–35, the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981, the $300 non-service-connected burial allowance was terminated for many veterans, Exceptions to this discontinuance were veterans who were drawing VA pension or compensation benefits at time of death or who died in a VA facility. Following the adoption of the Reconciliation Act last year, the press publicized accounts of many bodies being held in county and city morgues when no funds or next of kin were available to provide a proper burial. Investigation of this situation revealed that the press reports were greatly exaggerated. However, committee investigation revealed that some cases did exist and action is warranted to make certain that the unclaimed body of a wartime veteran is not buried in a pauper's grave. This provision of the bill corrects the oversight which occurred by the enactment of Public Law 97–35.

Additionally, it would authorize payment of the burial allowance in cases where a veteran dies in a VA contract nursing home. The provisions of section 903(a), title 38, United State Code authorize payment of the $300 non-service-connected burial allowance whenever death occurs in a VA facility to which the deceased was properly admitted. For almost 20 years, the VA has followed an interpretation by its General Counsel that contract nursing care constituted care in a VA facility for purposes of eligibility for burial benefits.

Public Law 97–35 provided that the benefit would no longer be payable unless the deceased veteran was in receipt of compensation or pension or unless he died in a VA facility. The Congress, relying on the longstanding interpretation of current law on this issue, did not place any limit on deaths in either a VA-owned facility or in a contract facility.

Earlier this year, the VA General Counsel issued an opinion, reversing an earlier opinion issued almost 20 years ago, that death in a contract nursing home did not constitute death in a VA facility for purposes of establishing eligibility for burial benefits. In his latest opinion, he did not consider the issue of congressional ratification of the earlier decision, manifested by legislation enacting a number of amendments and restrictions placed on payment of burial benefits. Therefore, there is no alternative but to seek legislative remedy.

The bill would further authorize the Administrator to furnish a flag to the next of kin of certain persons buried in a national cemetery. Public Law 93-43, which became effective June 18, 1973, extended the privilege of being buried in a national cemetery to nonveterans in certain instances so designated by the Administrator. This would usually involve an individual who performed outstanding and meritorious service to this Nation. This provision of the bill would authorize the Administrator to provide a burial flag to any distinguished individual so honored by burial in a national cemetery.

Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Department of Defense, the bill would provide that the position of superintendents of national cemeteries administered by the Department of the Army need not be restricted to only those who have been disabled in the line of duty. Prior to 1973, the Department of the Army administered 84 national cemeteries and required that each superintendent meet the service-connected disability requirement—a requirement which has been in effect since 1948.

When 82 of the cemeteries were transferred to the Veterans' Administration under the provisions of the National Cemeteries Act of 1973, the act removed the requirement that superintendents for national cemeteries administered by the Veterans' Administration be disabled veterans. It continued the disability requirement, however, for superintendents of Army national cemeteries. The Army anticipates extreme difficulty in filling future vacancies for the superintendent positions at Arlington and the Soldiers' Home National Cemetery. This bill would enable the Army to avoid that difficulty.

The bill further contains a technical amendment with respect to entitlement of dependency and indemnity compensation. Under current law, a surviving spouse or child is eligible for these benefits only if the veteran was, at the time of death, in receipt of compensation for a disability rated as total for 10 years prior to death or for 5 years and continuously from the date of discharge. Under this amendment, a survivor would be eligible for benefits at DIC rates if the veteran was "entitled" to receive compensation at the total rate during the requisite period. It is intended to create entitlement in survivors when the veteran was not assigned a total disability rating for the requisite duration because of VA error.

At the request of the Veterans' Administration, the bill would remove the bar against payment of servicemen's group life insurance (SGLI) and veterans' group life insurance (VGLI) proceeds in the event a claim is filed more than 4 years after the insured's death.

The bill also clarifies that such proceeds may not escheat to a State.

Mr. Speaker, the bill enhances the quality of care for veterans in medical facilities operated by the Veterans' Administration by insuring the provision of such care and necessary related services by Federal employees. This provision is contained in the bill as a result of an amendment offered by my very distinguished colleague, the Honorable MARVIN LEATH of Texas. A proposed revision to OMB circular A-76 mandates conversion to contract for those services with 25 or less employees without requiring cost comparison studies to ascertain the cost effectiveness of such conversions. The bill specifies that VA services not be contracted out unless the Administrator, after giving proper consideration to the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, determine it is not in the best interest of the veterans and the agency to do so. Mr. Speaker, high quality health care for veterans continues to be one of the committee's highest priorities and this is demonstrated by the fact that H.R. 6315, which is identical to this provision in the bill, was cosponsored by 28 members of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also complies with the reconciliation instructions to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs contained in the first concurrent budget resolution. It contains several program changes which, if enacted would realize savings totaling $169.7 million in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 1983; $185.9 million in fiscal year 1984; and $195 million in fiscal year 1985. Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Budget Office has advised us that the savings will be $400,000 more than what is shown in the body of our committee report and this amount is reflected in the above figures.

The bill contains the following cost-savings provisions:

First, rounding down pension and compensation benefit checks to the next lower dollar. Issuing pension checks in even dollars would realize savings of $10.8 million in fiscal year 1983; $10.4 million in fiscal year 1984; and $10.1 million in fiscal year 1985. Rounding down compensation and DIC benefits to the nearest whole dollar would save $18.3 million in fiscal year 1983; $18.5 million in fiscal year 1984; and $18.6 million in fiscal year 1985.

Second, amending the definition of a dependent child for pension purposes to exclude college students over the age of 18. This would be phased in over 4 years to protect current student beneficiaries. This would save $13.4 million in fiscal year 1983; $18.1 million in fiscal year 1984; and $21.7 million in fiscal year 1985.

Third, delaying payment of compensation and pension benefits until the first full month of entitlement rather than from the effective date of the award. By postponing the start of the payment period (but not the effective date itself, for purposes of other VA rights) savings in the compensation account would be $9 million in fiscal year 1983; $10 million in fiscal year 1984; and $10.4 million in fiscal year 1985. Pension savings are estimated at $19.8 million in fiscal year 1983; $20.7 million in fiscal year 1984; and $22 million in fiscal year 1985.

Fourth, changing the effective dates of reductions and discontinuances of compensation, DIC or pension by reason of a veteran's change in dependency status from the end of the year to the end of the month in which the event occurred. Savings for compensation would be $1.4 million in fiscal year 1983, 1984, and 1985. Savings for pension would be $1.8 milion in fiscal year 1983; $2.1 million in fiscal year 1984; and $2.5 million in fiscal year 1985.

Fifth, terminating the correspondence training program. This would realize savings of $5.6 million in fiscal year 1983; $4.9 million in fiscal year 1984; and $4.2 million in fiscal year 1985.

Sixth, imposing a 0.5 percent user fee on VA loans. The average fee would be about $285. With an exemption for service-connected veterans drawing compensation benefits under chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, savings would be approximately $89.6 million in fiscal year 1983; $99.8 million in fiscal year 1984; and $104.1 million in fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the above program changes meet our reconciliation requirements for the next 3 years. Although the majority of these proposals will have minimal impact upon existing benefits and services, I personally have reservations about the imposition of a users' fee on VA loans. I wish to point out, however, that it is only temporary. The authority to collect such fee will expire on September 30, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, I think it only fair that we do it this way. The fee should only be paid during a period of time when we are in a severe economic slump. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that certain tax provisions considered by the Senate last week in their tax bill are also temporary in nature. In particular, I refer to Senator HELM's amendment that the additional tax on tobacco expire October 1, 1985. Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that we should not continue to impose a users' fee on veterans, many of whom served during wartime, applying for VA loans once the country reaches a measure of economic recovery.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this bill will have no inflationary impact and is well within the budget authority and outlays as contained in the first congressional budget resolution. It has an overall cost of $539 in budget authority and $486 in outlays for fiscal year 1983.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is vital to our service-connected veterans and I urge that it be adopted.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. DASCHLE), a very active member of our committee.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend both the chairman of the full committee and the chairman of the subcommittee for bringing this bill to the floor, and I rise in strong support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to vote in favor of H.R. 6782, the Veterans Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits Amendments for 1982. I can think of no more deserving group of Americans than those who were injured or gave their lives for their country and thus am honored to support this legislation which provides a 7.4-percent cost-of-living increase to disabled veterans and survivors of veterans who died of service-related injuries.

This past May I was shocked and dismayed when the Senate voted to deny veterans disabled less than 70 percent and veterans receiving pensions a cost-of-living increase for fiscal year 1983. I would like to know how a U.S. Senator could tell a young veteran of the Vietnam war who lost an arm or leg in a booby trap that he is not deserving of a cost-of-living increase? I would also like to know how a U.S. Senator can tell a veteran of World War II suffering pain in his back due to gunshot wounds, that his cost-of-living increase would not be paid this year because the President needed an additional $700 million cut from the budget, despite the fact that his budget was $100 billion in the red to begin with. Fortunately, conference meetings on the first budget resolution resulted in a reversal of this irresponsible action and Senate conferees agreed to restore the majority of these reductions.

Through the adept leadership of the chairman of the House Veterans Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY, the battle for a cost-of-living increase for disabled veterans has been won for this year, but it is obvious that this will not end the administration's unparalled assault on veterans benefits and services.

There is another provision in this legislation which I also feel very strongly about. Due to an unusual anomaly in title 38, members of the Reserved Officers Training Corps—(ROTC)—who may be injured while en route to or at summer camp active duty training are not eligible for VA compensation or medical benefits. Since current law would pay death benefits to an individual's widow should he be killed, it is only fair that this same individual should not be discriminated against simply because he had the good fortune to survive such an accident, albeit in a battered condition.

An individual in my district, Richard Oeschley, suffered grievious injuries after an auto accident en route to summer camp training several years ago. Rich, blinded from his accident, has since suffered from epilepsy and spinal meningitis, both of which doctors attribute to the injuries suffered in the original accident. Ironically, Rich has been volunteering his services to the Veterans' Administration hospital in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., for a number of months, yet receives no VA benefits whatsoever as a result of his accident. Title III of H.R. 6782 will rectify this inequity and allow a small number of deserving individuals to receive assistance they otherwise would not qualify for.

It is always an honor for me to support legislation which reaffirms our Nation's commitment to its veterans and I am especially pleased that in this difficult era of a shrinking Federal budget and changed priorities, we are still able to afford disabled veterans and survivors of veterans killed in action their due.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6782.

This bill again gives emphasis to the longstanding tradition of the Congress to give the very highest priority to benefits for service-connected disabled veterans of our armed services, their dependents, and their survivors. By increasing compensation payments by 7.4 percent effective October 1, 1982, we require that such payments stay in step with increases in the Consumer Price Index. The entire Congress has long been part of this good and necessary effort and I urge the Congress to again respond today in an affirmative way by support of this bill.

This latest compensation increase is involved with approximately $700 million. The proposal for such an increase is contained in the President's 1983 budget recommendations and funds for it are contained in the first concurrent budget resolution. The bill has the bipartisan endorsement of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6782, in addition to a compensation increase, contains a number of other features which I fully support. All of these have been explained by either our chairman, the distinguished member from Mississippi, the Honorable SONNY MONTGOMERY, or by our distinguished colleague from Ohio, Mr. APPLEGATE, who is the new chairman of our Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, and Insurance. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would want the record to show that Mr. APPLEGATE has taken over the reins of that subcommittee in exemplary fashion and all of us on the committee expect good things from him.

Mr. Speaker, a new member of our committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) has also provided excellent leadership on this bill. H.R. 6782 provides for increased compensation for a limited number of service-connected blind veterans. These very severely disabled veterans deserve our very special attention and Mr. SMITH has pointed out two specific areas where improvements can be made and ought to be made. He and those who worked with him on this aspect of the bill are to be commended.

Mr. Speaker, one section of this bill concerns reinstatement of the $300 burial allowance for certain cases where bodies of honorably discharged wartime veterans have not been buried because the bodies are unclaimed. Press stories generated by uninformed persons or misguided persons have greatly overplayed this situation. Nevertheless, there have been a very few instances where bodies have been unclaimed and where equity would suggest the Federal Government has a responsibility. This bill corrects this situation and will go a long way in preventing future incidents which give rise to unfounded or inaccurate stories. It will hopefully prevent the possible burial of honorably discharged veterans in so-called potters fields.

Mr. Speaker, I have cosponsored the amendment by Congressman MARVIN LEATH with respect to contracting out of VA medical activities. I have done so because of a desire to be absolutely sure that quality of medical care does not suffer if contracting out occurs. There have been a number of suggestions that the entire idea of such contracts might injure the VA medical program. It is certain that the idea has caused great consternation all across the spectrum of the VA hospital system and its employees and its patients are very concerned.

VA currently spends $7.5 billion on its medical activity. Over $700 million of this amount is already contracted out. The difference is that the $700 million is what VA feels is either necessary or required to give the best in medical care. It is not an expenditure based on some magic formula established by those who have little experience in health care delivery.

It seems to me that advice of the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration is critical as decisions are made in regard to providing medical care to veterans. The Leath amendment assures that such advice will be sought and given. I think this is a fundamental necessity and so I supported Mr. LEATH'S proposal in committee and I cosponsored his bill in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, all of us want to do our part with respect to the first House concurrent budget resolution. That resolution called upon our Committee on Veterans' Affairs to find $77 million in reconciliation and to endorse a 0.5-percent user fee to provide some $90 million in increased revenue to the Treasury on GI loans for veterans. Our committee more than accomplished its task, and H.R. 6782 contains our recommendations. The distinguished chairman has already referred to them and I need not repeat what he has said. However, I do need to say that the entire committee cooperated and, in that regard, I want to give particular commendation to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER), and the gentlelady from Massachusetts (Mrs. HECKLER). Working cooperatively with the majority as they invariably do, they have come up not only with a good compensation bill but also a good source of recommendations with respect to other matters and with respect to reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to endorse and support H.R. 6782, and I congratulate our distinguished chairman for so expeditiously bringing this bill before the House.

□ 1300

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, and Insurance, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arkansas, the ranking minority member of the full committee very much for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in enthusiastic support of H.R. 6782, which has as its principal purpose the providing of a cost-of-living compensation increase for service-connected disabled veterans, their dependents, and survivors.

As has been mentioned, it represents a 7.4-percent increase in compensation, which is the same as the increase provided for social security recipients.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, on which I am proud to serve as the ranking minority member, and in which this bill originated, has always insisted that the first obligation of our Government in veterans' affairs is to assure a fair and adequate treatment for our service-connected disabled veterans. In doing this, I believe that we do reflect the will of Congress as expressed so many times over the years.

Mr. Speaker, this bill means the Veterans' Affairs Committee is the first committee of this House to be in full compliance with the reconciliation instructions contained in the first concurrent budget resolution. This has been no easy task. I want to add my own compliments to those of others who have spoken before me, to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY), the chairman of the full committee; the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT), the ranking minority member; and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. APPLEGATE). We have accomplished much since he has assumed his assignment in an orderly and expeditious manner, and I congratulate my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, for the way he has handled his new chairmanship

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill which deserves the support of the House. I urge its approval.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, before yielding time to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA) from the Budget Committee, I would like to say that the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA) certainly has been helpful to our committee, working out and bringing up this reconciliation as far as the veterans are concerned. I would like to go on record as thanking the gentleman for his guidance and help.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA).

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the first budget resolution that was approved by the Congress did provide reconciliation instructions to nine House committees involving $6 billion in outlay reductions and about $20 billion in revenue increases targeted for this year's reconciliation effort.

What the Veterans' Committee presents here is in response to its reconciliation instructions. I want to commend the chairman and all the members of the Veterans' Committee, both on the majority and on the minority side, for their responsiveness to the reconciliation instructions. The committee's targets were $77 million in outlays for 1983, $155 million for 1984, and $155 million in 1985. In each instance, the committee met and in some areas exceeded the savings targets that they were assigned.

There is precedence in the veterans' area for the Veterans' Committee proceeding with a separate package in reconciliation. In both 1980, as well as 1981, in reconciliation, reference was made to packages that were already passed by the Veterans' Committee and, indeed, signed into public law.

This is the first, of course, of a series of packages that will be coming to the floor on reconciliation.

I commend the Veterans' Committee for their quick responsiveness to their instructions, and I would urge Members to support passage of this bill.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Education, Training, and Employment, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Mrs. HECKLER).

Mrs. HECKLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I rise in strong support of H.R. 6782.

The House has before it today legislation benefiting the country's veterans—the servicemen and women who answered the call to national service. We cannot repay the sacrifices many of these veterans were called on to make in defense of freedom. But we can act to provide our veterans with appropriate disability allowances, medical care, and burial benefits.

H.R. 6782 authorizes a 7.4 percent across-the-board cost-of-living adjustment in the rates of disability compensation for disabled veterans and in the rates of indemnity compensation for survivors of deceased veterans. This increase will be given to any disabled veteran whether the disability is 10 or 100 percent.

Another important provision of H.R. 6782 is the prohibition it places on the Veterans' Administration from contracting out medical services unless it is determined that the service cannot be provided in-house or that the contracting out of such service will actually enhance the quality of medical care provided by the facility in question.

"Contracting out" is often a code word for providing veterans care at reduced cost. In fact, the cost savings are many times false economies involving a decline in the quality of the service provided. This is simply unacceptable.

Finally, H.R. 6782 reinstates the $300 non-service-connected burial allowance for veterans who die in a contract nursing home and also for veterans with insufficient estates to meet burial costs and whose bodies often remain unclaimed.

As a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I was embarrassed by the touching story of a man who pays for indigent veterans' burials. I am for the private sector contributing to social endeavors. But the burial of indigent veterans is a national responsibility. It is an obligation to be borne by all of us—not just by caring individuals at large.

H.R. 6782 is supported by the administration. Its cost has already been provided for in the budget.

I urge its passage.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILLIS).

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas, the ranking minority member of the committee, for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I too rise in strong support for this important legislation. The bill, as has already been pointed out, increases compensation for service-connected disabled veterans, their survivors, and dependents by 7.4 percent effective the first of October this year.

It also extends VA benefits to ROTC members if they sustain injury while in summer camp, while the current law provided for survivors only.

Compensation is increased for certain blinded veterans. This is done with no significant cost increases.

These important parts of the bill certainly have been highlighted by other speakers, together with many other important provisions in the legislation.

I think it is outstanding that we are able to do these things and yet be in compliance with the Budget Act. It shows, I think, and it leads the way in the House for other committees to set the tone of compliance in the field of rescission and yet do the job as far as the duty of the committee on behalf of the constituency they represent, in our case to the veterans and the service-connected veterans' dependents and spouses, and still comply with reasonable restraints of the Congress.

I certainly salute the chairman and all who have provided the leadership that has made this legislation possible.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to a member of our committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, before us today is a bill of major significance. In a short time we will vote on a measure that will affect millions of American veterans, their widows, and dependent survivors.

The Veterans Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits Amendments of 1982 will be welcomed by the 2,700,000 disabled veterans and their families who are receiving disability or survivors' benefits in our country.

Among the many other vital measures of this bill, it will provide for a 7.4-percent cost-of-living increase in compensation benefits to disabled veterans.

Most important, since compensation rate increases to offset inflation are not indexed by law, H.R. 6782 will reaffirm the highest priority to be placed on benefits and health care for our service-connected disabled.

As a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I am proud to support this measure and to have played a key role in its drafting.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6782 includes some important changes in the compensation rate schedule, title 38, section 314, for certain disabled blinded veterans.

I am very pleased that the major provisions of H.R. 6154 and H.R. 6155, which I introduced on April 22 of this year, were adopted and are now contained in the compensation bill before us today.

I want to thank the chairman of the Veterans' Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, and Insurance, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. APPLEGATE) and the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), as well as the chairman of the full Veterans' Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY), and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT) for their leadership on these bills.

I also want to thank my good friends, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SMITH), who were original cosponsors, and 32 other Members who cosponsored this legislation.

I want to note Mr. Speaker, when presented with the facts, these colleagues recognized that the compensation schedules for service-connected blinded veterans were inherently unfair and that my legislation was needed. My legislation—for the first time—reforms the rating schedule and eliminates two basic inequities that discriminate against blinded veterans.

The first provision, Mr. Speaker, section 202, recognizes the importance of light perception as an aspect of balance in compensation payments. It amends the code to equalize benefits for totally blinded veterans without light perception with those who have suffered the enucleation of the eyes or deformity or scarring of the eyes.

The inadequacy of the current rating schedule is such that it is possible for a veteran with scarring around his eyes to have light perception in one or both eyes, yet he would still be rated more disabled than a veteran with no light perception but who has retained his eyes with no deformity or scarring.

A member of the Blinded Veterans Association testified earlier this year about the importance of light perception before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee:

> When I was first blinded, I was rated a paragraph N because I had one eye enucleated and the other eye was scarred. . . . Yet, I had some ability to perceive changes in light. Three years later when I lost that ability, I finally realized that I had been using that light perception for mobility purposes. So, the individual who at that time was totally blind, having no light perception, was rated below myself.

Also, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6782 provides a veteran who is totally blind in both eyes, having no light perception, will be rated equally to a veteran with anatomical loss of the eyes or with eyes having deformity or scarring. In both instances, veterans are equally without vision, yet the latter case currently is rated more disabled than the former. This bill would change that basic discrimination.

The second change this bill would make in the rating schedule will amend the schedule to provide additional compensation for blinded veterans who also have incurred the loss of or the loss of the use of one hand or one foot. This disability, in combination with blindness, deprives the veteran of essential contact with the environment. Therefore, the veteran is placed in a more debilitating position than if he had the use of both hands and both feet.

The current compensation schedule is deficient because it fails to recognize the effects of such disabilities on blinded veterans.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6782 would amend the rating schedule to recognize the loss of tactile sense resulting from the use of an artificial hand or foot as considerably more handicapping when it occurs in combination with blindness. This inequity is corrected by moving such service-connected veterans to the next higher intermediate rate on the schedule.

My provisions—known to members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee as the "Smith accords"—are a vital aspect of the veterans compensation bill. If enacted, this legislation will further recognize the unique nature of blindness as a disability—that there are varied types and degrees of blindness among veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I do not need to stress the great sense of commitment this Nation has to its service-connected disabled veterans. H.R. 6782, by providing for a cost-of-living increase of 7.4 percent for the disabled veteran, by increasing compensation for many disabled blinded veterans, represents the continued commitment we have to giving veterans and their dependents their just due.

I strongly support the Veterans' Disability Compensation and Survivors' Act, and I ask that all my colleagues vote favorably on this legislation.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. NAPIER), a member of our committee.

Mr. NAPIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation as it is a piece of legislation that restates once again the commitment of the American people to the service-connected disabled veterans. This increase goes into effect with an understanding that we meet the requirements of the Budget Act and that this Nation stands by that commitment.

I commend the other members of our committee, particularly the chairman and ranking member of the full committee and subcommittee for the outstanding job that they did in seeing that this legislation was brought to the floor.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the veterans' organizations realize that there has to be some slowdown in Government spending and they realize that reconciliation is necessary.

I think I can safely say that the veterans' organizations feel what this committee has done is fair.

Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent bill. It will provide assistance to 2,275,719 service-connected disabled veterans and 321,332 survivors of those who died of service-connected disabilities.

The measure will put the committee in compliance with the reconciliation instructions contained in the budget resolution. For the record, it should be stated that if this bill is enacted, in 1983 there will be savings of approximately $170 million in budget authority and outlays for function 700. Savings in 1984 would exceed $185 million, and more than $195 million in 1985.

This is a good bill, Mr. Speaker, and I urge my colleagues to approve it.

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6782, the Veterans Disability Compensation and Survivors Benefits Amendments Act of 1982, which would increase by 7.4 percent the amount of disability compensation for disabled veterans and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses and children of veterans. It also introduces cost-saving provisions among other purposes.

This realistic legislation seeks to remedy the erosion caused by the rate of inflation to benefits currently being received by our most deserving citizens, the service-connected veterans and survivors to veterans that have died of service related causes. These faithful citizens, for our tranquillity and liberty, have left behind in the battlefield part if not all of their productivity and capability to provide for their families and for themselves. Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly endorse this legislation because it recognizes our Nation's primary obligation to our service-connected disabled veterans who are still suffering in their bodies and flesh the horrors of war. This human contribution surpasses any monetary ratification and it is only fair play that we take care of them and their families' needs inasmuch as they took care of the Nation's needs and best interests at times of adversity, so gallantly and proudly.

The House Committee on Veterans' Affairs should be commended for so wisely sorting out cost saving measures and reporting a bill that is in line with our Nation's pledge to economic austerity but does not disregard the needs of our men and women and their families who so courageously defended our ideals of democracy and freedom. I must add that if the veterans class is to be regarded as a "sacred cow" here in Congress it is not due to a political invention but on the contrary, it is an earned recognition for their efforts and invaluable services to our country for which we owe an enormous debt.

I trust that in the future Congress will be very careful in asking from the Veterans' Administration additional savings which could result in the curtailing of the well-deserved benefits our veterans are receiving. Veterans and especially disabled veterans have a big enough burden to carry for us to try to balance the budget at their expense.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the passage of this legislation.●

● Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6782, the Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits for Veterans Amendments of 1982.

Traditionally, Congress has increased veterans' compensation rates whenever there has been an appreciable increase in the cost of living index. H.R. 6782 authorizes a 7.4-percent cost of living adjustment in the rates of compensation for disabled veterans and for the survivors of deceased veterans.

It is the duty of this Congress, and future Congresses, to remember and honor those who have offered their lives for the defense of their country. I join the committee in supporting this COLA for veterans compensation. The President has recommended this increase, the committee has endorsed this increase, and all the Members of this body should support this COLA.

The contracting out of services by Veterans' Administration facilities has been an issue of much controversy. Last year this Congress passed veterans legislation that included a provision to prevent the VA from contracting out. Again, this year, H.R. 6782 prohibits the VA from contracting out medical services unless it determines that the service cannot be provided in-house or that contracting for the service will enhance the quality of medical care provided by the facility.

We must not jeopardize the quality of care offered to our veterans. H.R. 6782 assures the veterans using VA facilities that only the best care available will be provided.

H.R. 6782 provides for many other areas of care for and service to the veteran. It permits members of the Senior Reserve Officers Training Corps to become eligible for disability compensation if an injury or disease is incurred while in training. H.R. 6782 corrects some inequities in the compensation received by blinded veterans, reinstates the $300 non-service-connected burial allowance for veterans who die in a contract nursing home, or have an insufficient estate to cover the cost of burial.

H.R. 6782 is needed to preserve our commitment to veterans. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 6782.●

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side of the aisle, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6782, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO FILE PRIVILEGED REPORT

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a bill making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes.

Mr. PURSELL reserved all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXPORT TRADING COMPANY ACT OF 1981

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1799) entitled "The Export Trading Company Act of 1981," as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1799

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as "The Export Trading Company Act of 1982".

FINDINGS; DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) United States exports are responsible for creating and maintaining one out of every nine manufacturing jobs in the United States and for generating one out of every seven dollars of total United States goods produced;

(2) the rapidly growing service-related industries are vital to the well-being of the United States economy inasmuch as they create jobs for seven out of every ten Americans, provide 65 percent of the Nation's gross national product, and offer the greatest potential for significantly increased industrial trade involving finished products;

(3) trade deficits contribute to the decline of the dollar on international currency markets and have an inflationary impact on the United States economy;

(4) tens of thousands of small- and medium-sized United States businesses produce exportable goods or services but do not engage in exporting;

(5) export trade services in the United States are fragmented into a multitude of separate functions, and companies attempting to offer export trade services lack financial leverage to reach a significant number of potential United States exporters;

(6) the United States needs well-developed export trade intermediaries which can achieve economies of scale and acquire expertise enabling them to export goods and services profitably, at low per unit cost to producers;

(7) the development of export trading companies in the United States has been hampered by business attitudes and by Government regulations;

(8) those activities of State and local governmental authorities which initiate, facilitate, or expand exports of goods and services can be an important source for expansion of total United States exports, as well as for experimentation in the development of innovative export programs keyed to local, State, and regional economic needs;

(9) if United States trading companies are to be successful in promoting United States exports and in competing with foreign trading companies, they should be able to draw on the resources, expertise, and knowledge of the United States banking system, both in the United States and abroad; and

(10) the Department of Commerce is responsible for the development and promotion of United States exports, and especially for facilitating the export of finished products by United States manufacturers.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to increase United States exports of products and services by encouraging more efficient provision of export trade services to United States producers and suppliers, in particular by establishing an office within the Department of Commerce to promote the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies, by encouraging investment in export trading companies by certain banking institutions, and by modifying the application of the antitrust laws to certain export trade.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this section and sections 2 and 4 of this Act—

(1) the term "export trade" means trade or commerce in goods or services produced in the United States which are exported, or in the course of being exported, from the United States to any other country;

(2) the term "services" includes amusement, architectural, automatic data processing, business, communications, consulting, engineering, financial, insurance, legal, management, repair, training, and transportation services;

(3) the term "export trade services" includes international market research, advertising, marketing, insurance, legal assistance, transportation, including trade documentation and freight forwarding, communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, and financing, when provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States;

(4) the term "export trading company" means any person, corporation, partnership, association, or similar organization, which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated principally for purposes of—

(A) exporting goods or services producing in the United States; or

(B) facilitating the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services;

(5) the term "export trade association" means an association engaged solely in export trade which is exempt from the antitrust laws under the Webb-Pomerene Act;

(6) the term "State" means any of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; and

(7) the term "United States" means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

OFFICE OF EXPORT TRADE IN DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Commerce shall establish within the Department of Commerce an office to promote and encourage to the greatest extent feasible the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies. Such office shall provide information and advice to interested persons and shall provide a referral service to facilitate contact between producers and exportable goods and services and firms offering export trade services.

TITLE I—EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

INVESTMENTS IN EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

SEC. 101. (a) Section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (12)(B), by striking out "or" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (13), by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (13) the following:

"(14) shares of any company which is an export trading company whose acquisition (including each acquisition of shares) or formation by a bank holding company has been approved by the Board, except that such investments, whether direct or indirect, in such shares shall not exceed 5 percent of the bank holding company's consolidated capital and surplus. No approval may be granted by the Board under this paragraph unless the Board has taken into consideration the financial and managerial resources, competitive situation, and future prospects of the bank holding company and the export trading company involved and has imposed such restrictions, by regulation or otherwise, as the Board deems necessary to prevent conflicts of interest, unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, and decreased or unfair competition. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any case in which a bank holding company invests in an export trading company, such bank holding company shall be deemed to be a member bank, with respect to such export trading company, for purposes of section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act, and such export trading company shall be deemed to be an affiliate for purposes of such section, except that amounts invested pursuant to the first sentence of this paragraph shall not apply with respect to the limitations imposed under section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'export trading company' means a company which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated principally for purposes of exporting goods or services produced in the United States or which facilitates the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services. For purposes of this paragraph, the term bank 'export trading services' includes consulting, international market research, advertising, marketing, product research and design, legal assistance, transportation, including trade documentation and freight forwarding, communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, and financing, when provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States. For purposes of this paragraph, an export trading company (A) may engage in or hold shares of a company engaged in the business of underwriting, selling, or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that its bank holding company investor may do so under applicable Federal and State banking law and regulations, and (B) may not engage in manufacturing or agricultural production activities. The name of the export trading company involved shall not be similar in any respect to the name of the bank holding company which owns any of its voting stock or other evidences of ownership.".

(b) Section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 611 et seq.) is amended—

(1) in the first paragraph of subsection (c), by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(2) by inserting after the first paragraph of subsection (c) the following:

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with the approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, a corporation organized under this section may purchase and hold stock or other certificates of ownership in any other corporation which is an export trading company. No approval may be granted by the Board under this paragraph unless the Board has taken into consideration the financial and managerial resources, competitive situation, and future prospects of the corporations involved and has imposed such restrictions, by regulation or otherwise, as the Board deems necessary to prevent conflicts of interest, unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, and decreased or unfair competition. No corporation organized under this section shall invest in such export trading companies in an amount in excess of 25 percent of its own capital and surplus. The second proviso of paragraph (1) shall apply to any corporation referred to in this paragraph.

"(B) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any case in which a corporation organized under this section purchases or holds stock or other certificates of ownership in any other corporation which is an export trading company, such acquiring corporation, or any bank or banking institution which purchases or holds stock or other certificates of ownership in such acquiring corporation, shall be deemed to be a member bank, with respect to such export trading company, for purposes of section 23A of this Act, and such export trading company shall be deemed to be an affiliate for purposes of such section, except that amounts invested pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to the limitations imposed under section 23A of this Act.

"(C) For purposes of this section—

"(i) the term 'export trading company' means a company which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated principally for purposes of exporting goods or services produced in the United States or which facilitates the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services; and

"(ii) the term 'export trade services' includes consulting, international market research, advertising, marketing, product research and design, legal assistance, transportation, including trade documentation and freight forwarding, communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, and financing, when provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States.

"(D) For purposes of this subsection, an export trading company—

"(i) may engage in or hold shares of a company engaged in the business of underwriting, selling, or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that the corporation which is organized under this section and which invests in the company defined in this clause may do so under applicable Federal and State banking law and regulations; and

"(ii) may not engage in manufacturing or agricultural production activities.

"(E) The name of the export trading company involved shall not be similar in any respect to the name of the corporation organized under this section which owns any of its voting stock or other evidences of ownership.".

TITLE II—EXPORT TRADE CERTIFICATES OF REVIEW

EXPORT TRADE PROMOTION DUTIES OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

SEC. 201. To promote and encourage export trade, the Attorney General may issue certificates of review. The Secretary of Commerce, in carrying out his responsibilities to promote the export of goods and services of the United States, may advise and assist persons with respect to applying for certificates of review.

APPLICATION FOR ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE OF REVIEW

SEC. 202. (a) To request the issuance of a certificate of review, a person shall submit to the Secretary of Commerce or the Attorney General a written application which—

(1) specifies conduct limited to export trade, and

(2) is in form and contains any information, including information pertaining to the overall market in which the applicant operates, required by rule issued under section 211.

Each application received by the Secretary of Commerce shall be forwarded, not later than 7 days after receipt, to the Attorney General.

(b)(1) With respect to each application submitted under subsection (a), the Attorney General shall publish in the Federal Register notice that a certificate of review has been requested, the identity of each person requesting the certificate, and a description of the conduct with respect to which the certificate is requested. The notice shall be so published promptly, but not later than 10 days, after the application is received by the Attorney General.

(2) The Attorney General may not issue the certificate until the expiration of the 30-day period beginning on the date the application is received by the Attorney General.

ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 203. (a) The Attorney General shall issue a certificate of review to an applicant for the certificate if the application for the certificate satisfies the requirements of section 202, unless the Attorney General determines under subsection (b) that the conduct specified in the applicaiton is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the Attorney General receives an application under section 202, the Attorney General shall determine whether the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, except that if before the expiration of the 60-day period the Attorney General requests that the applicant submit additional information, the Attorney General shall make the determination not later than the expiration of the 60-day period, or of the 30-day period beginning on the date the additional information is submitted, whichever period ends later.

(2) Unless the Attorney General determines that the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall immediately issue a certificate of review to the applicant. If the Attorney General determines that the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall promptly transmit to the applicant a statement of the determination and the reasons in support of the determination.

(c) If the Attorney General denies an application for the issuance of a certificate of review and thereafter receives from the applicant a request for the return of all documents submitted by the applicant in connection with the issuance of the certificate, the Attorney General shall return to the applicant, not later than 30 days after receiving the request, the documents and all copies of the documents available to the Attorney General, except to the extent that the information contained in a document has been made available to the public.

(d) The Attorney General shall specify in each certificate of review issued under this section—

(1) the conduct, including activities and methods of operation, to which the certificate applies,

(2) the person to whom the certificate of review is issued, and

(3) any terms and conditions applicable to the conduct.

(e) A certificate of review obtained by fraud is void ab initio.

REPORTING REQUIREMENT; AMENDMENT OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 204. (a) Any person who receives a certificate of review—

(1) shall promptly report to the Attorney General any change relevant to the matters specified under section 203(d) in the certificate, and

(2) may submit to the Attorney General an application to amend the certificate to reflect the fact or effect of the change on the conduct specified in the certificate.

(b) For purposes of section 202 and section 203, an application for an amendment to a certificate of review shall be deemed to be an application for the issuance of a certificate of review, except that the effective date of the amendment shall be the date on which the application for the amendment is submitted to the Attorney General.

MODIFICATION OR REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 205. (a) If at any time the Attorney General determines that the conduct engaged in under a certificate of review violates or is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall give written notice of the determination to the person to whom the certificate was issued. The notice shall include a statement of the reasons in support of the determination. In the 30-day period beginning 30 days after the notice is given, the Attorney General shall modify or revoke the certificate, as may be appropriate.

(b) The person to whom the affected certificate was issued may bring an action in any appropriate district court of the United States to set aside the determination made under subsection (a) on the ground that the determination is erroneous.

JUDICIAL REVIEW; ADMISSIBILITY

SEC. 206. (a) Except as provided in section 205(b), no determination made by the Attorney General with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be subject to judicial review.

(b) No determination made by the Attorney General with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be admissable in evidence in any administrative or judicial proceeding in support of any claim under the antitrust laws.

PROTECTION CONFERRED BY CERTIFICATE OF REVIEW

SEC. 207. (a) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be subject to a criminal action for a violation of the antitrust laws or a violation of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(b) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable for damages in a civil action brought by the Attorney General for a violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(c)(1) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable for damages exceeding actual damages, the loss of interest on actual damages, and the cost of suit (including a reasonable attorney's fee) for a violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(2) If, with respect to any claim under section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15) brought against the person, the court finds that—

(A) the conduct alleged to violate the antitrust laws does not violate the antitrust laws,

(B) the conduct is conduct specified in a certificate of review, and

(C) the certificate of review was in effect at the time the conduct occurred, the court shall award to the person against whom the claim is brought the cost of suit attributable to defending against the claim (including a reasonable attorney's fee).

(d) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable under section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 26), or any State antitrust law similar to such section, with respect to threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the threatened loss or damage arises from conduct specified in the certificate of review and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

SEC. 208. Except as provided in section 207(d), a certificate of review shall have no legal effect on the authority of a court to grant equitable relief in an action for a violation of the antitrust laws brought against the person to whom the certificate is issued. In granting the relief, the court shall have jurisdiction to modify or revoke the certificate of review, as may be appropriate.

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

SEC. 209. (a) Information submitted by any person in connection with the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no officer or employee of the United States shall disclose commercial or financial information submitted in connection with the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review if the information is privileged or confidential and if disclosure of the information would cause harm to the person who submitted the information.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to information disclosed—

(A) upon a request made by the Congress or any committee of the Congress,

(B) in a judicial or administrative proceeding,

(C) with the consent of the person who submitted the information,

(D) in the course of making a determination with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review, if the Attorney General deems disclosure of the information to be necessary in connection with making the determination,

(E) in accordance with any requirement imposed by a statute of the United States, or

(F) in accordance with any rule issued under section 211 permitting the disclosure of the information to an agency of the United States or of a State on the condition that the agency will disclose the information only under the circumstances specified in subparagraphs (A) through (E).

DESCRIPTIVE GUIDELINES

SEC. 210. (a) To promote greater certainty regarding the application of the antitrust laws to export trade, the Attorney General may issue guidelines—

(1) describing specific types of conduct with respect to which the Attorney General has made, or would make, determinations under section 203 and section 205, and

(2) summarizing the factual and legal bases in support of the determinations.

(b) Section 553 of title 5, United States Code, shall not apply to the issuance of guidelines under subsection (a).

ISSUANCE OF RULES

SEC. 211. Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall issue rules to carry out this title.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 212. For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "antitrust laws" shall have the meaning given it in subsection (a) of the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12(a)), except that the term shall include section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45) to the extent that section 5 applies to unfair methods of competition,

(2) the term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States or his designee,

(3) the term "certificate of review" means a certificate issued by the Attorney General under section 203,

(4) the term "export trade" means the export of goods or services from the United States to foreign nations, and

(5) the term "State" shall have the meaning given it in section 4G of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15 g).

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 213. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this title shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Section 202 and section 203 shall take effect 90 days after the effective date of the rules first issued under section 211.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1799 has been brought to the floor with th concerted efforts of a number of Members of the House, and with the efforts of three committees.

On behalf of Chairman ZABLOCKI and myself, I would like to pay particular tribute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER), the original sponsor of this resolution, who has been an inspiration throughout and has been determined to bring this legislation to enactment.

The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary (Mr. RODINO), and his ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY), have been most cooperative in helping to move the legislation and they have reported the antitrust title, which is title II of H.R. 1799, which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will explain a little later. That is part of the motion, and the version of title II as amended by the Judiciary Committee will be passed if the House agrees to the motion.

In addition to the reporting the antitrust title of H.R. 1799, the Committee on the Judiciary has reported companion legislation which makes an important contribution to the efforts to facilitate the formation of export trade associations. That is H.R. 5235, but that will not be before the House today.

The third portion of the package rested with the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. That is represented by title I of H.R. 1799. The provisions of title I as they appear in the motion that we are making have been amended in a separate bill, H.R. 6016, by the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, as will be explained when that bill comes before the House immediately following this one.

The differences will be resolved eventually in the motion to go to conference. That motion will be to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 734, and substitute the language of the bill brought to the floor by the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, and the first sections of title II of H.R. 1799.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is but one of a number of measures needed to enhance the competitiveness of U.S. goods and services in export markets and thereby to strengthen the economy and preserve American jobs. It would remove some of the obstacles to trading company formation and operations in the United States. It would do that by providing for a central office in the Commerce Department charged with facilitating the activities of trading companies and it would provide, under title II, somewhat greater assurance of exemption from antitrust restrictions to the export activities of trading companies.

It would also, under title I by the Banking Committee, permit certain banking institutions to invest in trading companies, providing greater access to financing, which is such an important and scarce ingredient in successful trading company operations. As the Members can see, the bills being brought to them today are the product of several committees. They are not entirely satisfactory to all of us, but such compromises never are. I do hope that some of the provisions of title I and title II can be considered further, and perhaps modified, in the course of the conference.

I believe, for example, that the antitrust benefits of Webb-Pomerene Act coverage should be accorded to exporters of services as well as the exporters of goods. That is not included in H.R. 1799 as amended by the Judiciary Committee. I am hopeful that provision can be reviewed in conference and possibly restored to this bill with the support of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Likewise, I believe it is crucial that, in providing for investment by bank holding companies in export trading companies with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, we not impose new restrictions on the operations of export trading companies which would reduce their export effectiveness. That would be strengthening them with one hand and weakening them with the other.

Nothing in current laws prohibits the formation and operation of trading companies which specialize in marketing U.S. goods and services abroad. Indeed there are hundreds of such companies operating with varying degrees of success in the United States today. Many of them are extremely effective in penetrating foreign markets with appropriate U.S. goods and services and producing sales that probably would otherwise go to companies from other nations.

International trading, however, is a tough business. It requires a thorough knowledge of both the United States and foreign markets, and the many complexities of international trade, finance, shipping, and other trade services. It requires capital. It requires, most of all, good salesmanship and an ability to take risks that other companies might not take.

The Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, which I have the honor to chair, held extensive hearings on this and predecessor legislation in both the current Congress and in the 95th Congress. We heard testimony from a wide range of public and private witnesses, including many trading companies. Members of the subcommittee and the subcommittee staff also have talked informally with international traders and trading company officials. On the basis of this extensive consultation, I feel confident that this is useful legislation which will be helpful to U.S. export efforts without detracting from important antitrust and banking practices and principles.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I want particularly to commend the efforts of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER), a member of the subcommittee, for his patient yet persistent efforts on behalf of this legislation. He was the leading sponsor of similar legislation in the last Congress, which was reported favorably by the Committee on Foreign Affairs but never reached the floor because other committees of jurisdiction had not completed action. He reintroduced the legislation early in this Congress, and has worked tirelessly to see that meaningful export trading company legislation reached the House floor. No Member of this House has been more diligent on behalf of this legislation than the gentleman from Washington, and I commend him for his authorship of H.R. 1799 and for the broader role he has played in the effort to make trading companies a more effective and vital part of the U.S. export sector. His devotion to jobs through exports is well known from his leadership of the House Export Task Force, and enactment by the Congress of this export trading company legislation is but one outcome of the attention to the problems of the export sector which the task force has focused under his leadership.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this bill should not be regarded as a panacea for all of our economic problems. I feel that it will help reduce our alarming export trade deficit, but it will not eliminate that deficit. The causes of the deficit are more fundamental than export trading companies. The deficit is largely a function of the productivity of the U.S. economy and the value of foreign currencies in relation to the dollar, which will have to be addressed in other ways, legislative and otherwise. Nor will this legislation put every American back to work, although I believe it will produce and restore some jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is constructive legislation which deserves the support of the House. It has the support of the current administration, just as it was supported by the previous administration. I am sure all of the committees of the House which have taken part in considering it will conduct careful oversight to determine its effects after it has been enacted. Hopefully, the spotlight that this legislation has put on export trading companies will make American businesses and business officials more willing to use trading companies as intermediaries to increase their export sales. Many American companies have either ignored foreign markets or tried to do their own export marketing without the expertise and experience and contacts that a good trading company can bring to the export effort. I hope this legislation, if it does nothing else, will reverse that attitude and help to establish trading companies as respectable and necessary participants in the national economy, and give them the standing they deserve both with the Federal Government and with the broader U.S. business community. It has become a cliche that the Europeans and Japanese have used export trading companies to their advantage to capture a larger share of international markets. This legislation does not purport to replicate Japanese trading companies in the United States. That is impractical and probably undesirable. But it is time we recognize export trading companies for the important force they are and can be in the difficult business of exporting, and that we try to remove some of the unnecessary obstacles they face in competing for international business on behalf of U.S. producers. H.R. 1799 goes a long way in that direction. It is about time that we enact this kind of legislation, before more of our markets and jobs are lost. I commend all of the committees and Members who have sponsored and supported this legislation, and I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1799, I want to congratulate the administration, and particularly Secretary of Commerce Mac Baldrige, for their tireless efforts in promoting the export trading company concept.

The Members of this House are fully aware, I am sure, that ETC legislation has been the subject of extensive hearings in three committees in the House over a period, in some cases, of several years. The other body passed legislation during both the 96th Congress and the 1st session of the 97th Congress, and only now have we finally reached the floor with our own export trading company bill. It is long overdue, but we can be thankful that it is finally here.

I believe H.R. 1799 represents a responsible approach to helping improve America's export capability and thereby improving our serious balance-of-trade deficit. By promoting the establishment of export trading companies, H.R. 1799 should prove to be particularly beneficial for small- and medium-sized businesses that do not have the experience or resources to attempt export trade on their own. The bill also establishes a procedure for the Attorney General to issue certificates of review indicating the ETC would not be in violation of antitrust laws. The certification procedure developed by H.R. 1799 would provide greater certainty for export trading companies' operations.

It was this lack of certainty in the Webb-Promerene Act that kept that law from serving as a greater stimulus to export trade. By correcting the deficiencies of that law and adding "services" to the accepted list of activities that can be the basis for forming ETC's, H.R. 1799 goes a long way toward meeting the challenge of the Japanese and European trading company competitors.

The administration strongly supports this bill and the concept of export trading companies. As Secretary Baldrige says:

Export trading company legislation is an important step in mobilizing our untapped export resources. The risks and costs involved in marketing products overseas, coupled with a lack of knowledge of foreign markets and of the cultural complexities of an unfamiliar society, deter small and even medium-sized companies from attempting to export their goods. The existence of ETC's who specialize in exporting, who can assume the risks, who have the financial capability and the legal and technical expertise to penetrate foreign markets, will permit these small and medium-sized firms to improve greatly their export performance.

Another important feature of H.R. 1799 is the reference to the role of States in initiating, promoting, and expanding exports in their own efforts to improve export trade. Certainly, in the case of California, the State has been a leader in shaping export policy that deals efficiently with trade and services with its neighbors to the South and in the Pacific basin.

I strongly support the provisions of H.R. 1799 designed to promote the development of new export trading companies dealing in goods and services. I urge my colleagues to give their full support to this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BONKER).

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the export trading company is an issue whose time has come. I first introduced this bill in the last session of Congress, and reintroduced it in this session. Thanks largely to the leadership efforts of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM), whose retirement will be greatly noticed in the House and on this Foreign Affairs Committee; and the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee (Mr RODINO), who has carefully crafted the antitrust provisions, do we have this bill before us today.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has traditionally relied on a growing domestic economy to meet our growth needs, but today we find ourselves in a fiercely competitive world environment, where Japan alone has challenged U.S. preeminence in a number of areas. With respect to overall trade policy, the United States continues to be the number one exporter, but the fact of the matter is that we are rapidly losing our place in the world market. This is dramatized when our share in the market drops from 18.2 percent in 1960 to 12.9 percent in 1981. Measured by GNP, the United States is rapidly dropping behind other industrialized countries.

The fact is, the United States will not experience economic recovery at home until we realize our full potential on the world market. In the Northwest, we find our timber-based economy is no longer sufficient to meet our growth needs. Indeed, we are experiencing economic recession because we have not found new outlets for our traditional markets. But, when one considers in the Northwest our vast natural resources, the manufacturing capability, the excellent port facilities and our proximity to the Pacific Rim countries, we have tremendous potential in the world market, and if we effectively compete in that market, we can experience economic revival in the Northwest.

Exports mean jobs. That was the theme of the Department of Commerce during World Trade Week, and when one looks at the fact that today exports account for over 3.5 million jobs, and the fact that every $1 billion in manufactured goods represents 31,000 new jobs, one can readily understand and appreciate the importance of export trade in terms of jobs created in this country.

Chase Econometric has estimated that the export trading company bill, if enacted, will create anywhere between 320,000 and 600,000 jobs in this country, and it will increase the GNP by $27 to $35 billion, and reduce the Federal deficit by $11 to $22 billion.

The export trading company bill is the top priority trade issue for many business organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce. It is a top prioritiy issue for this administration. The President's Export Council has rated it No. 1, and the Export Task Force, which I chair, has listed it as a very important issue.

The export trading company bill will benefit primarily the small- and medium-sized firms that have the capability but lack the facility and resources to get into the world market. It has been estimated by the Department of Commerce that there are about 20,000 medium-sized firms that have the capability and have the products to compete in the world market, but lack the opportunity to do so. Why? Because they are inhibited by at least three reasons:

First, they lack the financial capital to get into the export market. This bill will allow participation by the banks in the formation of ETC's, and provide essential financial capital to start up and operate export trading companies.

Second, antitrust provisions have served as an inhibiting factor. Through a certification procedure, provided for in the bill, which the Department of Justice will review and approve, ETC's will enjoy immunity from antitrust laws. Largely through the work of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I think we have overcome that hurdle and removed the uncertainty that now plagues companies that come together for that purpose.

Lastly, we need to raise the trade consciousness of many businessmen who want to get into the market but lack the imagination. The Department of Commerce is going on a nationwide campaign to educate businessmen of their potential and capabilities to get into the export market. Mr. Speaker, this legislation and this legislation alone addresses all three of those issues.

□ 1330

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that if we are going to have economic recovery in this country, we have got to realize our true potential in the world market. All of the reports indicate that there is a very attractive market out there, and that we have the manufacturing capability to compete in that market. Passage of this bill today makes that potential a reality.

Mr. Speaker, I have letters that I wish to have inserted in the RECORD, from the Chamber of Commerce, Trade Net, and other trade organizations supporting this legislation, plus a summary of the bill.

Those materials are as follows:

H.R. 1799—THE EXPORT TRADING COMPANY ACT OF 1981

CHRONOLOGY OF LEGISLATION

On the basis of hearings in the 96th Congress, the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported favorably legislation to encourage the formation and operation of export trading companies and associations (H.R. 7230, Export Trading Company Act of 1980, introduced by Mr. Bonker of Washington, and others, House Report 96-1151), which was similar to H.R. 1799. Two other committees of the House to which that and similar legislation was referred jointly failed to complete action, however, and the 96th Congress adjourned without having an opportunity to consider H.R. 7230.

H.R. 1799 was introduced by Mr. Bonker, a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and other Members, on February 6, 1981, and was subsequently referred to the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade. Following several subcommittee hearings on it and related bills, the subcommittee on March 29, 1982, marked up H.R. 1799 and reported it favorably to the full Committee on Foreign Affairs with several amendments.

The full Committee on Foreign Affairs considered the subcommittee's recommendations on H.R. 1799 on April 29, 1982, and ordered the bill favorably reported to the House.

The Judiciary Committee favorably reported H.R. 1799 (House Report 97-637, Pt. II, to be filed July 27). The Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee did not act on H.R. 1799, but did report a bill (H.R.

6016) whose provisions are almost identical to the banking provisions of H.R. 1799.

NEED FOR THE LEGISLATION

Lack of operating capital and financing is the major obstacle to expanded sales faced by American trading companies. Few U.S.-based trading companies are publicly traded corporations. Most are privately held, inhibiting their ability to raise capital through issuance of stock or other debentures. Few have significant assets except for accounts receivable, against which most U.S. banks have been traditionally reluctant to grant loans. Not only are trading companies generally among the most asset-poor firms competing for bank loans, their business success depends upon their ability to penetrate often poorly understood foreign markets and to take other risks, such as operating on the basis of oral rather than written contracts, and sales agreements. The successful trading company turns such risks into profits by experience and intimate knowledge of its markets and customers.

Such intangibles, however, rarely meet the requirements of bank lending officers who must justify their loans to cautious superiors and regulatory agencies. Trading companies, therefore, typically command the lowest loan ratings of any of the categories of businesses seeking bank loans. Most trading company officials who testified before or otherwise consulted with the committee indicated that they are able to borrow only on their personal lines of credit, or against company reserves pledged as collateral. They were unanimous in citing this as the major constraint on their business, particularly when their foreign competitors have much greater access to short- and long-term financing.

Statutory provisions and government regulations that directly or indirectly discriminate against trading companies are a second obstacle to their increased effectiveness as U.S. exporters. The reluctance of banks to finance exports is itself a product of banking laws that place a high premium on cautious lending policies and impose strict separation between banks and commercial enterprises such as trading companies. In addition, the restrictions, complexity, and uncertainty of current antitrust laws inhibit producers of similar products and services from entering into cooperative arrangements for purposes of export marketing that could increases their exporting effectiveness.

As early as 1918, the Congress recognized the need to facilitiate the export of U.S. goods by exempting the export activities of firms from certain U.S. laws that would place them at a competitive disadvantage in foreign trade. In that year, the Congress passed the Webb-Pomerene Act permitting U.S. firms to form associations strictly for the purpose of exporting goods without the antitrust constraints applicable to domestic trade. In the 1930's there were as many as 57 Webb-Pomerene associations accounting for some 19 percent of total U.S. exports. By 1979 the number had declined to 33, accounting for less than 2 percent of U.S. exports. Antitrust exemptions under Webb-Pomerene are not available to exporters of services, currently one of the strongest U.S. export sectors, and many producers of goods regard Webb-Pomerene as providing insufficient protection from antitrust penalties.

No Federal agencies are explicitly charged with assisting trading companies and assuring that Federal regulations do not unnecessarily hamper trading companies. In fact, some Federal regulations and practices have just such an effect. For example, Commerce Department rules governing U.S.-sponsored international trade fairs discourage exhibitors from displaying more than one line of merchandise per booth. Export trading companies, however, typically handle disparate lines of merchandise, and many are too small to be able to afford more than one booth. Such mundane government insensitivity to the needs of trading companies, while often inadvertent, is nonetheless damaging to their effectiveness as exporters.

The need for assistance to trading companies in these three areas—access to financing, assurance of antitrust exemption for specific export practices and activities, and designation of a federal agency responsible for trading companies—was the basis for the formulation of H.R. 1799.

THE POTENTIAL FOR EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

The last decade was a period of frustration and disappointment for the United States in the area of international trade. Our first trade deficit of the 20th Century occurred in 1971. While we have had a deficit nearly every year since, it is incorrect to place the blame solely on oil prices.

Many of our trading partners whose dependence on imported oil is greater than ours have consistently maintained a trade surplus while the U.S. was in deficit. Their success was due in part to an export consciousness, which has resulted in the displacement of American-made manufactured goods in world markets, including the largest single market—the United States.

The U.S. no longer can afford to ignore the value of export trade and the importance it plays in our domestic economy. During the last two decades, the U.S. share of world exports dropped from 18 percent in 1960 to 15.4 percent in 1970. It stood at 12 percent last year. Today, exports of goods account for only 8.2 percent of our gross national product, the lowest percentage of any industrialized nation in the world. While numbers vary according to the source the trend is as clear as it is alarming. Without a change, this trend could cost the United States hundreds of thousands of jobs, billions in economic activity, and the productivity boost that increased exports could generate for American industry.

The U.S. Government has not been as active in encouraging export trade or in providing assistance to the business community as have the governments of other nations. The American businessman perceives, and rightly so in many cases, that government regulations are impediments to international trade. These regulations can be ambiguous, confusing, and expensive. These self-imposed disincentives have served to deter many small- and medium-sized American companies from entering the international marketplace.

For years, our growing domestic market has satisfied the needs of the American businessman. He consequently has not had the need nor the desire to look into foreign markets that were often unreliable and risky, as well as politically and socially alien. Moreover, the American businessman lacked an expertise in conducting foreign sales—from locating the foreign buyer to packing, shipping, and completing export documentation.

Only 10 percent of the 250,000 manufacturing firms in the United States currently export. Fewer than one percent of these firms account for 80 percent of our exports. The Department of Commerce and others have estimated up to 20,000 U.S. manufacturers and agricultural producers offer goods and services which would be highly competitive abroad. Yet the small size and inexperience of these firms leave them ill-equipped to absorb the costs and risks involved in developing overseas markets.

The current, prolonged recession has been a shock to many American businessmen, who are beginning to realize that the domestic economy cannot expand indefinitely. Export Trading Companies could provide America with a new service-industry able to lead thousands of new firms into overseas markets.

A private study by Chase Econometrics has estimated that by 1985, Export Trading Companies would increase the gross national product by $27 to $55 billion, increase employment by 320,000 to 640,000 jobs, and reduce the Federal deficit by $11 to $22 billion.

THE FUNCTION OF EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

H.R. 1799 permits bank holding companies, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, to invest up to 5 percent of consolidated capital and surplus in an Export Trading Company. Extension of credit by a bank holding company to its ETC would be limited to 10 percent of the holding company's capital stock and surplus to any single trading company, and 20 percent of such stock and surplus to all trading companies. The bill also permits banking institutions organized under the Edge Act to invest up to 25 percent of capital and surplus, subject to the same requirements of Federal Reserve Board approval and limitations.

Title II of H.R. 1799, the antitrust provisions, provides limited protection from antitrust litigation. In 1918, Congress passed the Webb-Pomerene Act which was designed to allow U.S. companies to combine for exporting in ways that might otherwise have subjected them to antitrust liability. Webb-Pomerene exempts from the Sherman Antitrust Act any association which has been established "for the sole purpose of engaging in export trade," provided it does not lessen domestic competition. When the Act was passed, it was believed that export trade would be enhanced as small businesses would be able to share the costs and risks of exporting. The percentage of exports assisted by the approximately 30 existing Webb-Pomerene associations is currently less than 2 percent. It has been stated that the Act's lack of success is due to the fact that it does not extend its antitrust exemption to the service sector, and its statutory vagueness and uncertainty in interpretation and application create a potential threat of subsequent antitrust litigation.

As amended by the Judiciary Committee, H.R. 1799 provides for a certification procedure to be established within the Department of Justice. Upon review, the Justice Department may grant the trading company a certificate which provides protection against criminal and civil suits by the Government and substantial protection from private antitrust suits. I have included a section-by-section analysis which more fully explains the bill.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1—Short title

Section 1 provides that the act may be cited as the "Export Trading Company Act of 1982."

Section 2—Findings; declaration of purpose

Section 2 sets forth the findings of the Congress, including: that "exports are responsible for * * * one out of every nine manufacturing jobs * * * and one out of every seven dollars of total United States goods produced"; that service-related industries "offer the greatest potential for significantly increased industrial trade"; that export services in the United States are fragmented and the U.S. economy needs "well-developed export trade intermediaries"; that State and local governmental authorities "can be an important source for expansion of total United States exports"; and that U.S. trading companies "should be able to draw on the resources, expertise, and knowledge of the United States banking system."

The purpose of the legislation is to increase U.S. exports by establishing in the Commerce Department an office to promote export trading companies and export trade associations, by transferring to the Commerce Department responsibility for administering the Webb-Pomerene Act, by making that act applicable to the export of services as well as goods, and by otherwise encouraging more efficient export trade services.

Section 3—Definitions

"Export trade," "export trade services," "export trading company," "export trade associations," and "United States" are defined in section 3 of the bill. These definitions, however, apply only to sections 2 through 4 of the bill because Titles I and II (below) contain their own definitions, or employ definitions in existing statutes.

Section 4—Office of Export Trade in the Department of Commerce

Section four directs the Secretary of Commerce to establish within the Department of Commerce an office to promote and encourage formation of export trade associations and export trading companies.

TITLE I—EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

Title II amends the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 and the Federal Reserve Act to facilitate the financing of export trading companies.

Section 101(a) amends the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 to permit bank holding companies, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, to invest up to 5 percent of consolidated capital and surplus in an export trading company. In granting such approval, the Federal Reserve board is directed to consider the "financial and managerial resources, competitive situation, and future prospects" of the investing company and the export trading company, and may impose restrictions "to prevent conflicts of interest, unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, and decreased or unfair competition." Extension of credit by a bank holding company to its export trading companies would be limited to 10 percent of the holding company's capital stock and surplus to any single trading company, and 20 percent of such stock and surplus to all trading companies. Export trading companies could underwrite, sell, or distribute securities in the United States only to the extent their investing bank holding companies could legally do so, and could not engage in manufacturing or agricultural production, or use a name similar to a parent banking organization.

Subsection (b) amends section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act to permit banking institutions organized under the Edge Act to invest up to 25 percent of capital and surplus, subject to the same requirements of Federal Reserve Board approval and limitations as described for bank holding companies in subsection (a) above.

The amendments made by this title define "export trading company" as a company organized "principally" for the purpose of exporting, or facilitating the export, of U.S. goods and services.

TITLE II—ANTITRUST PROVISIONS

Title II substantially amends the Webb-Pomerene Act (the "Act") to expand the eligibility of export trading organizations for exemption from the antitrust laws, and to provide the Federal certification of such exemptions.

Section 201 amends the definition section of the Act to include definitions of export trade (which is defined to include the export of goods and services) and export trading companies, which will also be eligible for the antitrust exemptions under section 2 of the Act.

Section 202 amends section 2 of the Act to exempt from antitrust law restrictions the activities of export trading associations and export trading companies provided those activities are not in restraint of trade within the United States, do not restrain any domestic competitor, and do not substantially lessen competition within the United States, except to the extent such activities may have a "direct substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on trade or commerce within the United States." Such exception is to be specified in a certificate issued under section 4 of the Act.

Section 203 makes a technical amendment to section 3 of the Act.

Section 204 amends the Act to provide for procedures for the certification of export trade associations and export trading companies for the antitrust exemption provided in the Act. Applicants are required to submit information set forth in section 4 of the Act, including such information as the Secretary of Commerce (the "Secretary") considers necessary. The Secretary is required to issue a certificate within ninety (90) days after receiving an application, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission, specifying permissible export trade activities and methods, and any terms or conditions the Secretary considers necessary. Provision is made for expedited certification for temporary export trade activities and bidding or export sales deadlines. Certification decisions of the Secretary may be appealed under sections 556 and 557 of Title 5, United States Code (provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act). Provision is made for amendment of certificates on the basis of material changes affecting certified export trading companies and associations, and for modification of the activities of certified companies or associations and revocation of certificates by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing in accordance with Section 554 of Title 5, United States Code. The Attorney General and Federal Trade Commission are authorized to bring court actions to invalidate certifications 30 days after notice to the affected export trading association or export trading company, and no other person has standing to bring such actions.

Section 204 also amends the Act as follows: The Secretary is directed to issue proposed guidelines, within 90 days after enactment of the bill, for determining whether an export trade association or export trading company meets the requirements for certification under the Act. The guidelines are to be open for public comment for a period of 30 days prior to publication of final guidelines. Promulgation of these guidelines is exempt from the Administrative Procedure Act. Certified export trade associations and export trading companies are required to report to the Secretary annually on activities relevant to their certificates. Information submitted by export trade associations and export trading companies with respect to certification and in the required reports shall be confidential and exempt from disclosure (except for certain law enforcement procedures) to the extent the information deals with trade secrets or confidential business or financial information. The Secretary may require modification of the operations of a certified association or trading company to comply with the international obligations of the United States. The Secretary is directed to issue regulations to carry out the Act, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission.

Section 205 provides that export trade associations operating under the Webb-Pomerene Act immediately before the enactment of the bill may elect to continue to be governed by the Act as in existence prior to enactment, or by the Act as amended by the bill. If they choose the latter, they are certified automatically under the new provisions of the act upon filing the required applications for certification within 180 days after the date of enactment of the bill. Mr. Speaker, I am including letters from some of the interest groups, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Emergency Committee for American Trade, who have followed the progress of this legislation closely, and who are in support of our efforts.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D.C., July 26, 1982.

Hon. DON BONKER,
Chairman, House Export Task Force,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR DON: The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, an association of more than 250,000 members, respectfully requests that you urge all members of the House Export Task Force to support the export trading company (ETC) legislation when it comes to the House floor.

For more than three years, the Chamber has worked for passage of a bill that would promote and facilitate the formation of export trading companies—a private sector one-stop shop that could provide all of the services associated with exporting. This would be particularly beneficial to our small- and medium-sized business members. As one Chamber small businessman put it before the International Finance Subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee, ". . . if you want to encourage exports by smaller firms and reorientate us to thinking in world market terms, then this legislation is desirable and is perceived by businessmen like me as a good idea long overdue."

A clear antitrust picture with respect to export combinations, as the certification process in H.R. 1799 provides for, will contribute significantly to the development of ETCs. Participation in ETCs by bank holding companies and bankers' banks, as provided for in H.R. 6016, brings both international expertise and financial resources to these export combinations.

While we believe that there is some room for improvement in both bills, as well as in the Senate-passed version S. 734, the parameters of these three bills are such that the conference on the House and Senate versions should produce an excellent piece of legislation. The Chamber will share its recommendations with the conferees at the appropriate time.

Quick House action is now in order, so that the legislation can be finalized and companies can begin to take advantage of this beneficial export format. Your leadership, along with that of Reps. St Germain and Rodino, on this important legislation is greatly appreciated.

We hope that every member of the House Export Task Force will support the export trading company legislation when it comes to a floor vote.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL A. SAMUELS.

STATEMENT OF CALMAN J. COHEN, VICE PRESIDENT, EMERGENCY COMMITTEE FOR AMERICAN TRADE

The trading company legislation pending before the Congress is designed to promote U.S. export activity. U.S. business will be able under the legislation to learn in advance whether activities which they wish to undertake could lead to antitrust litigation.

The export trading companies themselves could provide to firms virtually all the services necessary to market and sell abroad, including the financing of export transactions.

Trading companies should enable many thousands of small- and medium-sized businesses to venture for the first time into the international trade arena, which otherwise would be too risky a proposition for any one of them individually. In part this will be the case because it will be the trading company—and not the small firms supplying the trading company—that will take the many risks associated with export.

Most importantly, in many developing regions of the world—where sales and distribution networks of U.S. firms are often rudimentary—export trading companies have major potential. Trading companies can take on and perform well the brokering role between U.S. producers and developing country purchasers for industrial and agricultural products that will be in increasing demand throught the developing world.

Your leadership, Congressman Bonker, on export trading company legislation, together with that of your colleagues, gives ECAT members hope that we will see enactment of legislation in this session of the Congress.

TRADE NET,
Washington, D.C., July 26, 1982.

Hon. DON BONKER,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BONKER: On the occasion of export trading company legislation reaching the floor, Trade Net would like to commend you for the fine job you have done in its formulation and committee management. Trade Net is especially interested in this legislation because of the focus on small- and medium-sized businesses which are or could be an integral component of the lives of many of the members of local-level organizations Trade Net plans to interest and involve in the promotion of export trade. Happily, the impact of increased exports by businesses of this magnitude will be felt personally, particularly in the area of jobs, by a wide variety of this country's citizens.

Trade Net would also like to take this opportunity to offer our compliments on your leadership of the House Export Task Force. Trade Net, which numbers among its Directors former Cabinet Members from both Republican and Democratic Administrations—William E. Simon, Bob Bergland, W. J. Usery, Jr. and Reubin O'D. Askew—feels strongly about the importance of nonpartisanship when it comes to international trade. You so effectively have adhered to that concept as you fulfilled the role of motivator and facilitator. Your efforts have not gone unnoticed and are greatly appreciated by those of us who value an open world trading system.

We urge and look forward to a speedy enactment of export trading company legislation and, thus, a successful culmination of your diligent efforts.

Sincerely,

SHANA GORDON,
President, Trade Net.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS,
July 27, 1982.

Hon. DON BONKER,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR DON: The need for legislation to encourage American export trading companies has if anything grown more acute since the first such bill was introduced by Senator Stevenson in August of 1979. The series of U.S. trade deficits has continued unabated: 1979, $40.4 billion; 1980, $36.4 billion; 1981, $39.7 billion. We have admittedly had significant growth in our exports, which went from $181 billion in 1979 to $233.7 billion in 1981. Further exports are now clearly essential to job creation. According to a recent Commerce Department study, fully thirty percent of the increase in private sector employment between 1977 and 1980 can be attributed to the production of manufactured goods for export. These gains, however, have not been sufficient to offset the serious problems of large, important and import sensitive sectors of the economy. As a result Congress is now actively considering ill-advised import restrictions. i.e. domestic content legislation, the effect of which could well be to weaken further our international competitiveness. We may avoid these errors in the 97th Congress, but we will not avoid them long unless Americans see tht an open international trading system works to their advantage, unless we improve U.S. competitiveness.

The Export Trading Company Act, H.R. 1799, which you introduced in February, and the Bank Export Services Act, H.R. 6010, which Chairman St Germain introduced in March, are significant and very helpful steps in the right direction. The news that these bills will be taken up by the full House this week was welcome indeed. I have long believed that the House as a whole broadly supports these measures, and I am confident that, if they are put before the House, they will pass. You, Chairman St Germain, and others who have worked to bring this about deserve high praise.

It goes without saying that I would not in any way wish to diminish the significance of your achievement. It is simply a truism that the ultimate value of the legislation will depend in part upon decisions still to be made, namely the decisions of the conferees with respect to the difference between the House bills and the Export Trading Company Act as passed by the Senate in April of 1981, S. 734. I shall not attempt to review in detail each point of difference. I would however like to go over the most important of these briefly.

BANKING

The first point to be made is that the House Banking Committee, under the leadership of Chairman St Germain, did an excellent job in crafting a legislative proposal that is both prudent and potentially very helpful. Its fundamental approach is somewhat different from that of the Senate bill. The latter is freestanding while the former achieves its purpose by amending the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956. There is much to be preferred in the House bill, and the objectives of the legislation could be well served by either. We do feel, however, that there is merit in stating these objectives explicitly within the body of the bill as is done in S. 734. Here I have in mind the language especially of Section 102(b) of S. 734, which explains that, "The purpose of this Act is to increase United States exports of products and services, particularly by small, medium-sized, and minority concerns, by encouraging more efficient provisions of export trade services to American producers and suppliers." We hope the conferees will decide to retain such a statement of purpose in the final version of the bank ETC bill.

Our chief concern, however, over the differences between the two approaches to bank involvement with export trading companies is a definitional one. H.R. 6016 defines an export trading company as an entity involved "exclusively" in exporting. The Committee has made an attempt to ensure that this definition is not unduly confining, but it may nevertheless prove to be so. Trading companies are not manufacturers—under this legislation they are not allowed to be—and they will need to buy as well as sell abroad if they are to thrive. Specifically, they will need to import and to engage in third country trade. It is perfectly reasonable to expect such entities, favored under the law for their capacity to expand exports, to be engaged "principally" in exporting, but it would be self-defeating to impose the requirement that ETCs be exclusively involved in exporting or to force them to justify their non-exporting activities on a transaction-by-transaction basis. We hope, therefore, that the House, in conference, will reconsider this limitation within the definition of bank-related export trading companies.

Another aspect of the House's definition of export trading companies, as expressed in H.R. 6016, also concerns us. The Senate bill includes insurance among the services that can be performed by export trading companies; H.R. 6016 does not. It has long been the view of those who support the export-trading company idea that the more nearly an export trading company could approximate a one-stop, comprehensive export service, the more valuable it would be to American exporters. We urge the House conferees to reconsider their views on this point as well.

Having suggested these changes, I should like to reemphasize that we think the Bank Export Services Act is an excellent bill, and we support it.

ANTITRUST

The principal virtue of H.R. 1799 was that it was neither a banking bill nor an antitrust bill but an export-promotion bill. Throughout the history of such legislation, NAM has supported it. The unhappy link between U.S. competitiveness and U.S. antitrust law has been clear for some time. The President's Export Council under President Carter, for example, concluded that: "Every reasonable effort should be made to facilitate U.S. exports and overseas operations by freeing U.S. firms from antitrust constraints or uncertainties where U.S. consumers are not adversely affected." H.R. 1799 and S. 734 are suggestions for achieving just this end.

Under the Senate bill, the Commerce Department is authorized to issue certificates exempting export trading companies from prosecution under antitrust laws. This can be done, of course, only after the Department has thoroughly reviewed an ETC application for such exemption and received the advice of the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission on the merits of issuing such certificate. Given the safeguards of the Senate bill, we feel this approach is sensible because it addresses directly the question of uncertainty. Unfortunately, as it now stands, the antitrust language of H.R. 1799 does not. By denying the Secretary of Commerce a meaningful role in the certification procedure the House bill undermines the procedure itself. If it prevails there will be no one in government with an institutional interest in providing the ETC applicant with the certainty about the application of the antitrust laws that is the rationale for this change in the law. The "certainty" is further unraveled by permitting single damage suits, as the House bill does, even for conduct that has been certified as unlikely to violate the antitrust laws. It is our belief that U.S. competitiveness would be better served if the conferees were to favour the Senate bill when they consider the questions: Who should certify, and what degree of antitrust immunity should certification confer?

To repeat an earlier thought, the potential benefit of the ETC legislation now before the House is significant in itself and because it demonstrates our commitment as a nation to solve our trade problems by improving our competitiveness rather than by closing our markets. It appears, however, that the best law is neither in the House nor the Senate but in a judicious melding of the leading proposals of each. We shall, of course, follow closely the work of the conference and look forward to the opportunities this legislation will create for American business.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE A. FOX.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SHAMANSKY).

Mr. SHAMANSKY. Mr. Speaker, I asked to get on the International Economic Policy and Trade Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs because I am very much interested in promoting export of the U.S. industries. But there is a provision in this bill which I deeply regret, and for all the reasons that I am for the bill in general, I think we have to be aware of what is happening in this particular provision.

We had the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Baldrige, testify that this statute was not intended to exempt the export trading companies that are certified from the application of our antitrust laws domestically, and that was affirmed by his General Counsel, Sherman Unger.

They both stated that, although export trading companies would be exempt from antitrust laws for their foreign activities, export trading companies would not be exempt from domestic antitrust implications of those activities. To underscore our mutual understanding of the purpose of this bill, I offered an amendment in subcommittee which stated that antitrust laws shall apply to conduct having a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce.

The bill before us has a different provision. Rather than applying fully antitrust laws to domestic activities of export trading companies, the bill exempts them from treble damages and provides only single damages.

This means that export trading companies could engage in antitrust activities domestically and the affected domestic competitors would be able to collect only single damages.

This is inconsistent with the assurances that were given to me only last week by the Secretary of Commerce.

I am convinced that in the near future we will see domestic firms damaged, if not destroyed, by actions that, except for the language of H.R. 1799, would have made the perpetrators subject to treble damages. To increase jobs in the export sector, we may be destroying jobs in the domestic sector.

Except for this particular section, I support legislation to expand American exports. I just regret that, in our enthusiasm to expand exports, we may have dealt a serious blow to our antitrust laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SHAMANSKY) has consumed 1 minute.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLORY).

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of title II of H.R. 1799, the antitrust provisions, which were referred to the Judiciary Committee and to which the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law gave long and careful consideration. There were times when I and others felt that our consideration was becoming altogether too long and too careful, but the bill which we have ultimately reported is a good one, and merits the support of every Member.

It is difficult to discuss this legislation without some reference to H.R. 5235, formerly H.R. 2326, the bill introduced by Chairman RODINO and myself to clarify the application of the antitrust laws to export trade activities. This was our initial response to the complaint that many American businessmen were unwilling or unable to compete with confidence in the international marketplace because of their uncertainty regarding their antitrust liability. That bill reflects our belief that the proper response to exporters who believe the law is unclear is to clarify the law. This, it seems to me, is far more important than the licensing procedures, such as the provisions in the export trading legislation passed by the Senate.

As the Rodino-McClory bill (H.R. 5235) has moved forward, it became evident that nothing less than some sort of certification system was desired by the business community, even if H.R. 5235 were to be enacted clarifying the nonapplication of our antitrust laws to purely foreign activities. Title II of H.R. 1799 is the Judiciary Committee's considered response. It compares extremely favorably with the Senate approach, I might say, in terms of simplified procedure, expedited processing and certain results. It provides exporters with a binding advisory opinion on the legality of their proposed conduct, rather than providing an outright antitrust exemption as the Senate bill attempts to do. This eliminates also the cumbersome requirement that exporters establish a special need as a condition precedent to exemption.

The only issue to be decided in processing an application under our bill is whether the proposed conduct is likely to violate the antitrust laws of the United States. The members of the Monopolies and Commercial Law Subcommittee were virtually unanimous, therefore, in deciding that this determination should be made by the Department of Justice rather than by the Department of Commerce. There would seem to be little benefit conferred by an antitrust certificate from the Department of Commerce which the Department of Justice could attack. And it would be wrong to bar the Antitrust Division from exercising its enforcement function, in my opinion, without its first having the opportunity to subject the proposed conduct to antitrust review.

An optional forwarding role for the Commerce Department is allowed, nevertheless, which should encourage the applicant to use that agency's informational and advisory services.

Careful thought was also given to the question of damages which may be recovered by a person injured by an antitrust violation committed by a person acting pursuant to a certificate. There is no question, of course, that treble damages lie for conduct outside of the certificate. It is also possible, however, although unlikely, that certified conduct may result in injury in domestic commerce. Although the administration and the Senate have suggested that certified conduct should be totally immune from liability, the Judiciary Committee of the House firmly believes that single damages are most necessary and appropriate. It is sometimes forgotten that antitrust damages are not only a penalty but a protection, and the person compensated most often will be another American business with a legitimate claim to be made whole for its antitrust injury.

Single damages for domestic injury by the holder of an export trade certificate were perceived as a fair compromise between the traditional statutory treble damages and no damages. If no damages were to be the rule, the governmental agency granting certification would have to be more conservative in close cases, granting benefits to fewer applicants. Furthermore, fairness would also then require that greater procedural protections be provided for interested parties who feared future injury since such parties would subsequently be denied damages.

On the other hand, with single damages as the rule, certification could take place administratively without a hearing, without third parties arguing their case, and thus without protracted delays. Finally, if no damages were to be the rule, the only way a court could compensate the injured American business would be to hold the conduct in question to be ultra vires, outside the certificate, in which case treble damages would lie. With a single-damages rule, however, the court would have a fairer solution available—one which compensates the injured party but does not punish the wrongdoer who believed that his conduct fell within the scope of the certificate.

Some have argued that the Senate bill is preferable because it protects exporters from lawsuits by providing zero damages rather than single damages where certified conduct causes the complained of injury. But our committee has given this argument a long, hard look, talked to antitrust lawyers, and found this argument without merit. For the Senate bill would only change the nature of pleading antitrust violations and probably result in treble damage awards on grounds that the conduct in question was ultra vires. Our bill would preserve and assure single damages for the injured plaintiff but would restrain the filing of lawsuits against exporters by means of the most liberal provision of attorney's fees for defendants within the sweep of my experience. For if the certified conduct has not violated the antitrust laws, the plaintiff must pay to the defendant exporter a reasonable attorney's fee even if the suit was brought in good faith and even if the suit was nonfrivolous. That should make plaintiffs think twice about suing an exporter holding a certificate.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been carefully constructed to provide greater certainty to exporters by providing them the assurance of an antitrust review and certification procedure. I believe it will enable American businessmen to compete with far greater confidence and freedom of action overseas. This is what you want; it is what I want; and it is what our national interest requires. Having worked this long and come this far, I look forward to an early and successful conference with the other body on this measure, followed by final enactment of this important legislation into law.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK) is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairmen and members of the committees with jurisdictional interest in the export trading company legislation. I feel that this action we are taking here today represents an extraordinary bipartisan effort on the part of these committees to enact meaningful legislation.

Over a year ago, Secretary of Commerce Baldrige testified before the House Judiciary Committee in favor of export trading company legislation. In his testimony he emphasized the need for the United States to meet the trade challenges of the coming decade. Our trading position in the world markets will be tested by emerging third world countries as well as by those nations which currently are highly industrialized, and we must develop ways to meet these challenges. Export trading company legislation such as we are considering here today would facilitate exporting by small- and medium-sized businesses which previously have not had the resources to engage in this kind of activity.

The certification procedure set up in title II will give assurance to these companies with respect to application of antitrust law. We worked very hard in the Judiciary Committee to set up a certification procedure which would give a role to both the Justice Department and the Department of Commerce. As agreed to by the committee, the primary responsibility is set up within Justice with Commerce assisting. I personally would prefer that the Commerce Department be given an even greater role in the certification procedure. I feel that Commerce traditionally has had the resources and expertise in trade matters and is currently committed to aiding the estimated 20,000 companies which have the potential to engage in export activities.

Mr. Speaker, we are reminded on a daily basis of the trade problems which the United States encounters in the international community. I, for one, feel that it is time that we stop putting barriers up which hinder exporting. With current economic and trade conditions, I feel that it is imperative that the United States pursue an expansionary export policy in the 1980's. Studies such as one done by Chase Econometrics indicate that by 1985, export trading companies could increase GNP by $27 to $55 billion, increase employment by 320,000 to 640,000 workers, and reduce the Federal deficit by $11 to $22 billion. At a time when Congress is grappling with the problems of unemployment and the Federal deficit, this legislation represents a rare opportunity to take some positive action. I urge my colleagues to give it their support.

□ 1340

Mr. McCLORY. I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK) for his major contributions to this legislative product. He and I have worked long and hard in our Judiciary Committee, particularly on title II of this measure, and we are very proud to express our support for the measure before us here today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. RODINO.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1799. The Committee on the Judiciary has devoted a great deal of time and energy to writing this legislation, and it has the bipartisan support of our committee. Particularly noteworthy have been the efforts of the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee, Mr. McCLORY, and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES). They worked hard to reconcile the competing policies and to fashion appropriate compromises.

The concept of export trading company legislation first gained significant support during the Carter administration. The legislation we bring forth today is grounded in legislation proposed in the 96th Congress and refined in this Congress.

The changes in the antitrust laws in this legislation are based on a preception in the business world that those laws inhibit export trade in American goods and services. A number of witnesses in hearings of the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law testified that they believed the antitrust laws inhibit American exports by forbidding joint export activity that produces economies of scale. In addition, there is some legal uncertainty about the domestic effects necessary for U.S. antitrust law to apply. According to testimony before the subcommittee, these problems are most acute for small- and medium-sized businesses, which most need to engage in joint activities to overcome the obstacles to export and which can least afford expert antitrust counsel.

Competing with the need to clarify the application of the antitrust laws on international transactions is the need to preserve our system of free competition here at home. As the Supreme Court has pointed out, the antitrust laws protect our economic freedom just as the Constitution protects our political and personal rights and freedoms. A proposal that weakens the antitrust laws must be approached carefully.

Our task, then, was to find ways to remove antitrust uncertainty from international transactions without weakening our domestic competitive system. We have considered a number of solutions. A remedy that I believe will solve the problem, which the committee has also approved, is to clarify the jurisdiction of the Sherman and FTC Acts and section 7 of the Clayton Act. H.R. 5235 embodies this approach, and the committee will be bringing it to the floor shortly.

H.R. 1799 provides a second important approach, procedural in nature. The basic concept is that a person who is contemplating or engaged in international joint conduct my apply to the Government for a certificate covering the conduct. Under H.R. 1799, as introduced, the Secretary of Commerce, after consultation with the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, would determine whether to grant an exemption from the antitrust laws under an expanded Webb-Pomerene Act. If the Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission objected to granting the certificate, either could sue for injunctive relief after the certificate had been issued. No relief whatever would be available to private parties.

As more fully detailed in the committee report, many witnesses and observers believed these procedures were cumbersome, afforded illusory protection to the applicant, and, could, if misapplied, undermine competitive principles in the domestic economy. The committee, working in a bipartisan manner, has established procedures that address these concerns. As reported, title II contains a certification procedure that will let applicants know where they stand swiftly and certainly, with a minimum of bureaucratic redtape. Under the committee version, there is no need for extensive consultation among agencies and departments. Decisionmaking authority lies exclusively in the Department of Justice, which should be able to provide detailed expert opinions expeditiously. Under the committee version, a certificate would be issued solely on the judgment of whether the proposed conduct would likely lead to a violation of the antitrust laws.

A certificate would largely immunize the certified conduct from antitrust attack. A certificate would protect the holder from all criminal liability, from actions for monetary relief by the Federal Government, from treble damages, and from injunctive relief in private actions based on threatened harm. The committee version leaves intact liability for single damages and injunctive liability in private cases where actual harm can be shown. In order for the certification procedures to be informal, straightforward, and expeditious, and for the Department's grants of certificate to be unreviewable, it is essential for these remedies to remain intact so that innocent competitors and consumers are not injured by actual antitrust violations.

Mr. Speaker, the suspension version of this bill is not identical to the version the committee reported. The differences are set forth in my additional views in the committee report.

Mr. Speaker, the committee amendments have the bipartisan support of the members of the committee. They are sound, workable procedures. I urge the Members of this body to support them.

I also want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) who has been managing this measure on behalf of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and the gentleman from Washington, Mr. DON BONKER, who has for a long period of time continually urged us to bring this measure to the floor.

I particularly want to pay tribute for their long and studied efforts in this area.

I also want to thank the members of the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law of the Committee on the Judiciary because there were many prickly questions which we had to deal with, and they have all been resolved now.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to mention an individual who gave yeoman service in the committee and that is the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), a member of the subcommittee.

I would urge that we adopt this resolution.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODINO. I would yield to another member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING), who has worked very diligently in this effort.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the chairman for yielding.

I think this bill, as amended by the Judiciary Committee's amendment, is a distinct improvement. I commend the committee for its action, even though, as set forth in my additional views in the committee report, I feel that it is premature and that we should have waited until sufficient time has elapsed after we pass H.R. 5325, which exempts export and foreign trade from the antitrust laws. If that bill works as hoped, this bill may not be necessary.

I would like to ask the chairman a question that I know is troubling some of the Members. One of the sections of this bill, section 207, provides that anyone who receives a certificate from the Attorney General that the proposed actions do not violate the antitrust laws can henceforth not be sued for treble damages under the antitrust laws for any action that is within the scope of the facts set forth in the certificate.

The purpose of that provision, as I understand it, is to make it possible for businessmen to feel secure against the possibility that, despite the fact that the Attorney General did not feel that the proposed action would violate the antitrust laws, some court might later have a different view.

But I believe we should have the chairman's assurance that this is not an invitation to the Attorney General to be lax and give a blanket kind of certification to create an umbrella of protection from the antitrust laws.

Mr. RODINO. I want to assure the gentleman, who as a member of the subcommittee knows our one objective was to have the Department of Justice, which has overall jurisdiction in this area of antitrust, insure that that would not be the case, that there certainly would not then be an invitation to violations.

I would also add that the chairman of the committee intends to take up H.R. 5235, which was a bill the gentleman form Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY) and myself originally designed and which was joined in unanimously by the rest of the subcommittee.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the chairman.

As I read the committee report, the Attorney General will be under a very strong mandate to insure that no certification is given unless he is satisfied that the proposed act does not violate the law.

Mr. RODINO. That is the reason for designating the Department of Justice rather than the Department of Commerce as the agency that would supervise reviews.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the time I have left, 3 minutes, to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Judiciary Committee particularly the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PETER RODINO) as well as the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY), for making certain that this legislation moved through the committee expeditiously.

I also want to commend my good colleague and neighbor from Washington, (DON BONKER), for his work on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, because I know this has been one of his top priorities. He has done an outstanding job in monitoring this legislation through four different committees.

I likewise want to commend the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs for their prompt and diligent attention to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, having been active in the negotiating process that led to this bill and having offered the amendments at the subcommittee and committee levels that were ultimately adopted, I am delighted that H.R. 1799 has reached the floor of the House.

During our information-collection process, it became clear that any certification procedure had to be swift and simple to be of practical value. The amendments that are offered here today possess those qualities. By reducing the number of Government departments and agencies with a role in the decisionmaking process from three to one, the amendments eliminate any duplicative review, the need for interagency coordination, and the possibility of conflicting governmental viewpoints.

Moreover, there can be no doubt that the Department of Justice, because of its responsibility to enforce the antitrust law, and its expertise in doing so, must be the agency with decisionmaking authority. There was unanimity in the hearing process that the Department of Justice had to have some role in the certification process to protect competitive values. The committee amendments, which transfer decisionmaking authority to the Department of Justice, do not therefore contemplate a role for the Department of Justice where there had been none.

I believe that the business community will be pleased with the committee amendments. With its great experience, the Department is in a position to make quick, accurate determinations. Because the Department of Justice will have the responsibility of making decisions, it will have to be as careful and attentive as possible and will not be free to casually dissent from the decisions of another department. The committee expects that the Department will discharge its responsibilities with a view toward the principal purpose of the legislation—to promote exports.

Finally, the procedures that the committee has recommended contain few formalities. They are designed to work as informally and expeditiously as possible. Because they contain few procedural protections for the rights of persons who would be injured by any antitrust violation, the committee amendments leave a single damage remedy to anyone who actually has been injured by an antitrust violation and an injunctive remedy to anyone who can show actual harm. If these remedies were unavailable, elaborate procedural safeguards that would likely lead to extended administrative proceedings would be necessary to make certain that domestic competitors and consumers would be unaffected by the conduct for which certification was sought.

Mr. Speaker, the procedures under consideration here today are moderate and workable. I heartily support H.R. 1799 as amended and urge my colleagues to join me in voting for it.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SWIFT).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SWIFT) is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, the current recession has jarred thousands from their jobs across our country and has shaken our economy to its foundation. The current economic crisis is in part due to the large trade imbalance that our country suffers from. It must be remembered that our first trade deficit occured in only 1971.

To be sure a large part of the foreign trade imbalace is due to our ever-increasing dependence upon imported oil. But in addition our exports have fallen far behind those of the other developed countries. The United States exports only 8 percent of its GNP, as compared with Japan's 12 percent and West Germany's 23 percent. Only 10 percent of the 250,000 manufacturing firms in the United States currently export, and of those exporting firms fewer than 1 percent account for 80 percent of our exports. This is a situation that must be addressed. Exports directly translate into jobs here in America where we desperately need them. According to the Commerce Department, there are as many as 30,000 small- to medium-sized firms that could be competitive in the export market but that simply are not competing worldwide.

The bill under consideration today, H.R. 1799, address two of the major problems faced by small companies dealing with the uncertainty of the export market; the access to capital and financing and the uncertainty of our antitrust laws. The concept of the Export Trading Company has strong support in the business community. In a recent export trade questionnaire I sent to major exporting companies in my district, 79 percent of those responding favored the creation of ETC's. Further, 81 percent favored the participation of banks in making capital and credit available to companies wishing to participate in an export trading company.

The vaguely worded Webb-Pomerene Act has been in existence since 1918, allowing U.S. firms to form associations strictly for the purpose of exporting goods without fear of antitrust prosecution. Clearly the law needs to be addressed. In the 1930's there were as many as 57 Webb-Pomerene associations accounting for some 19 percent of the total U.S. exports. By 1979, however, that number had declined to 33, accounting for less than 2 percent.

Title II of H.R. 1799 amends Webb-Pomerene to include export trading companies, and the export of goods and services. This would do much to remove the uncertainty of our antitrust laws, and would encourage the formation of export trading companies which would assist small firms to begin exporting.

It is essential that the United States increase its role in the worldwide export market—both to assist in the current domestic crisis and even more importantly to help America regain its leadership role in the world economy. I believe H.R. 1799 could help a great deal and urge my colleagues to support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I urge the Members to adopt this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, after years of endeavor, I am delighted that the House will finally, I believe, pass the two bills on its schedule today which jointly will become the House version of a trading company bill.

This legislation, which I have supported since its conception, I think will be helpful in assisting the export needs of small- and middle-sized companies, many of which do not have either the inclination or the capability to export at the present time.

As we have come closer and closer to the passage of this bill, I have noticed in my district increased interest in this kind of bill, and I suspect that others have experienced the same in their areas.

I welcome the passage of the bill. I think it is important that the Congress tell its constituents that we are concerned with increasing exports. This bill gives a little additional, very modest incentive to encourage exports.

The United State has stood almost alone among trading nations in its unwillingness to provide this sort of assistance to exporters. This bill is a very tiny first step, but I hope that it will lead the way to further developments of other GATT legal export incentives for American exporters.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think this bill is perfect. We have had three committees laboring to produce two bills. The result is not exactly a camel, but it is not a racehorse either.

We can stand to make many impovements. In my considered judgment, neither of these bills handle the problem nearly as well as it is handled in the other body. We have heard reference to the fact that the Attorney General will be the sole arbiter of certification. In my judgment, the Senate version, which gives that role to the Secretary of Commerce, is a far better solution and would seem to me to do much more to expand U.S. exports.

If we worry so much about our antitrust laws, we can probably arrange to see that we do not increase exports. That is, in fact what we have been doing over these past many years.

Nevertheless, I must compliment all of the committees concerned and all of the Members concerned for a good job. It is a modest beginning, but it is a very necessary beginning.

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, may I just say, with respect to the subject of the antitrust laws, that I do not think they have been an impediment. As a matter of fact, a recent study of export disincentives published by the Department of Commerce and the Office of the Special Trade Representative expressly stated that no specific instances were found of the antitrust laws unduly restricting exports. I think it is an erroneous perception that the antitrust laws are an impediment that has been the problem, and as part of that the antitrust laws themselves have been misconstrued, misinterpreted, and misunderstood. At any rate, we are endeavoring in this measure and in the measure that the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO) and I are sponsoring to assure that, with respect to export activities, American businessmen will be able henceforward to compete with greater confidence and freedom of action in the international marketplace. I think that is an objective on which we all can agree.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1799 has been brought to the floor only with concerted efforts of a number of Members of the House. It has been the persistence of Mr. BINGHAM, chairman of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, and Mr. BONKER together with the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, that has kept this bill moving for over 2 years and has finally brought it to the floor through a labyrinth of committees.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. RODINO, and his ranking member, Mr. MCCLORY, have been most cooperative in moving the legislation. In addition to reporting the antitrust title of H.R. 1799, they have reported companion legislation, H.R. 5235, which makes an important contribution to the efforts to facilitate the formation of export trade associations.

The third portion of the package rested with the Banking Committee. The chairman, Mr. ST GERMAIN, and the ranking member, Mr. STANTON, of Ohio took the lead on the issue in that committee, which has reported its version of the banking title of H.R. 1799, as H.R. 6016, which is also before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is designed to facilitate the formation and financing of export trading companies and associations by creating an office within the Department of Commerce and by appropriately amending the banking and antitrust laws.

In this time of economic dislocation both domestically and internationally, I hope Members will see fit to support this effort to encourage U.S. exports and U.S. employment.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of H.R. 1799.

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) and all the Members of the Foreign Affairs Committee for their major contribution in this legislative product.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. EMERSON).

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, American goods and services can be competitive with anything in the world market today if we afford our businesses the same kind of opportunities that our trading partners give their companies.

Passage of the Export Trading Company Act would give U.S. firms just such a weapon to compete more effectively in the increasingly aggressive world trade market. By allowing limited bank participation in export trading companies under strictly regulated conditions, and by providing a preclearance certification process to give participating businesses the assurance that their activities and methods of operation would not be in violation of the antitrust laws, smaller firms would be given a significant inducement to begin exporting their goods and services for the first time.

These firms have not exported until now for a variety of reasons. They are not familiar with foreign customs, language, and markets. They do not have the expertise to provide the necessary export services. Perhaps most importantly, they do not have the capacity to bear the tremendous costs and risks involved in developing overseas markets. Export trading companies will be able to help these U.S. companies over these hurdles by diversifying trade risks and achieving economies of scale in export services.

And the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is job creation, thousands of new American jobs. In Missouri alone, the Commerce Department estimates that between 4,500 and 6,000 new jobs will be created as a direct result of passage of this legislation.

The House has before it today legislation to facilitate the formation of export trading companies. I am pleased to support this important legislation.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH).

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, all of us are concerned about our Nation's economy. We recognize that the current rate of unemployment is unacceptable and that the decline in business activity must cease.

Yet we also know that quick-fix solutions and Government bailouts will not bring about a lasting solution.

What we must do is restore economic incentives and remove inpediments that arbitrarily retard economic activity. That is exactly why this is such an important bill. It will help American business to compete in the international marketplace and will enable thousands of our Nation's businesses—who are not now exporting—to get into the export marketplace.

This month I hosted a half day conference on exports in my home State of Wisconsin. Some 300 persons attended, largely drawn from small- and medium-sized businesses not currently involved in the export trade. These are exactly the types of companies that will benefit from this legislative initiative.

During our conference, our keynote speaker, Assistant Secretary of Commerce William Morris, explained to the audience the importance of the bill that we have before us today. I have long supported this bill—but what really opened my eyes to the necessity for this legislation was Secretary Morris' statement that the third largest export trading company in America today is a Japanese firm.

The benefits of exporting are well known to my colleagues here in the House. Already, some 8 percent of our Nation's $3 trillion economy is derived from our exports. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are employed in export related jobs, and an additional 32,000 jobs are created by every additional billion dollars in American exports.

Yet it is easy for us to say to American business: "There are millions of dollars in potential sales overseas—go and make those sales." International marketing is difficult and does require special skills. This is an area in which small- and medium-sized businesses lack necessary abilities—and by virtue of their size, they simply cannot afford to obtain the specialized type of information and people that they need in order to compete overseas.

By passage of this legislation, we will remove the barrier that is imposed by the fact that most of our Nation's businesses fall within the category of "small" or "medium." This bill will let those companies pool their resources, entering jointly into the worldwide market.

American products and technology are competitive with those produced anywhere else in the world. The foreign buyer wants to "buy American" because the label "Made in the U.S.A." stands for quality and reliability. Yet we cannot sit back and expect that buyers are going to come knocking at our door. Our free market system is such that our businesses must get out and make the sale, convincing the foreign buyer to buy from us, rather than from Britain, France, Japan or some other supplier. Given the choice, I am confident that many will opt for the American product—but as it stands now, all too frequently we have not even been giving the foreign purchaser the opportunity to buy American.

Through export trading companies, that situation can be corrected. This legislation can open many new doors to hundreds of thousands of America's businesses. It will help our export competitiveness—and will create tens of thousands of new jobs here in America.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. FENWICK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in ardent support of this bill.

Our chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs has spoken of the committee's great concern. I know it, also, from the small businesses in my district. They have been warned by the Department of Justice that, when they wish to get together to make trading companies for export, there may be some antitrust legislation that forbids this kind of thing.

We are getting more and more of our small companies into export, which is so important a development—American jobs paid for with foreign currency.

The Webb-Pomerene Act of 1918 did not repair the damage that was done to our small companies in export trade.

● Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, one of the most positive ways in which the United States can seek to correct our economic problems is by taking steps to increase our export trade. I rise in support of the Export Trading Company Act, which will provide the needed stimulous to expand our foreign markets—a key to increased national production and the creation of new private-sector jobs.

I have long believed that the expansion of small business is the key to turn the burden of unemployment in our Nation around. The small businesses of this country already provide 86 percent of the new jobs created in our economy and over half of the private sector gross national product. However, it is evident that many of these companies are in need of new markets in order to maintain present production levels—small businesses in our Nation are failing at a rate of 25,000 per year.

Based on a Department of Commerce study, we now have the opportunity to expand the market for small business production and turn these distressing figures around. It is estimated that at least 20,000 small- and medium-sized companies would export if they had access to marketing financial and informational export services. Mr. Speaker, this bill would provide these vital services.

Today, foreign trade is dominated by the largest U.S. corporations—with 1 percent of U.S. firms responsible for 80 percent of all exports. At the same time, the United States has amassed nearly $150 billion in trade deficits. In addition, the U.S. share of total world markets has declined from 15 to 12 percent since 1970.

The solution to these problems, Mr. Speaker, is to open the world market up to the most innovative and productive sector of our economy—small business. I firmly believe—once the foreign markets are tapped for smaller U.S. companies—we will see increased employment, a boom in our national output of goods and services, and we can finally make positive inroads to decrease our looming trade deficits.

Secretary of Commerce, Malcolm Baldrige, put the export trade issue in perspective when he testified before a congressional committee last year:

> We need export trading companies that provide a full range of export services to firms of any size interested in exporting. These export companies must be sufficiently capitalized to allow operations on a scale that would achieve substantial economies in selling and distributing.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of small businesses market exportable goods and services, which could easily compete in foreign markets. Most of these companies, however, have no international experience and lack of knowledge about foreign markets. Perhaps even more important, small businesses are chronically short on capital—and a large supply of capital is necessary for successful involvement for trading in foreign markets.

The bill before us today will enable small businesses throughout the Nation to expand by taking part in world trade. It will draw on the considerable resources and expertise of the U.S. banking system to increase the amount of available external financing. It would use the network of established contacts with overseas companies, knowledge of foreign markets, economic conditions, and trade regulations which are already being used by larger U.S. corporations to expand overseas production.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly join with the administration in supporting this—the first legislation in over a decade aimed at giving American business major new tools to penetrate and expand export markets abroad.●

● Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1799, the Export Administration Amendments Act, I rise to express my strong support for this measure to encourage the development of export trading companies as middlemen to help small- and medium-sized U.S. firms sell their goods abroad. I commend my colleague, Congressman BONKER, chairman of the House Export Task Force, for his tireless efforts to insure passage of this critical bill which has been severely hampered by overlapping committee jurisdictions. I have long been enthusiastic about legislation to promote trade. Overseas trade is vital to the American economy. It is estimated that 1 out of 8 jobs in the United States is directly dependent on exports, and that approximately $1 out of $3 of U.S. business profits is derived from international activities. Trade is even more important for the agricultural sector, where 1 out of every 4 acres of cropland now produces for export. The continued expansion of foreign trade constitutes a major underpinning of American domestic prosperity.

Small businesses which desire to export are often sidetracked by the tremendously burdensome requirements of such an effort. Gaining an expertise in foreign markets, tax provisions, freight handling, and business customs requires an indepth study and is tremendously time consuming. Whether selling directly or through an agent abroad, the small business also has to worry about export packing, long-distance multishipper transportation, export and import licenses, lack of trustworthy credit information, paper processing, payment insurance costs, and similar followup and detail work. A small business cannot afford the large in-house international marketing staff which would be required to handle all aspects of a successful export effort.

Because of these difficulties, many small suppliers turn to export management firms to handle their foreign sales. The majority of these professional middlemen operations are too small to handle more than one or two accounts competently. They also lack the management and capital necessary to expand geographically and to establish sales offices overseas. So, even if the export management firm is the best channel for a small supplier interested in exporting, he may still be frustrated in his export efforts. Governement export promotion programs have not been successful in filling this information gap or in providing the type or level of assistance necessary to aid small business exporters. Export association and trading companies currently in existence, while providing an alternative to direct exporting by small business, have been hamstrung by certain legal restrictions and ambiguities.

Congress has done very little to promote the exports of U.S. goods and services. The vast internal American market and a rich endowment of resources have enabled the Nation to remain relatively self-sufficient. Global events of the past decade, however, have led to dramatic changes. In 1970, for example, exports and imports of goods and services represented only 6.6 and 5.9 percent of U.S. GNP, respectively. By 1980, both exports and imports had grown to over 12 percent of GNP. These figures illustrate the Nation's growing interdependence on the international economy and the importance of international trade to the expansion of the American economy. If the United States is to compete effectively in world markets, it must adopt policies that promote exports without abandoning the principles of the free market system. Export growth is clearly an increasingly important part of a healthy U.S. economy, yet the United States not only does little to spur exports, it actually erects barriers to increasing exports.

Unfortunately, Federal laws and regulations limit our ability to respond effectively to these new challenges. For example, Government regulations prevent U.S. banks from offering many important trading services. In addition, antitrust uncertainties deter many U.S. firms from cooperating with other U.S. producers in their organization of export activities. They hamper American firms at a time when foreign governments are cooperating with and, in many instances, even subsidizing and directing the export efforts of their own firms. The result is that our unilateral export restrictions cost American businessmen opportunities abroad and cost American workers jobs at home.

One way in which we can do this is by facilitating the formation of trading companies. The trading company is not a new idea. It is as old as commerce itself and has enjoyed great success in other countries. In Japan, for example, the top 10 trading organizations, the Sogo Soshas, account for approximately 60 percent of Japan's imports and 50 percent of its exports. Trading companies have also played an important role in the economic growth of many European countries. Yet, despite their historical and international success, trading companies have not flourished in the United States. The bill before us attempts to improve this situation. It makes possible the formation of American export trading companies to deliver the output of small- and medium-sized American businesses to the marketplaces of the world.

I must point out that even though U.S. exports have grown in the 1970's from 4.3 percent of our GNP to 8 percent today, we are in fact losing ground in the growing overseas markets. The U.S. share of the total world market in 1970 was 15 percent; in 1980, it was 12 percent. The U.S. share of the manufactured goods total world market has gone from 21.3 to 17.4 percent.

Every other major trading nation not only permits but encourages the formation of export trading companies or their equivalent. Only the United States has failed to allow the development of this mechanism for aiding smaller firms who either cannot or will not enter the world marketplace on their own.

It appears that the export trading company will be the major export-expanding statute that can be enacted this year. Its passage today requires the active support of all Members of Congress concerned with the balance-of-payments problem and its implications for the economic, political, and military future of the United States.●

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, exports—and the need to increase our export performance—are on everyone's lips these days. U.S. merchandise trade never showed a deficit before 1971, slipped into a deficit totaling $5 billion during 1971-76, and then plunged into deficits of over $25 billion per year in 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, and 1981. To be sure, this is in some measure due to our enormous oil bill ($79 billion in 1980), but our relative share of world markets has gone down, too.

What are the reasons for this decline, and what can be done to reverse it? Some of the change is due to relative losses in U.S. productivity and the general improvement in the economic standing of other industrialized nations. Part of the problem, though, has been the unwillingness of the Federal Government to remove disincentives to exports and to do what it can to encourage American businesses to seek overseas markets. H.R. 1799, as reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, would remove several of these Government-imposed limitations and give small- and medium-sized businesses the chance to sell overseas free of some of the disincentives that have made them easy pickings for their Japanese and European competitors.

Of the 250,000 businesses in this country, only about 8 percent export, and about 100 companies account for half of all our exports of manufactured goods. Studies have indicated that an additional 20,000 small- and medium-sized businesses might export profitably if given the tools and incentives to do so. These kinds of firms, though, usually have limited financial and personnel resources. They do not know how to find and evaluate foreign markets and, even if they did, they could not afford to commit the resources or secure the credit that would allow them to exploit foreign sales opportunities. Firms such as these could conceivably work together, pooling their resources to reach overseas, but the uncertain application of our antitrust laws makes such activity risky at best.

The measure before us would give export trading companies access to the kind of information about, and contacts with foreign markets that are essential for success in international trade and would provide certainty for exporters' antitrust exemptions. The struggle being waged in the House over this bill is a classic example of the need to look at traditional domestic regulatory philosophies in light of today's global economy.

EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

The bill would encourage the formation of export trading companies—ETC's. Although there are nearly 4,000 export firms in this country, 92 percent employ less than five people and almost all limited to a single product line or geographical area. Like the small- and medium-sized businesses at which the export trading company bill is directed, these export firms have not been able to secure lines of credit adequate for financing exports on a large scale.

ETC's would be able to offer expertise and economies of scale in financing, related credit services, market analysis, distribution channels, compliance with United States and foreign import-export regulations, advertising, accounting, overseas offices, transportation, insurance, and warehousing. They could handle a wide range of products and could offer "one-stop shopping" for the less-than-giant businesses that are the heart of the American economy. The bill would make this possible through two changes in Federal law, one substantive, the other procedural.

BANKS AND EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

Banks have a unique ability to provide what ETC's need to succeed—international correspondent relationships, knowledge of foreign markets, extensive operations and communications systems, financing and related services, knowledge about foreign currency transactions and the kind of managerial expertise necessary for such operations as large-scale inventory control. In addition, they have an image with potential foreign purchasers that a small commercial exporter does not.

Generally, Federal law forbids banks from having equity positions in commerce. This separation, which our European and Japanese competitors are not required to observe, arises from fears about the safety of the depositors' funds. As a result, American banks are forbidden to invest in ETC's. Over the years, though, Congress has made exceptions to the banking—commerce separation that meet needs no more pressing than our need to export. Among these are laws permitting bank investment in community development corporations, small business investment companies and other entities that are not strictly "banking" in character. Bank holding companies are permitted to make small investments in nonbanking entities, but for the most part, only large banks are affiliated with holding companies.

The bill addresses this problem by permitting bank holding companies and Edge Act corporations to own and operate ETC's. The Federal Reserve Board, however, would maintain strict control over such investments. Any bank holding company on Edge Act corporation investment in an ETC would have to be approved in advance by the Fed. No ETC owned wholly or partly by a bank holding company on Edge Act corporation would be permitted to speculate in securities or commodities, and no bank could have more than 5 percent of its consolidated capital and surplus invested in ETC's.

ANTITRUST IMMUNITY

The bill before the House would make a procedural change in Federal law relating to antitrust immunity for exporters. As far back as 1916, the Federal Trade Commission recommended antitrust immunity for American businesses selling overseas. The Webb-Pomerene Act, enacted in 1918, provided antitrust immunity for export trade in goods, so long as such activity did not restrain trade or depress prices within the United States. The theory of Webb-Pomerene was to allow firms that could not act in concert in the domestic market to pool resources and assist one another in selling abroad. Webb-Pomerene got off to a good start, and by the early 1930's Webb-Pomerene associations accounted for almost 20 percent of American exports. The heaviest representation was of relatively homogeneous exports like agricultural commodities, minerals and textiles.

Today, however, the story is far different: Webb-Pomerene associations account for only about 20 percent of our exports. Of the 150 associations created since 1918, only 33 survive (and only a few of these are substantial exporters). Probably the most significant reason for the decline of Webb-Pomerene associations was a series of challenges on antitrust grounds, brought both by the U.S. Government and by private parties.

Although Webb-Pomerene purports to provide antitrust immunity for export activities, there is no objective, certain measure upon which a company or group of companies can rely. If the Justice Department, the FTC or a private individual believes that the activities of a Webb-Pomerene association has had a forbidden domestic effect, Justice, FTC or the individual may sue the association and its members under the U.S. antitrust laws (and Justice may prosecute criminally under the Sherman Act). Years of expensive litigation can ensue—and have ensued—before the courts finally determine whether the law was violated or, as is more likely, before one side becomes exhausted and settles.

Few businesses—particularly the small- and medium-sized businesses that Webb-Pomerene is designed to help—are prepared to operate in the face of this kind of uncertainty. If we really wish to offer antitrust immunity that is worth something, certainty is needed before a firm makes the considerable investment involved in entering the export market. H.R. 1799, as reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee, would provide this kind of certainty without significantly expanding the substantive exemption enacted in 1918. Under the bill, an ETC would apply to the Commerce Department for a certificate of antitrust immunity. The application would contain a complete description of the company and its proposed exporting activities, and Commerce would consult with the traditional guardians of the antitrust laws, Justice and the FTC, before issuing a certificate. The certificate would immunize only those activities described in the application. The big difference, of course, is that exporters would know for certain that "the water's fine" before plunging in, as private parties would not have standing to challenge the activity covered by the certificate and any suit by justice to revoke it would have only prospective effect.

In addition, the bill would amend the Webb-Pomerene Act to make the antitrust exemption applicable to services as well as goods. Services constituted a relatively small portion of our exports in 1918, but by 1980, they made up one-third of total U.S. exports. This change in Webb-Pomerene would allow ETC's to provide—either solely or in concert with sales of goods—such services as accounting, banking, insurance, construction, and engineering.

THE COUNCIL FOR EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

I am pleased to observe that this legislation already has generated considerable interest in the American commercial and financial communities. Recently, a number of agricultural, manufacturing, banking, and shipping entities joined to form the Council for Export Trading Companies, or CETC. I applaud the formation of CETC and hope that it will play an active role in assisting potential American exporters to make use of the changes that will be wrought by this legislation.

CETC has been formed for several reasons. First, many of the potential beneficiaries of the ETC legislation do not know what the bill provides and can do for them. One activity of CETC will be to provide information about the ETC legislation and the ETC concept to business people and bankers who might wish to establish or otherwise become involved in ETC's. CETC also will be providing continuing information to its members on ETC-related developments.

Second, although CETC will not be a lobbying organization, it may become involved in the legislative process by providing witnesses and information to the Congress. CETC also will have the capacity to serve as a liaison between its members and such Federal regulatory entities as the Commerce and Justice Departments, the FTC, and the various bank regulatory agencies. This will be of use not only during the development of ETC regulations by these agencies, but also in the process of filing and securing approval for ETC applications once the regulations are in place. Some of the agencies that will regulate ETC's have expressed institutional hostility toward the ETC concept. CETC will work for the creation of a regulatory environment that reflects the strong support for the ETC legislation in Congress and the American business and banking communities.

Third, and perhaps most important, CETC will be one place where potential participants in ETC's—bankers, business people, freight forwarders, and so forth—can come together.

The mere passage of this legislation will not result in the instantaneous formation of hundreds of ETC's. The process will take time. It will involve the education of both potential ETC participants and Government regulators, the coming together of potential ETC participants, and the often tedious process of securing the approval of Federal regulatory agencies. CETC can and should fill the role of helping to carry out these tasks and making the ETC concept a reality that can give a boost to American exports.

The international trade aspects of our economic problems are many, varied, and substantial. Enactment of this bill will not solve all of them, but it will begin the process by breaking two shackles that needlessly hinder American exports.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1799, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to encourage exports by establishing in the Department of Commerce an office to promote the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies, by facilitating investment in export trading companies by certain banking institutions, and by modifying the application of the antitrust laws to certain export trade, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BANK EXPORT SERVICES ACT

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6016) to permit bank holding companies and Edge Act corporations to invest in export trading companies and to reduce restrictions on trade financing provided by financial institutions, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6016

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Bank Export Services Act".

INVESTMENTS IN EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

SEC. 2. Section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (12)(B), by striking out "or" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (13), by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (13) the following:

"(14) shares of any company which is an export trading company whose acquisition (including each acquisition of shares) or formation by a bank holding company has not been disapproved by the Board pursuant to this paragraph, except that such investments, whether direct or indirect, in such shares shall not exceed 5 per centum of the bank holding company's consolidated capital and surplus.

"(A)(i) No bank holding company shall invest in an export trading company under this paragraph unless the Board has been given sixty days' prior written notice of such proposed investment and within such period has not issued a notice disapproving the proposed investment or extending for up to another thirty days the period during which such disapproval may be issued.

"(ii) The period for disapproval may be extended for such additional thirty day period only if the Board determines that a bank holding company proposing to invest in an export trading company has not furnished all the information required to be submitted or that in the Board's judgment any material information submitted is substantially inaccurate.

"(iii) The notice required to be filed by a bank holding company shall contain such relevant information as the Board shall require by regulation or by specific request in connection with any particular notice.

"(iv) The Board may disapprove any proposed investment only if—

"(I) such disapproval is necessary to prevent unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, decreased or unfair competition, or conflicts of interest;

"(II) the financial or managerial resources of the companies involved warrant disapproval; or

"(III) the bank holding company fails to furnish the information required under clause (iii).

"(v) Within three days after a decision to disapprove an investment, the Board shall notify the bank holding company in writing of the disapproval and shall provide a written statement of the basis for the disapproval.

"(vi) A proposed investment may be made prior to expiration of the disapproval period if the Board issues written notice of its intent not to disapprove the investment.

"(B)(i) The total amount of extensions of credit by a bank holding company which invests in an export trading company, when combined with all such extensions of credit by all the subsidiaries of such bank holding company, to an export trading company shall not exceed at any one time 10 per centum of the bank holding company's consolidated capital and surplus. For purposes of the preceding sentence, an extension of credit shall not be deemed to include any amount invested by a bank holding company in the shares of an export trading company.

"(ii) No provision of any other Federal law in effect on the date of the enactment of this paragraph relating specifically to collateral requirements shall apply with respect to any such extension of credit.

"(iii) No bank holding company which invests in an export trading company may extend credit or cause any subsidiary to extend credit to any export trading company or to customers of such export trading company on terms more favorable than those afforded similar borrowers in similar circumstances, and such extension of credit shall not involve more than the normal risk of repayment or present other unfavorable features.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, an export trading company—

"(i) may engage in or hold shares of a company engaged in the business of underwriting, selling, or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that any bank holding company which invests in such export trading company may do so under applicable Federal and State banking laws and regulations; and

"(ii) may not engage in agricultural production activities or in manufacturing, except for such incidental product modification, including repackaging, reassembling or extracting byproducts, as is necessary to enable United States goods or services to conform with requirements of a foreign country and to facilitate their sale in foreign countries.

"(D) A bank holding company which invests in an export trading company may be required, by the Board, to terminate its investment or may be made subject to such limitations or conditions as may be imposed by the Board, if the Board determines that the export trading company has taken positions in commodities or commodities contracts, in securities, or in foreign exchange, other than as may be necessary in the course of the export trading company's business operations.

"(E) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'export trading company' means a company which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated exclusively for purposes of exporting goods or services produced in the United States or for purposes of facilitating the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services. Any export trading company may perform such importing or other activities as are reasonably related to and incident to an export transaction, if the overall effect of such activities is to enhance the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States;

"(ii) the term 'export trade services' includes consulting, international market research, advertising, marketing, product research and design, legal assistance, transportation (including trade documentation and freight forwarding), communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, financing, and taking title to goods, when such services are provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States;

"(iii) the term 'bank holding company' shall include a bank which (I) is organized solely to do business with other banks and their officers, directors, or employees; (II) is owned primarily by the banks with which it does business; and (III) does not do business with the general public. No such other bank owning stock in a bank described in this clause that invests in an export trading company shall extend credit to an export trading company in an amount exceeding at any one time 10 per centum of such other bank's capital and surplus; and

"(iv) the term 'extension of credit' shall have the same meaning given such term in the fourth paragraph of section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act.".

BANKERS' ACCEPTANCES

SEC. 3. The seventh paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 372) is amended to read as follows:

"(7)(A) Any member bank and any Federal or State branch or agency of a foreign bank subject to reserve requirements under section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as 'institutions'), may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than six months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace—

"(i) which grow out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods;

"(ii) which grow out of transactions involving the domestic shipment of goods; or

"(iii) which are secured at the time of acceptance by a warehouse receipt or other such document conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), no institution shall accept such bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, in an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 150 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus or, in the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H).

"(C) The Board, under such conditions as it may prescribe, may authorize, by regulation or order, any institution to accept such bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, in an amount not exceeding at any time in the aggregate 200 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus or, in the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H).

"(D) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (B) and (C), with respect to any institution, the aggregate acceptances, including obligations for a participation share in such acceptances, growing out of domestic transactions shall not exceed 50 per centum of the aggregate of all acceptances, including obligations for a participation share in such acceptances, authorized for such institution under this paragraph.

"(E) No institution shall accept bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, whether in a foreign or domestic transaction, for any one person, partnership, corporation, association or other entity in an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 10 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus, or, in the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H), unless the institution is secured either by attached documents or by some other actual security growing out of the same transaction as the acceptance.

"(F) With respect to an institution which issues an acceptance, the limitations contained in this paragraph shall not apply to that portion of an acceptance which is issued by such institution and which is covered by a participation agreement sold to another institution.

"(G) In order to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, the Board may define any of the terms used in this paragraph, and, with respect to institutions which do not have capital or capital stock, the Board shall define an equivalent measure to which the limitations contained in this paragraph shall apply.

"(H) Any limitation or restriction in this paragraph based on paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus of an institution shall be deemed to refer, with respect to a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, to the dollar equivalent of the paid-up capital stock and surplus of the foreign bank, as determined by the Board, and if the foreign bank has more than one United States branch or agency, the business transacted by all such branches and agencies shall be aggregated in determining compliance with the limitation or restriction.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN).

□ 1400

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the debate which has just taken place on the provisions of H.R. 1799, in the interest of time my remarks can be compressed, dealing only with the subject of possible expanded banking holding company participation in the activities of export trading companies and a brief summary of bankers' acceptances amendments.

H.R. 6016, the Bank Export Services Act was introduced by me on March 31, 1982, and cosponsored by 24 members of the Banking Committee. The bill was the subject of 3 full days of hearings with testimony from over 25 witnesses.

An amendment in the nature of a substitute was adopted by the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions, based on the comprehensive hearing record and extended consultations with the administration, the regulatory agencies and all other interested parties, by voice vote. As a result of this most deliberative process, the full committee ordered the bill reported by a 40-to-0 vote. The committee (H. Rept. 97-629) was filed on July 1.

Because of the fact that ETC legislation in both the 96th and 97th Congress has been referred to and considered by three committees (Banking, Judiciary, and Foreign Affairs), it is necessary at the outset to state the obvious that insofar as banking law provisions are concerned, H.R. 6016 with its accompanying report (H. Rept. 97-629) together with the debate now occurring on the provisions of H.R. 6016 will be the definitive legislative history of banking law amendments, notwithstanding inconsistent statement appearing elsewhere, purporting to interpret banking language.

In the 96th Congress, legislation was developed out of congressional studies of the American exporting experience. The goal of that legislation was to reduce regulatory and statutory barriers to exporting and to encourage more American businesses to become involved in international trade. The previous administration, as a part of its overall export policy, endorsed Export Trading Company (ETC) legislation similar to that now under consideration by the Congress. As evidence of widespread support for increasing this Nation's export trading capability, the House Export Task Force was established consisting of over 100 members representing every geographic region in the United States with the prime purpose of advocating legislation that supports American export trade. Three members of the House Banking Committee have served from its creation on the task force executive committee: former Banking Committee Chairman HENRY REUSS, now chairman of the Joint Economic Committee; STEPHEN L. NEAL, chairman of the Subcommittee on International Trade, Investment and Monetary Policy; and JOHN J. LAFALCE, one of the earliest House sponsors of ETC legislation.

Our committee's formal consideration of pending ETC legislation began in the 96th Congress after a series of informal discussions with representatives of the previous administration and all other interested parties, both proponents and opponents, to the pending Senate passed legislation (S. 2718). These discussions culminated in a hearing by the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions on September 30, 1980. On that occasion I expressed the subcommittee's concerns as follows:

> This Subcommittee's principal concerns are the key sections of the legislation which would, for the first time in the history of this Nation, grant commercial banks the authority to make equity investments in export trading companies. This is a giant step in the expansion of banking powers, and if this legislation is enacted it will mean a substantive breach in our longstanding policy against the mixing of commerce and banking powers.
> At a minimum, we should discover what the legislation will mean for: First, the traditional separation of banking and commerce; second, the safety and soundness of banking institutions; third, the competitive balance in the financial industry; and fourth, the promotion of exports.
> All of us on this Subcommittee, and I suspect throughout the Congress, are solidly behind the desire to increase exports of U.S. products. I would not take a back seat to anyone in the support of export promotion, but I also believe we must make certain that we are providing real remedies, not quick fixes that may create more dislocations in the economy.

In their consideration of trade matters, both the previous and the current administration as well as the Export Task Force have focused on a number of issues, including both trade incentives and disincentives. The Banking Committee, as a result of its legislative jurisdiction, has continued to direct its attention in the 97th Congress both to the issues of providing adequate bank financing for international trade activities as well as to a review of the impact of authorizing banking organization investments in ETC's on the long-standing policy of separating banking from commerce, discussed fully in the committee report on page 9. The traditional policy has been based on the belief that the integrity of the payments mechanism and the nature of competition for funds would be compromised if banks undertook the risks inherent in commercial and industrial ventures, or had conflicts of equity interest that involved favorable treatment for some customers, possibly bringing into serious question the banker's principal role as an impartial arbiter of credit. It should be noted at the outset that both the previous and the current administration continue to adhere to the principle of the separation of banking and commerce while supporting increased bank participation in ETC operations, including equity ownership. Deputy Secretary of the Treasury McNamar stated to the subcommittee the following:

> The administration feels that your bill maintains this traditional separation by authorizing export trading companies only as subsidiaries of bank holding companies. We wholeheartedly endorse this approach, since (1) with the proper safeguards it would not impose a significantly higher risk on the banks in the holding company group; and (2) with appropriate changes in banking laws, it would not give bank-affiliated ETCS an unfair competitive advantage over other business concerns competing for access to credit.

Subsequent to Senate passage of S. 734 on April 8, 1981, a number of informal staff discussions were held by the respective house committees to which S. 734 was referred—Banking, Judiciary, and Foreign Affairs. In an effort to assist the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, which evidenced a desire to move forward on companion bills to S. 734, I advised that subcommittee by letter of October 29, 1981, of the basic concepts which would ultimately govern this committee's response to the bank participation title in pending ETC legislation. That letter reaffirmed the separation principle.

In addition, the committee encouraged a series of discussions within the administration—Commerce, Treasury and the Office of Trade Representative—and between Commerce and the Federal Reserve Board in an effort to devise a realistic compromise insofar as bank investments in ETC's are concerned. As a result of the discussions and continuing action by both the Foreign Affairs and Judiciary Committees, H.R. 6016 was introduced and became the subject of subcommittee hearings on April 22, May 19, and May 25, 1982. Recognizing the importance of bankers acceptances in financing international trade and the need for modernization of the present Federal laws governing the use of bankers' acceptances, H.R. 6016 also incorporated the general scope of the provisions of H.R. 2438, introduced by Congressman DOUG BARNARD.

Following these hearings, and after consultation with members of the subcommittee, an amendment in the nature of a substitute was prepared that incorporated many of the suggestions offered by witnesses and subcommittee members. This amendment removed the authority for Edge Act corporations to invest in ETC's, at the suggestion of the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department. To enable the 10,000 or so small banks in the Nation which are not affiliated with a bank holding company to participate in the operations of an ETC, authority for bankers' banks to invest in ETC's was included in the substitute. The substitute prescribed a 60-day Federal Reserve disapproval period rather than an unlimited term approval period as in the introduced bill. Refinements were also included in the substitute concerning the limits on credit extensions to ETC's, the definition of an ETC, and the provisions governing bankers' acceptances. The substitute amendment itself was amended in the subcommittee markup to provide the Federal Reserve with additional authority to prevent unsafe and unsound speculative activity by an ETC, and to exempt State-chartered, non-Federal Reserve member banks from bankers' acceptance limits contained in H.R. 6016.

Finally, in section 3 of H.R. 6016, as amended, the committee substantially liberalized provisions of the Federal Reserve Act relating to bankers' acceptances. The Federal Reserve Board in its testimony before the subcommittee acknowledged the need for liberalization as follows:

> The board believes that it is both appropriate to expand the current aggregate limitation on the issuance of eligible bankers' acceptances and to apply those limits to the other entities with which member banks compete in the acceptance market. In applying the limitation on eligible bankers' acceptances to U.S. branches and agencies of foreign banks, the board believes that the appropriate measure of capital is the worldwide capital of the parent foreign bank.

The committee is indebted to the untiring efforts of our colleague, Congressman DOUG BARNARD, who advanced the cause of modernization of our present laws governing the use of bankers' acceptances by his introduction of H.R. 2438 incorporated as section 3 of H.R. 6016. Bankers' acceptances are important in the financing of international trade activities. This liberalization or deregulation supplements the bank holding company ETC provisions.

In conclusion, as I stated when the committee by a 40 to 0 vote reported to the floor H.R. 6016, "this legislation is a reasonable approach to resolving the twin concerns of insuring bank safety and soundness by limiting the breach in the separation of banking and commerce, and encouraging the flow of exports from this Nation." The concerns which the subcommittee expressed in 1980 have been met by taking the export trading company activity out of the bank and placing it into the bank holding company structure and insuring a significant regulatory presence during the application procedure and a continuing presence during the subsequent operations of those export trading company financed by bank holding companies or banker banks by the Federal Reserve Board.

Therefore, the Banking Committee believes it has succeeded in minimizing the risk of breaching the wall separating banking from commerce with the conviction that the remaining risk is clearly justified by the hope and indeed the expectancy that increased participation by bank holding companies will provide important assistance to small- and medium-sized businesses which produce goods for foreign consumption and in the process the increased international trade will produce significant economic activity and jobs domestically.

While no one can predict with certainty the effect this legislation will have on job creation, it has been conservatively estimated that the passage of export trading company legislation could, by 1985, increase employment by between 320,000 and 640,000 workers. The New England Institute estimated that the six New England States in 1980 alone generated over $10 billion in export sales, creating 135,000 jobs. The institute's survey conducted in 1981 estimated an increase of over 25 percent in sales for 57 percent of export trading company respondents with all respondents indicating increases of at least 5 percent in sales. Thus, the potential effect of export trading company legislation in New England alone, utilizing the lowest of these estimates, could mean an additional $500 million in sales, creating over 10,000 additional jobs.

I urge adoption of H.R. 6016.

□ 1410

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MINISH).

Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of passage of the Bank Export Services Act.

Since World War II, we have all been aware of the rapid growth that took place and changes that followed. We went from a marketplace dominated by domestic manufacturers to one in which consumer demands are currently for low-cost foreign-supplied items. Our own domestic manufacturing has slowed almost to a halt.

In order to regenerate and revitalize this country's economy, it is necessary that we take steps to increase our production and to expand that production into new markets. It is my contention that with the passage of the Bank Export Services Act we will be getting back on the track of creating new jobs for those deserving citizens of this great country.

It is well known that small- and medium-sized businesses create most of the jobs that employ our citizenry. This legislation will allow and encourage those small- and medium-sized firms to engage in business ventures in foreign markets.

This bill does not affect the ability of individuals and organizations to form export trading companies. In fact, it is the intention of this legislation to generate local and State government entities, and port authorities to innovate necessary and developmental export programs keyed to their local, State, and regional needs.

I urge my colleagues to vote favorably on this bill.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join the able chairman of the committee in support for this bill. I am pleased that this bill is finally before the membership. I have found it somewhat disturbing it has languished for so long in the House for no apparent reason. It has virtually no opposition, it costs nothing, and it may have a positive effect on the U.S. export position some day. I use the word "may" advisedly.

While I am generally happy with the current form of the bill, I feel compelled to make a couple of comments. This bill has presented major U.S. banks with a significant victory. Not only do we allow them to venture into a new form of business that is potentially very profitable, but at the same time, we have bored a new hole in the wall that has traditionally separated banking from commerce. Our committee approved this weakening of the Glass-Steagall principle for one reason only—to promote exports.

Mr. Speaker, while what we do here today is very important, I am afraid there might be a tendency on the part of both the administration and Congress to rest on their laurels—waiting for a huge surge in exports that may never come. There should be no mistake about what we do here today. This bill cannot be viewed as a comprehensive new export policy, despite successive administration attempts to clothe it as such. Nor should we think that we have solved any of the other significant problems that have inhibited U.S. exports—problems such as unfair export credit competition, inadequate financing for Eximbank, lackluster export promotion services by administration agencies, inadequate enforcement of existing trade sanctions, foreign government subsidies to high technology industries, and so forth.

In my view, it would be a sad mistake if we stop here, and claim we have solved our export problem. While I think all parties deserve credit for putting together a good bill, particularly the chairman of the committee, I feel we should now redouble our efforts to address the important problems that remain—problems that are increasingly making us a second-rate trading nation.

Mr. Speaker, I see on the House floor many Members who were responsible for this, not only over a period of months but over years, in order to reach the moment we are experiencing at this time.

I especially want to compliment the chairman of our committee, who made a decision earlier in the year that this would be a priority business before our committee. It was with this emphasis that he took the legislation that was presented to him, worked very hard, and, on a nonpartisan basis, arrived at this conclusion.

So first and foremost, I think, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of our full committee deserves full support for the action that we hope we will take here later on today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON) for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, a bill very similar in concept to this one was passed by the other body earlier in the session by a vote of 93 to 0.

In the last Congress, a bill which had a similar concept passed the other body by a vote of 77 to 0. So there is much support for the idea and purpose behind this legislation.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman has been cautions and deliberate about moving the bill through the committee, and I do feel that in the process he has helped us develop a better bill with which to go to conference.

There are a couple of places where I think the bill could be improved, but I believe it to be more important today that we expedite consideration of the bill and do urge passage of the bill in its present form.

As a result of extensive negotiations involving Members on both sides of the aisle, representatives of various departments of Government, and agencies, and representatives of banks seeking to enter the trading company business, this bill does represent a substantial improvement over the version which was originally passed so quickly by the other body.

Legislation to permit banking organizations to invest in export trading companies makes good sense, to my way of thinking. I believe that export trading companies can be useful as a means of improving the export performance of the United States.

I believe this bill can be made more workable and I expressed that thought during full committee markup.

Toward that end, I offered one amendment which was agreed to which added the words "managerial and financial resources" to the criteria which the Federal Reserve Board will use in considering applications for permits.

For the record, I believe the limitation on the ability of a bank holding company to finance an export trading company subsidiary is a restriction which is counterproductive. I would suggest that we make applicable the existing provisions of section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act to extensions of credit by a bank to the bank holding company in the case of export trade in the same manner as extensions of credit to support any other nonbanking activity. I do not believe it is necessary to establish a separate procedure governing bank financing to export trading compaines, and I am concerned that this special provision might impede bank participation in export trading companies because it will require new procedures on the part of investing bank holding companies and new interpretations by the Federal Reserve.

I feel the definitions of export trading company and export trade services to allow export trading companies more leeway to import in order to improve their ability to increase exports is desirable.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize that this is a good bill and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), one of the original sponsors and pioneers on this legislation.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives has an opportunity to endorse legislation which will provide a firm basis for expanding U.S. exports. As the original House sponsor of export trading company legislation, I have welcomed rapidly growing interest in the potential of this new opportunity, and I have been gratified by the active support for trading company legislation. Over 130 of my colleagues have cosponsored my bill, H.R. 1648, and I am sure they all share my enthusiastic support for H.R. 6016, the legislation we consider today.

When I first introduced my original bill during the 96th Congress, I was motivated in large part by concern about our deteriorating balance of trade. U.S. trade balances had been in deficit since 1975, with participating large deficits in 1977 and 1978. It seemed clear at that time that poor export performance was contributing substantially to the deficits, and that increased exports offered one of the more effective ways to remedy the problem. Those of us who looked closely at the structure of U.S. trade and the structural impediments to increased exports were struck by the success of our competitors, most notably the huge Japanese trading companies. Operating in virtually every country in the world, financed in part through strong ties to Japanese banks, and experienced in alternative trade mechanisms such as barter and three-way trading, the Japanese trading companies had grown enormously. In fact, they were becoming increasingly important as export agents for U.S.-produced goods. From the beginning, we used the Japanese trading companies as a partial model for ETC legislation, but maintained careful attention to the different business and legal framework within which our own institutions must operate.

I reintroduced export trading company legislation during the early days of this Congress, with immediate bipartisan support. It was clear that the need for stimulating exports had, if anything, increased. The economic downturn had constricted domestic markets and a stronger dollar had made our exports more expensive—and thus less competitive—on world markets. Unfortunately, those same forces remain today. While it cannot fully compensate for them, export trading legislation has become an important response to the pressures for new protectionist measures in this country.

The new administration accepted the need for export trading company legislation and endorsed my bill, H.R. 1648. The Senate moved swiftly on almost identical legislation, S. 734, and on April 8, 1981, passed it unanimously by a vote of 93 to 0. In the House, H.R. 1648 and similar bills had been referred to three separate committees, and each proceeded independently. But none could ignore the growing consensus, both in Congress and within the business community, that export trading company legislation was an idea whose time had come. Our cause was bolstered by independent studies such as the one undertaken by the New England Congressional Institute, it showed widespread support for the legislation within the business and banking communities and suggested that we would see immediate response to the new opportunities provided by the legislation. Other studies forecasted that the legislation might provide even more new jobs than originally anticipated, an important consideration during this period of escalating unemployment. Growing awareness of the legislation was immediately translated into appeals for prompt congressional action.

On March 31 of this year, the chairman of the House Banking Committee submitted his own proposal for the banking related elements of export trading company legislation. I was among the original cosponsors of his bill, H.R. 6016. The chairman's approach differed little from the banking title of my own bill, and his bill included an additional export stimulus in a provision increasing the limits on bankers' acceptances, which provide a means of guaranteeing payment for goods being shipped.

During extensive hearings this spring, the committee considered additional changes and refinements suggested by a broad cross-section of interested parties. We heard from exporters, potential exporters, existing trading companies, banks, and bank regulators. Almost every witness suggested improvements designed to make the legislation more attractive to his own organization, and it was left to the committee to sift through proposed changes. In its final form, H.R. 6016 represents careful study, cooperation, and compromise. Each element of the bill was subject to the same two tests: Will it make export trading companies more effective at meeting our export goals; and will it be workable within the legal and regulatory structures of U.S. banking.

The goal of this legislation has been clear from the beginning: Increasing exports. During the hearings, I restated my own conviction that export success, not bank profits, should be our objective. Certainly that will be the standard by which the legislation will be judged by a public eager for both the new jobs and the economic boost that exports can provide.

Export trading companies have existed in this country for years, but their growth and expansion have been severely limited by inadequate capital. Although several large corporations, including Sears and General Electric, have announced the formation of new trading company subsidiaries, their impact, at least initially, will be limited. Formation of corporate sponsored ETC's has given new impetus to our efforts to open the door to banking investments in trading companies, but I doubt we will ever see an American replica of the Japanese trading giants; it would be too inconsistent with our own business and legal traditions. I am convinced that bank investment in trading companies can contribute substantially by helping more U.S. firms to become exporters.

In addition to new capital, bank participation has the potential to improve the efficiency of trading company operations by making available the existing expertise and infrastructure possessed by large international banks. Contacts with potential customers, familiarity with export financing and currency transactions, and better means of evaluating the creditworthiness of foreign customers will all be facilitated by their worldwide networks of offices and affiliates. Because we felt that exploiting the recognition and goodwill associated with existing banking activities would stimulate exports, the committee chose to permit holding companies to use their own names for trading company affiliates.

In other cases, regional banks may choose to build upon their relationships with local business in order to encourage new export activities. Risk, uncertainty, and lack of familiarity with export procedures have all discouraged many small and medium sized firms from developing export markets, but a well run trading company could substantially reduce those hurdles. By linking with existing trading companies, regional banks can provide the necessary expertise and financing to make exporting attractive to many more firms. In addition, because of their familiarity with the financial and management resources of local firms regional banks are uniquely equipped to help small companies meet the challenges of export-related growth.

In addressing the direct objective of increasing U.S. exports, H.R. 6016 also represents an important step in the modernization of banking law. Authorization for bank investment in trading companies constitutes a significant relaxation of the historic legal separation of banking and commerce, and the committee carefully reviewed the terms and conditions of such investments. This legislation is designed to preserve necessary safeguards for the safety and soundness of our Nation's banking institutions, while permitting bank holding companies to make better use of their substantial resources.

On a case-by-case basis, the committee relies on the substantial supervisory and regulatory resources of the Federal Reserve System to protect banks against the effects of unsound practices by their parent holding companies. At the same time, the committee also wished to insure that those resources not be applied to blocking legitimate investments, a possibility introduced by the Fed's open scepticism about the legislation. Accordingly, H.R. 6016 directs that the Fed must be advised in writing at least 60 days in advance of a bank holding company's proposed investment in an ETC and provides for an additional 30 days review period under defined circumstances. Absent a formal notice of disapproval from the Fed, the holding company is authorized to go ahead with the investment. Specific grounds for disapproval are outlined in the legislation, and it was the committee's intention that Fed review be confined to legitimate questions of bank safety, not unrelated activities of either the holding company or its other subsidiaries. The legislation itself protects against excessive risk by limiting direct investment to 5 percent of the holding company's consolidated capital and surplus; further, loans from the holding company and all its other subsidiaries may not total more than 10 percent of the holding company's consolidated capital and surplus.

The bill approved by the Banking Committee defines export trading companies as organizations operated exclusively for the purpose of exporting or facilitating the export of goods and services made in the United States. Our choice of the word "exclusively" reflects a deliberate intention to focus the activities of ETC's on exports rather than imports, but H.R. 6016 clearly authorizes such importing activities as are necessary to facilitate exports and promote ETC operations in foreign countries. ETC's are also authorized to make product modifications necessary to prepare U.S.-made goods for foreign markets and to take title to goods being exported. An important element of trading company legislation is the explicit recognition of services as a distinct class of exports. In fact, a growing proportion of our export revenues comes from the services sector.

In its final form, H.R. 6016 represents the culmination of a long evolutionary process, a process marked by long discussion and careful study. We have fine-tuned my original proposal, and the resulting legislation will be an important stimulus to our economy. Thousands of U.S. companies will now have access to a complete range of export assistance, and many will find new prosperity in foreign markets. My own involvement with this legislation has been very satisfying, and I am pleased with the results of our efforts. The Banking Committee can be proud of our success in drafting such excellent legislation. I encourage the full House to support us today.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. McKINNEY).

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, today the House has an opportunity to take a major step to expand further foreign markets for American businesses. The Bank Export Services Act, H.R. 6016, is an important weapon in the international trade battle and helps U.S. businessmen compete more effectively abroad.

We have heard much said recently about the intrusion of foreign companies in the U.S. economy. The influx of imported cars, foreign steel, imported electronics, and a variety of other products have heightened the awareness of the American people to the rules of the international trading game. A number of bills have been introduced which are openly protectionist in nature and which cry for further retaliation from our trading partners. That approach, in my opinion, serves no positive purpose and, in fact, is contradictory to our free market philosophy.

Export trading companies have long been a part of American commerce. However, there has been traditionally a veil drawn between banking and commerce which has prevented banks from becoming involved in export trading services. When this separation was imposed in the mid-19 century, it addressed business conditions which existed at that time. Today's conditions require a new set of laws and regulations. I believe H.R. 6016 is a well-drafted proposal to meet the current needs of American bankers and businessmen.

I commend Chairman ST GERMAIN, the Banking Committee ranking member, Mr. STANTON, and Mr. WYLIE, ranking members of the Financial Institutions Subcommittee, for their efforts in bringing this bill to the floor. The legislation represents a bipartisan effort to permit our businessmen access to the talents and capital of our banking community to compete more effectively in international markets.

I am aware that a great deal of interest exists in my part of the country for this legislation. Small- and medium-sized bankers view this as an opportunity to expand into a natural market for their services and one which the major banks are not necessarily able to cover. I have been contacted by many smaller businessmen who are eager to have access to the information about foreign markets that export trading companies can offer.

Under the protections that H.R. 6016 contains, it is logical that a marriage of bankers' expertise and businesses seeking new markets be consummated. In developing this bill, our committee carefully considered potential abuses and risks. We then included prohibitions against speculation and other abusive activities. There are adequate safeguards in this bill to assure that bank holding companies and bankers' banks which become involved in export trading companies will not have their traditional safety and soundness jeopardized.

The Bank Export Services Act will help expand U.S. exports. It is a positive step to meet the challenge for international markets. We should not retreat behind protectionist barriers which will lead only to more retaliation abroad. We have the opportunity to permit American businesses more freedom to compete in the world market using the same methods as our trading partners do. The administration wants this bill: American business wants this bill. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 6016 as a message to the world, and the American business community that we mean business but in the American way.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware (Mr. EVANS), whose leadership has been greatly appreciated on this legislation.

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON).

Mr. Speaker, American companies must be given the tools to compete effectively with our trading partners. Legislation on the House floor today recognizes this important need.

Over the past two decades, the U.S. share of world trade has been steadily declining. This is particularly unfortunate since it is clear that many American products could be very competitive in the world market. At stake are thousands upon thousands of jobs for American men and women.

Our Nation's small- and medium-sized companies are the ones which create most of this country's jobs, and it is also these firms whose foreign sales are now impeded by a lack of operating capital and financing. Legislation to facilitate the development of export trading companies would do a great deal to correct this situation, resulting in a significant increase in American jobs and an expanded U.S. share of total world markets.

I urge my colleagues who will participate in the conference on export trading company legislation to complete their work as quickly as possible so that this valuable export tool will be available to provide a much-needed increase in the number of American jobs.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), a former member of our committee.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I spoke a moment ago on the companion bill which will, along with the bill that is now before us, become the House version of an Export Trading Companies Act, and noted at the time that it was not a perfect bill. In fact, it, or they, substantially lack some of the advantages of the bill in the Senate. I think those statements are even more appropriate regarding this bill produced by our Banking Committee.

One of the problems here is that the Committee on Banking has apparently reversed the rather strong statement of the Committee on Foreign Relations with respect to import activities. Almost everyone in the trading business knows that imports often serve as a great enhancement to export stimulation. I think this bill generally does not provide the flexibility that exists in the Senate version. Flexibility in import activity is something that should be improved in the conference when it is held. Obviously, these ETC's need maximum flexibility to perform in the most effective way.

There is also a little more regulation in this bill than most people who are interested in expanding trade would like to see. I am nervous about overregulation, particularly by the Fed in this instance.

Nevertheless, I do not want to be ungrateful for a splendid effort on the part of the Banking Committee. Something is better than nothing.

I only hope that, having had a taste of providing a very modest incentive for exports that in the future the committee will see that it has acted with undue restraint, and will then proceed to expand export opportunities in the future.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. PATTERSON).

□ 1430

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Bank Export Services Act, H.R. 6016. This bill represents a strong step by the Congress in the area of export promotion. There is little doubt that there are many small- and medium-sized firms throughout the country that have the products to sell overseas but not the means to do so. The costs are simply too high for a small company to go it alone. Meanwhile, our trade deficits continue to grow. H.R. 1799 and H.R. 6016 represent a significant first step in exploiting the untapped export potential of the United States.

The excuse that abnormally high prices for imported oil used to explain away and rationalize our huge trade deficits no longer holds. The plain truth is that we are being outdone by our competitors. The Japanese, as everyone knows, have been particularly successful. Much of their success is based upon the proficiency of export trading companies. It is time for the United States to take hold of this concept and run with it.

At the present time, 1 percent of our companies produce 80 percent of our exports. Small- and medium-sized companies, although often possessing the desire and productive capacity to export, simply do not have the financial means and expertise to do so. An export trading company would provide the whole range of export services from financing to marketing studies to actually selling products overseas. The result, increased sales for U.S. companies and a significant increase in employment.

Banking concerns will play a key role in the formation of ETC's because they will be permitted to invest in these companies. Banks with international expertise already have many of the support facilities, foreign business contacts and marketing know-how which are prerequisities for successful exporting. Additionally, their domestic commercial activities bring them into constant contact with companies which to date have ignored export markets yet produce goods and services which are highly marketable abroad. U.S. banking institutions are vital to the success of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 6016. American business and labor will be the winners.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, approval of H.R. 6016, the Bank Export Services Act, is an important step toward increasing the exportation of goods manufactured in the United States. Successful implementation of this legislation will increase demand for American products and provide new employment opportunities for American workers.

At a time of the highest unemployment since the Depression, it is critically important that the Federal Government facilitate job creation. However, it is my concern that the amount of credit needed to finance substantially increased exports not come at the expense of the credit-sensitive industries already established in our economy. The Federal Reserve should recognize that the legislation will increase the demand for credit, and it should move to accommodate this new credit demand without reducing the supply of credit to other sectors of the economy. Specifically, the Federal Reserve should accommodate this new demand for credit and if necessary institute monetary policy changes which will expand the availability of credit.

It is necessary for Congress to encourage exports which will result in increased employment opportunities for American workers. For this to be successful, there will be an increased demand for credit by export trading companies and American manufacturers of exported products. However, it would be poor public policy for the Federal Government to encourage American exports and encourage an increased demand for credit at the expense of the American workers employed in other credit-sensitive industries.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARNARD).

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARNARD).

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNARD. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, one of the most commanding needs in our Nation today is to encourage small- and medium-sized businesses to export, and those needs are met in part by this bill.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I note with satisfaction that on page 9 of the report accompanying H.R. 6016 it is stated that this bill in no way affects the ability of such organizations as agricultural cooperatives to organize or invest in export trading companies. However, I would like to clarify some language in the bill which could possibly be construed as prejudicial to agricultural cooperatives.

On page 4, lines 10 and 11, and again on page 7, lines 5 and 6, the bill states that export trading companies—and I quote—"may not engage in manufacturing or agricultural production activities."

The National Council of Farmer Cooperatives has written me asking if the agriculture production prohibition does not cast some uncertainty on the eligibility of farmer cooperatives as trading company partners.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask the chairman, in his judgment, is this the case?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a reply?

Mr. BARNARD. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Absolutely and very definitely not. H.R. 6016 says an export trading company may not engage in agricultural production. The activities of an agricultural cooperative which wants to organize or invest in an ETC are immaterial. Even if an agricultural cooperative were engaged in extensive farming operations, it would still be completely eligible, under the terms of H.R. 6016, to organize or invest in export trading companies.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) and I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARNARD) for yielding.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, this is a significant day for those of us in the House, for today we begin the long-overdue process of adapting our financial system to the changing marketplace.

Much of the credit for this beginning must go to the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. ST GERMAIN. He has had the vision to see the urgent need for this bill, and to shape the legislation to meet the actual competitive needs of our financial institution. The chairman has worked with all of us on the committee, and the result is a truly nonpartisan package that will significantly enhance our export capability.

Export trading companies will be major vehicles for presenting American goods and services to the world markets. Although American companies have always exported, we have not had any real policy to encourage exports. Instead, we have often inadvertently made it more difficult to export. As a result, our overseas sales, while significant, have not been as great as they should be. Many commercial opportunities that would have provided jobs for the unemployed, new industries for blighted areas, and incentives to innovate because there was no vehicle for smaller firms to use to increase foreign sales.

Export trading companies will fill this void. They will be able to provide services to the smaller and medium-sized exporter that are currently available only to huge corporations. Utilizing the expertise and foreign presence of banks, they will be able to package export services ranging from marketing surveys to finding buyers, from arranging shipping to product modification, and from financing payment to arranging barter transactions. In all cases, these are services that presently are available only to those exporters who are able to devote the time and money to search them out.

I am proud to say that H.R. 6016 contains a provision that I originally advanced, expanding the limitations on bankers' acceptances. Since Congress created the U.S. acceptance market in 1913, they have become an essential part of financing trade. However, the law this body passed almost 70 years ago have not been significantly revised since then.

One of the major revisions has been to place all banks, foreign and domestic, on an equal footing and under the same legal requirements. This means that a foreign-owned bank doing business in this country will not have an unfair advantage in this market, as they too will be covered by this law. For the first time, they will also be subject to the limitations of this act, which will be based on their worldwide capital and surplus, just as it is for a domestic bank.

Under the language of this bill, acceptances will for the first time be available to smaller and medium-sized exporters. In the past, the restrictions on the amount of acceptances that could be issued limited them to only the largest exporters, but in this legislation, we have increased the amount that can be outstanding. As a result, smaller firms will, for the first time, have access to this low-cost form of export finance.

Even more importantly, for the first time, we are allowing smaller banks to offer their customers access to export financing. They will be able to both purchase shares of any acceptances issued in behalf of their larger customers, and to originate them for their smaller customers through the mechanism of acceptances.

This committee has worked long and hard to come up with the best way to give these banks and exporters access to this type of trade financing, and has allowed them to be participated through other banks. We have been very specific about how these acceptances should be written, and have come to the conclusion that only the name of the issuing bank needs to be placed on the acceptance.

We do not believe that it is necessary for the names of the particpating banks to be placed on the face of the document because they do not have the responsibility to repay an acceptance presented by a secondary market buyer.

However, there is an unqualified obligation to repay the originating bank. In standard practice in areas of the country where participations in acceptances have been sold for some time, the participation agreement states that if the acceptance is not liquidated by the bank's customer, the account the participating bank holds with the originator may be debited for the amount of the participation without further notice. This practice was instituted after lengthy consultations with two of the major accounting firms in the country.

As such, the issuing bank is substituting the risk of the participant for that of the borrower, and in theory, the participant is at risk regardless of the actions of the borrower. In practice, since almost all acceptances are secured by an actual transaction, there is minimal risk to both the participant and the issuing bank.

This is similar to the procedure that has been followed for many years in the case of a standby letter of credit that is participated to another bank. The participating bank does not have to issue a separate letter of credit to the originating bank, but it does have the legal obligation to cover the debt up to the extent of its participation if the borrower is unable to pay. This has been standard banking practice for some time, and participations in acceptances will follow a similar pattern.

In no case should standard credit judgment not be exercised in the case of an acceptance on the part of either the originating bank or any participating banks, but when such judgment is used, these will be among the highest quality financial instruments available to banks.

Acceptances are the safest form of trade finance, since almost all of them are secured by an actual transaction. In virtually all acceptances currently outstanding, title to the goods in the underlying transaction are held by the issuing bank until the credit is liquidated. Financial markets rate acceptances as among the highest quality financial instruments issued, and they are highly sought after in the secondary market. I am delighted that this low-cost, low-risk form of trade finance will now be available to all exporters, regardless of size.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a major beginning not only in expanding foreign trade, but in modernizing our system of financial institutions. However, much else remains to be done in the months ahead. For far too long, banks and thrifts have been unable to give their customers the services they need and desire because of outdated laws of another era.

As a result, literally billions of dollars are going into unregulated funds and investments. It is not a matter of our banks not being willing to change, but a matter of laws that limit them, or force them into unregulated forms of services at a greater risk to the customer. I expect that in the coming months and years we will continue to examine these limitations, and will revise them to meet today's needs and tomorrow's opportunities.

This act, H.R. 6016, is a major step to both increasing foreign trade and to allowing financial institutions to compete, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARNARD. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARNARD) for his statement, and I would like to take this opportunity to express my deep appreciation to the many members of the committee who worked so diligently with me and to our staffs who worked together in a very harmonious manner to bring this legislation to the floor.

It is truly a bipartisan piece of legislation, and I want to publicly thank our ranking minority member, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MCKINNEY) and their staff for their cooperation and assistance in seeing to it that we come up with a piece of legislation that is, indeed, a product of all of the members of our committee on both sides of the aisle. I feel that this is legislation, as the gentleman has just stated, which is a precursor to some additional legislation that will modernize our financial institutions, both the thrifts and the commercials, to deal with the problems of the future. It will deal not only with the problems of the future but will serve the needs of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. MYERS).

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time.

On page 4 of the bill the committee has spelled out the requirements and under what conditions disapproval might be necessary, and among those is undue concentration of resources. The section goes ahead and spells out just what those conditions might be.

But the section deals with decreased or unfair competition. This concerns me very much. It seems to me like we are giving a lot of discretion to the Federal Reserve Board and are not really spelling out just what is unfair competition or decreased competition.

□ 1440

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) in his additional views has talked somewhat about this. Did the committee express concern about granting so much authority to the Fed without spelling out just what is unfair competition?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. The gentleman has raised a good point. It is one that I tried to address a little while ago in my statement.

On page 3 of the bill it says—

The Board may disapprove any proposed investment only if—(I) such disapproval is necessary to prevent unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, decreased or unfair competition, or conflicts of interest; (II) the financial or managerial resources of the companies involved warrant disapproval . . .

There is a combination of provisions there which do confer rather broad authority and broad discretion upon the Federal Reserve.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), I might say, and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MCKINNEY) raised this issue during committee deliberations that the Fed might refuse to approve applications or impose excessive regulations upon export trading companies.

On page 11 of the report, it is stated that—

With the safeguards enumerated in the bill and with prompt Federal Reserve review of proposed investments, ETC's can be established that will provide these benefits to the public. . . . (Emphasis mine.)

It is clear that the Federal Reserve is expected to review applications promptly, and I believe it is clear from the legislative history that Congress means these applications to be approved unless a condition warranting disapproval exists.

What we did not want to do, and the gentleman has touched on this good point, is to make the review process so difficult that an applicant will have to spend all of its time in going through the application process and not be able to devote its efforts to promoting exports.

Mr. MYERS. Exactly.

Mr. WYLIE. We want to give them a chance to demonstrate that they can be an effective export trading company.

So, as I say, I offered one amendment which was approved during the deliberations in the committee, and withheld two more, on behalf of which I will be prepared to work during conference, which embody the gentleman's concern, that the Federal Reserve should not be delegated plenary authority to approve or disapprove applications at its discretion, or based upon the length of a foot of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

I think it is very important that we do not hamstring export trading companies with unnecessary regulations so that they cannot go ahead and perform the function which this legislation was designed to facilitate.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman states in his additional views that the Fed asked for broader authority than the committee gave them in this bill, but yet it seems like in this one section, decreased or unfair competition, there is no spelling out, not a definition of what is a decrease of competition or unfair competition. It concerns me very much that you are leaving a rather large door open for Fed discretion as to which ones they will apply this rule to, and even have different rules under different cases.

I have been watching Fed for a number of years and I know there is a growing concern among other Members that we are giving Fed a lot more authority than possibly the intent of Congress ever was.

So I am pleased that the gentleman is going to offer this amendment in conference, and I wish him well with it, because I think this is something we need.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for raising the point and we will try to address that in conference, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me on that point?

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. In the remaining time, I do yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN).

Mr. ST GERMAIN. On the point just being discussed, indeed we do not expand the power of the Fed. As a matter of fact, we said to the Fed, "You cannot just take all of the time in the World to make a decision, but you have to make a decision within a stated period of time."

We make it very clear, however, that the provisions of change H.R. 6016 apply only to ETC's. The Bank Holding Company Act, and present procedures thereunder in so far as other activities of bank holding companies are concerned are in no way affected.

The concerns of the gentleman are the concerns of our committee as well.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. I do not disagree with the gentleman but yet the Board, within 60 days, could arbitrarily say an applicant would be unfair competition and would not have to justify it because you leave a rather large door and you do not define it.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Absent the change, the Board could conceivably hold the application indefinitely before reaching a determination. Indeed, what we have done is to say to the Fed "you must act within a 60-day period."

Very frankly, the way it is written, in my discussions with Chairman Paul Volcker, he made it clear that he is unhappy with this because it in fact H.R. 6016 is a restriction of existing Fed powers. Indeed, it is more liberal and is designed to promote and to assist the formation of ETC's.

Mr. MYERS. If the gentleman will yield one more time, what concerns me is the Board, after this bill becomes law, can make the same decision. The only thing we are doing is expediting that same decision and we make it within 60 days instead of 6 years, as the gentleman gave the example.

But they could still come to the same conclusion.

Really, what protection does the applicant have, what recourse does he have once the Board has arbitrarily made a decision?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. He has recourse to the courts as is the present case.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Let me say, since the gentleman brings up an excellent point and time is limited, and the point is one with which the committee has been very familiar, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) said, the minute we get to conference we will push this point a little bit more.

I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. MYERS. I think that we are the rulemaking power right here and the policymaking should be done here and the Board should be the implementers of the policy and the rules. This is what I am concerned about.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARNARD. The guidelines are already in place that the Fed uses as far as unfair competitive practices are concerned. I am sure that they would apply in this case as they already apply in other unfair competitive situations.

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this much needed legislation. At a time when America's performance in the international trade market is not good, this bill will help return us to the levels of trade we once maintained, by making it possible for small- and medium-sized businesses to enter into overseas trade.

The economic prowess of small business is well-known and well-documented. Small business is highly innovative, competitive, a great cost saver and the best creator of employment opportunities. We need to unleash this economic force on foreign markets in order to improve our export performance. This market also provides as excellent opportunity for expansion in this important sector of the economy.

Small- and medium-sized firms face a lengthy series of obstacles if they attempt to sell their products overseas. For a small firm, it is prohibitively expensive to make arrangements for financing, licenses and permits, shipping and to solve all the other problems which come with exporting. Export trading companies serve businesses by making these arrangements. A small firm working with an export trading company can sell their products overseas almost as easily as selling in the next State.

Unfortunately, current law imposes a number of restrictions which severely limit the ability of export trading companies to function. In particular, there are antitrust laws and banking regulations which have created disadvantages for American firms. Our European and Japanese counterparts have fully developed the export trading company concept, which leaves our businesses at a disadvantage.

H.R. 6016 corrects this problem. It would terminate Federal regulations that prohibit Federal banking institutions from investing in export trading companies. This would enable these companies to strengthen their financial capacity and obtain the "international expertise" they need. Additionally, the bill resolves antitrust concerns which have arisen. By enacting this measure, export trading companies will be able to flourish and provide an important stimulus to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6016 is an important step toward the development of export trade for smaller firms. It is well drafted legislation which protects against abuses or possible harm to the banking community. We need to enact this proposal to encourage business growth in this time of economic hardship. I urge its approval by the House.●

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the bill to expand export trading companies.

A modern export policy is essential to the economic well being of the United States. Our major trading partners have known this for quite some time and have used the device of export trading companies to enhance their positions in the world marketplace. It is not too late for the United States to profit by their example, but time is of the essence.

That is why this legislation is so important. Throughout the hearing process, it became evident that the United States could improve its position as a major trading nation if it had certain tools, mainly the ability to broaden its base for the sale of goods abroad. Only a small percentage of American manufacturing firms are involved in exports at the present time, and an even smaller number of them account for almost 85 percent of U.S. exports.

It is difficult for many small- and medium-size businesses to enter the export market because they do not have access to adequate financing, market analysis, documentation, and after-sale services readily available to them bundled together in a one-stop facility.

The potential for increasing the number of American jobs through exports is enormous. At a time when unempoyment in the United States is at an unconscionable level, surely we must do all that we can to open every avenue for increased employment. Chase Econometrics estimated that export trading companies could increase employment by as much as 640,000 jobs by 1985.

Bank participation in export trading companies is an absolute must. Not allowing bankers' banks and bank holding companies to become export partners would be a terrible mistake. The legislation reported favorably by the House Banking Committee has been carefully crafted to take into account the traditional separation of banking and commerce. The bill maintains the necessary safety and soundness principles to which our financial institutions must subscribe.

It is a good bill and it merits the favorable consideration of every Member of this body who is concerned about American jobs and the balance of trade.●

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the House is finally getting an opportunity today to vote on the Bank Export Services Act, H.R. 6016, which will permit the formation of export trading companies.

It has taken a long time to get this legislation through the appropriate House committees, but I believe that we have produced a good bill.

Mr. Speaker, export trading companies can be highly effective in marketing U.S. goods and services throughout the world. That, in turn, will strengthen our own economy and provide badly needed jobs. Each $1 billion in U.S. exports can support an estimated 32,000 jobs in this country.

At present, only 1 percent of American companies are responsible for 80 percent of our exports. Only large businesses have the resources to sell abroad. But with the formation of export trading companies, many small- and medium-sized businesses will be able to seek foreign markets by enlisting the marketing expertise of the ETC's.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6016 allows for limited participation by banks in export trading companies. Thus, U.S. banks will be able to offer international marketing, financing, and management skills to these new companies. At the same time, the bill limits the role of banks in ETC's in a way that should prevent excessive risk-taking by the banks, thus attempting to assure the soundness of our financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, the health and continued growth of the American economy will depend, in part, on our success in competing on the world market. This legislation can do much to make us successful. I hope that all my colleagues will support it.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6016, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to permit bank holding companies and bankers' banks to invest in export trading companies and to reduce restrictions on trade financing provided by financial institutions."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I aks unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

FACILITATING FORMATION AND OPERATION OF EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 734) to encourage exports by facilitating the formation and operation of export trading companies, export trade associations, and the expansion of export trade services generally, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to pose an inquiry to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI).

Could the gentleman tell us whether or not he has consulted with the leadership and the whip on this side of the aisle with respect to this request?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this request has the agreement of the leadership on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 734

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Export Trading Company Act of 1981".

FINDINGS

SEC. 102. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) tens of thousands of American companies produce exportable goods or services but do not engage in exporting;

(2) although the United States is the world's leading agricultural exporting nation, many farm products are not marketed as widely and effectively abroad as they could be through producer-owned export trading companies;

(3) exporting requires extensive specialized knowledge and skills and entails additional, unfamiliar risks which present costs for which smaller producers cannot realize economies of scale;

(4) export trade intermediaries, such as trading companies, can achieve economies of scale and acquire expertise enabling them to export goods and services profitably, at low per-unit cost to producers;

(5) the United States lacks well-developed export trade intermediaries to package export trade services at reasonable prices (exporting services are fragmented into a multitude of separate functions; companies attempting to offer comprehensive export trade services lack financial leverage to reach a significant portion of potential United States exporters);

(6) State and local government activities which initiate, facilitate, or expand export of products and services are an important and irreplaceable source for expansion of total United States exports, as well as for experimentation in the development of innovative export programs keyed to local, State, and regional economic needs;

(7) the development of export trading companies in the United States has been hampered by insular business attitudes and by Government regulations; and

(8) if United States export trading companies are to be successful in promoting United States exports and in competing with foreign trading companies, they must be able to draw on the resources, expertise, and knowledge of the United States banking system, both in the United States and abroad.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to increase United States exports of products and services, particularly by small, medium-size, and minority concerns, by encouraging more efficient provision of export trade services to American producers and suppliers.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 103. (a) As used in this Act—

(1) the term "export trade" means trade or commerce in goods produced in the United States or services produced in the United States, and exported, or in the course of being exported, from the United States to any foreign nation;

(2) the term "goods produced in the United States" means tangible property manufactured, produced, grown, or extracted in the United States, the cost of the imported raw materials and components thereof shall not exceed 50 per centum of the sales price;

(3) the term "services produced in the United States" includes, but is not limited to accounting, amusement, architectural, automatic data processing, business, communications, construction franchising and licensing, consulting, engineering, financial, insurance, legal, management, repair, tourism, training, and transportation services, not less than 50 per centum of the sales or billings of which is provided by United States citizens or is otherwise attributable to the United States;

(4) the term "export trade services" includes, but is not limited to, consulting, international market research, advertising, marketing, insurance, product research and design, legal assistance, transportation, including trade documentation and freight forwarding, communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, and financing, when provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States;

(5) the term "export trading company" means a company, whether operated for profit or as a nonprofit organization, which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated principally for the purposes of—

(A) exporting goods or services produced in the United States; and

(B) facilitating the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services;

(6) the term "United States" means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

(7) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce; and

(8) the term "company" means any corporation, partnership, association, or similar organization, whether operated for profit or as a nonprofit organization.

(b) The Secretary is authorized, by regulation, to further define such terms consistent with this section.

FUNCTIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

SEC. 104. The Secretary shall promote and encourage the formation and operation of export trading companies by providing information and advice to interested persons and by facilitating contact between producers of exportable goods and services and firms offering export trade services.

OWNERSHIP OF EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES BY BANKS, BANK HOLDING COMPANIES, AND INTERNATIONAL BANKING CORPORATIONS

SEC. 105. (a) For the purpose of this section—

(1) the term "banking organization" means any State bank, national bank, Federal savings bank, bankers' bank, bank holding company, Edge Act Corporation, or Agreement Corporation;

(2) the term "State bank" means any bank or bankers' bank which is incorporated under the laws of any State, any territory of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, or the Virgin Islands;

(3) the term "State member bank" means any State bank which is a member of the Federal Reserve System;

(4) the term "State nonmember insured bank" means any State bank which is not a member of the Federal Reserve System, but the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(5) the term "bankers' bank" means any bank insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation if the stock of such bank is owned exclusively by other banks (except to the extent directors' qualifying shares are required by law) and if such bank is engaged exclusively in providing banking services for other banks and their officers, directors, or employees;

(6) the term "bank holding company" has the same meaning as in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956;

(7) the term "Edge Act Corporation" means a corporation organized under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act;

(8) the term "Agreement Corporation" means a corporation operating subject to section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act;

(9) the term "appropriate Federal banking agency" means—

(A) the Comptroller of the Currency with respect to a national bank or any bank located in the District of Columbia;

(B) the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System with respect to a State member bank, bank holding company, Edge Act Corporation, or Agreement Corporation;

(C) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation with respect to a State nonmember insured bank; and

(D) the Federal Home Loan Bank Board with respect to a Federal savings bank.

In any situation where the banking organization holding or making an investment in an export trading company is a subsidiary of another banking organization which is subject to the jurisdiction of another agency, and some form of agency approval or notification is required, such approval or notification need only be obtained from or made to, as the case may be, the appropriate Federal banking agency for the banking organization making or holding the investment in the export trading company;

(10) the term "capital and surplus" shall be defined by the appropriate Federal banking agency;

(11) an "affiliate" of a banking organization has the same meaning as an "affiliate" of a member bank under section 2 of the Banking Act of 1933, and, with respect to a bank holding company, includes any bank or other subsidiary of such company, the term "subsidiary" has the same meaning as in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956;

(12) the terms "control" and "subsidiary" shall have the same meanings assigned to those terms in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and the terms "controlled" and "controlling" shall be construed consistently with the term "control" as defined in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, except that for purpose of the Export Trading Company Act of 1981, the determination of control as provided in section 2(a)(2) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 shall be made by the appropriate Federal banking agency; and

(13) for the purposes of this section, the term "export trading company" means a company which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is exclusively engaged in activities related to international trade, whether operated for profit or as a nonprofit organization: Provided, however, That any such company must also either meet the definition of export trading company in section 103(a)(5) of this Act, or be organized and operated principally for the purpose of providing export trade services, as defined in section 103(a)(4) of this Act: Provided further, That any such company, for purposes of this section, (A) may engage in or hold shares of a company engaged in the business of underwriting, selling, or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that its banking organization investor may do so under applicable Federal and State banking law and regulations, and (B) may not engage in manufacturing or agricultural production activities.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding any prohibition, restriction, limitation, condition, or requirement of any law applicable only to banking organizations, a banking organization, subject to the limitations of subsection (c) and the procedures of this subsection, may invest directly and indirectly in the aggregate, up to 5 per centum of its consolidated capital and surplus (25 per centum in the case of an Edge Act Corporation or Agreement Corporation not engaged in banking) in the voting stock or other evidences of ownership of one or more export trading companies. A banking organization may—

(A) invest up to an aggregate amount of $10,000,000 in one or more export trading companies without the prior approval of the appropriate Federal banking agency, if such investment does not cause an export trading company to become a subsidiary of the investing banking organization; and

(B) make investments in excess of an aggregate amount of $10,000,000 in one or more export trading companies, or make any investment or take any other action which causes an export trading company to become a subsidiary of the investing banking organization or which will cause more than 50 per centum of the voting stock of an export trading company to be owned or controlled by banking organizations, only with the prior approval of the appropriate Federal banking agency.

Any banking organization which makes an investment under authority of clause (A) of the preceding sentence shall promptly notify the appropriate Federal banking agency of such investment and shall file such reports on such investment as such agency may require. If, after receipt of any such notification, the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that the export trading company is a subsidiary of the investing banking organization, it shall have authority to disapprove the investment or impose conditions on such investment under authority of subsection (d). In furtherance of such authority, the appropriate Federal banking agency, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may require divestiture of any voting stock or other evidences of ownership previously acquired, and may impose conditions necessary for the termination of any controlling relationship.

(2) If a banking organization proposes to make any investment or engage in any activity included within the following two subparagraphs, it must give the appropriate Federal banking agency ninety days prior written notice before it makes such investment or engages in such activity:

(A) any additional investment in an export trading company subsidiary; or

(B) the engagement by any export trading company subsidiary in any line of activity, including specifically the taking of title to goods, wares, merchandise, or commodities, if such activity was not disclosed in any prior application for approval.

During the notification period provided under this paragraph, the appropriate Federal banking agency may, by written notice, disapprove the proposed investment or activity or impose conditions on such investment or activity under authority of subsection (d). An additional investment or activity covered by this paragraph may be made or engaged in, as the case may be, prior to the expiration of the notification period if the appropriate Federal banking agency issues written notice of its intent not to disapprove.

(3) In the event of the failure of the appropriate Federal banking agency to act on any application for approval under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection within a period of one hundred and twenty days, which period begins on the date the application has been accepted for processing by the appropriate Federal banking agency, the application shall be deemed to have been granted. In the event of the failure of the appropriate Federal banking agency either to disapprove or to impose conditions on any investment or activity subject to the prior notification requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection within the ninety-day period provided therein, such period beginning on the date the notification has been received by the appropriate Federal banking agency, such investment or activity may be made or engaged in, as the case may be, any time after the expiration of such period.

(c) The following limitations apply to export trading companies and the investments in such companies by banking organizations:

(1) The name of any export trading company shall not be similar in any respect to that of a banking organization that owns any of its voting stock or other evidences of ownership except where a majority of the outstanding voting stock or other evidences of ownership of the company is owned or controlled by such banking organization.

(2) The total historical cost of the direct and indirect investments by a banking organization in an export trading company combined with extensions of credit by the banking organization and its direct and indirect subsidiaries to such export trading company shall not exceed 10 per centum of the banking organization's capital and surplus.

(3) A banking organization that owns any voting stock or other evidences of ownership of an export trading company may be required, by the appropriate Federal banking agency, to terminate its ownership or shall be subject to limitations or conditions which may be imposed by such agency, if the agency determines that the company has taken positions in commodities or commodities contracts, in securities, or in foreign exchange, other than as may be necessary in the course of its business operations.

(4) No banking organization holding voting stock or other evidences of ownership of any export trading company may extend credit or cause any affiliate to extend credit to any export trading company or to customers of such company on terms more favorable than those afforded similar borrowers in similar circumstances, and such extension of credit shall not involve more than the normal risk of repayment or present other unfavorable features.

(d)(1) In the case of every application under subsection (b)(1)(B) of this section, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources, competitive situation, and future prospects of the banking organization and export trading company concerned, and the benefits of the proposal to United States business, industrial, and agricultural concerns (with special emphasis on small- medium-size, and minority concerns), and to improving United States competitiveness in world markets. The appropriate Federal banking agency may not approve any investment for which an application has been filed under subsection (b)(1)(B) if it finds that the export benefits of such proposal are outweighed in the public interest by any adverse financial, managerial, competitive, or other banking factors associated with the particular investment. Any disapproval order issued under this section must contain a statement of the reasons for disapproval.

(2) In approving any application submitted under subsection (b)(1)(B), the appropriate Federal banking agency may impose such conditions which, under the circumstances of such case, it may deem necessary (A) to limit a banking organization's financial exposure to an export trading company, or (B) to prevent possible conflicts of interest or unsafe or unsound banking practices. With respect to the taking of title to goods, wares, merchandise, or commodities by any export trading company subsidiary of a banking organization, the appropriate Federal banking agencies may, by order, regulation, or guidelines, establish standards designed to ensure against any unsafe or unsound practices that could adversely affect a controlling banking organization investor. In particular, the appropriate Federal banking agencies may establish inventory-to-capital ratios, based on the capital of the export trading company subsidiary, for those circumstances in which the export trading company subsidiary may bear a market risk on inventory held.

(3) In determining whether to impose any condition under the preceding paragraph (2), or in imposing such condition, the appropriate Federal banking agency must give due consideration to the size of the banking organization and export trading company involved, the degree of investment and other support to be provided by the banking organization to the export trading company, and the identity, character, and financial strength of any other investors in the export trading company. The appropriate Federal banking agency shall not impose any conditions or set standards for the taking of title which unnecessarily disadvantage, restrict, or limit export trading companies in competing in world markets or in achieving the purposes of section 102 of this Act. In particular, in setting standards for the taking of title under the preceding paragraph (2), the appropriate Federal banking agencies shall give special weight to the need to take title in certain kinds of trade transactions, such as international barter transactions.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the appropriate Federal banking agency may, whenever it has reasonable cause to believe that the ownership or control of any investment in an export trading company constitutes a serious risk to the financial safety, soundness, or stability of the banking organization and is inconsistent with sound banking principles or with the purposes of this Act or with the Financial Institutions Supervisory Act of 1966, order the banking organization, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to terminate (within one hundred and twenty days or such longer period as the appropriate Federal banking agency may direct in unusual circumstances) its investment in the export trading company.

(5) On or before two years after enactment of this Act, the appropriate Federal banking agencies shall jointly report to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives their recommendations with respect to the implementation of this section, their recommendations on any changes in United States law to facilitate the financing of United States exports, especially by small- medium-size, and minority business concerns, and their recommendations on the effects of ownership of United States banks by foreign banking organizations affiliated with trading companies doing business in the United States.

(6) The appropriate Federal banking agency may, by regulation or order, exempt from the collateral requirements of section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act any loan or extension of credit made by a national or State bank to an export trading company affiliate if the agency determines such exemption is necessary to finance the operating expenses of an affiliated export trading company and does not expose the bank to undue financial risks. This paragraph does not apply to bank affiliates currently exempt from the requirements of section 23A.

(e)(1) Any party aggrieved by an order of an appropriate Federal banking agency under this section may obtain a review of such order in the United States court of appeals within any circuit wherein such organization has its principal place of business, or in the court of appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing a notice of appeal in such court within thirty days from the date of such order, and simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by registered or certified mail to the appropriate Federal banking agency. The appropriate Federal banking agency shall promptly certify and file in such court the record upon which the order was based. The court shall set aside any order found to be (A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law; (B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege or immunity; (C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right; or (D) without observance of procedure required by law.

(2) Except for violations of subsection (b)(3) of this section, the court shall remand for further consideration by the appropriate Federal banking agency any order set aside solely for procedural errors and may remand for further consideration by the appropriate Federal banking agency any order set aside for substantive errors. Upon remand, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall have no more than sixty days from date of issuance of the court's order to cure any procedural error or reconsider its prior order. If the agency fails to act within this period, the application or other matter subject to review shall be deemed to have been granted as a matter of law.

(f)(1) The appropriate Federal banking agencies are authorized and empowered to issue such rules, regulations, and orders, to require such reports, to delegate such functions, and to conduct such examinations of subsidiary export trading companies, as each of them may deem necessary in order to perform their respective duties and functions under this section and to administer and carry out the provisions and purposes of this section and prevent evasions thereof.

(2) In addition to any powers, remedies, or sanctions otherwise provided by law, compliance with the requirements imposed under this section may be enforced under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act by any appropriate Federal banking agency defined in that Act.

(g) Nothing in this section shall at any time prevent any State from adopting a law prohibiting banks chartered under the laws of such State from investing in export trading companies or applying conditions, limitations, or restrictions on investments by banks chartered under the laws of such State in export trading companies in addition to any conditions, limitations, or restrictions provided under this section.

GUARANTEES FOR EXPORT ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE AND INVENTORY

SEC. 106. The Export-Import Bank of the United States is authorized and directed to establish a program to provide guarantees for loans extended by financial institutions or other private creditors to export trading companies as defined in section 103(5) of this Act, or to other exporters, when such loans are secured by export accounts receivable or inventories of exportable goods, and when in the judgment of the Board of Directors—

(1) the private credit market is not providing adequate financing to enable otherwise creditworthy export trading companies or exporters to consummate export transactions; and

(2) such guarantees would facilitate expansion of exports which would not otherwise occur.

The Board of Directors shall attempt to insure that a major share of any loan guarantees ultimately serves to promote exports from small, medium-size and minority businesses or agricultural concerns. Guarantees provided under the authority of this section shall be subject to limitations contained in annual appropriations Acts.

TITLE II—EXPORT TRADE ASSOCIATIONS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the "Export Trade Association Act of 1981".

FINDINGS; DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 202. (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the exports of the American economy are responsible for creating and maintaining one out of every nine manufacturing jobs in the United States and for generating $1 out of every $7 of total United States goods produced;

(2) exports will play an even larger role in the United States economy in the future in the face of severe competition from foreign government-owned and subsidized commercial entities;

(3) between 1968 and 1977 the United States share of total world exports fell from 19 per centum to 13 per centum;

(4) trade deficits contribute to the decline of the dollar on international currency markets, fueling inflation at home;

(5) service-related industries are vital to the well being of the American economy inasmuch as they create jobs for seven out of every ten Americans, provide 65 per centum of the Nation's gross national product, and represent a small but rapidly rising percentage of United States international trade;

(6) agriculture constitutes the foundation of the economy of the United States and will continue to be a leading sector in United States export growth;

(7) small- and medium-sized firms are prime beneficiaries of joint exporting, through pooling of technical expertise, help in achieving economies of scale, and assistance in competing effectively in foreign markets; and

(8) the Department of Commerce has as one of its responsibilities the development and promotion of United States exports.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to encourage American exports by directing the Department of Commerce to encourage and promote the formation of export trade associations through the Webb-Pomerene Act, by making the provisions of that Act explicitly applicable to the exportation of services, and by transferring the responsibility for administering that Act from the Federal Trade Commission to the Secretary of Commerce.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 203. The Webb-Pomerene Act (15 U.S.C. 61-66) is amended by striking out the first section (15 U.S.C. 61) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this Act—

"(1) EXPORT TRADE.—The term 'export trade' means trade or commerce in goods, wares, merchandise, or services exported, or in the course of being exported from the United States or any territory thereof to any foreign nation.

"(2) SERVICE.—The term 'service' means intangible economic output, including, but not limited to—

"(A) business, repair, and amusement services;

"(B) management, legal, engineering, architectural, and other professional services; and

"(C) financial, insurance, transportation, informational and any other data-based services, and communication services.

"(3) EXPORT TRADE ACTIVITIES.—The term 'export trade activities' means activities or agreements in the course of export trade.

"(4) METHODS OF OPERATION.—The term 'methods of operation' means the methods by which an association or export trading company conducts or proposes to conduct export trade.

"(5) TRADE WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—The term 'trade within the United States' whenever used in this Act means trade or commerce among the several States or in any territory of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such territory and another, or between any such territory or territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States.

"(6) ASSOCIATION.—The term 'association' means any combination, by contract or other arrangement, of persons who are citizens of the United States, partnerships which are created under and exist pursuant to the laws of any State or of the United States, or corporations, whether operated for profit or organized as nonprofit corporations, which are created under and exist pursuant to the laws of any State or of the United States.

"(7) EXPORT TRADING COMPANY.—The term 'export trading company' means an export trading company as defined in section 103(5) of the Export Trading Company Act of 1981.

"(8) ANTITRUST LAWS.—The term 'antitrust laws' means the antitrust laws defined in the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12), sections 5 and 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45, 46), and any State antitrust or unfair competition law.

"(9) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce.

"(10) ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The term 'Attorney General' means the Attorney General of the United States.

"(11) COMMISSION.—The term 'Commission' means the Federal Trade Commission.".

ANTITRUST EXEMPTION

SEC. 204. The Webb-Pomerene Act (15 U.S.C. 61-66) is amended by striking out section 2 (15 U.S.C. 62) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. EXEMPTION FROM ANTITRUST LAWS.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY.—The export trade, export trade activities, and methods of operation of any association, entered into for the sole purpose of engaging in export trade, and engaged in or proposed to be engaged in such export trade, and the export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation of any export trading company, that—

"(1) serve to preserve or promote export trade;

"(2) result in neither a substantial lessening of competition or restraint of trade within the United States nor a substantial restraint of the export trade of any competitor of such association or export trading company;

"(3) do not unreasonably enhance, stabilize, or depress prices within the United States of the goods, wares, merchandise, or services of the class exported by such association or export trading company;

"(4) do not constitute unfair methods of competition against competitors engaged in the export trade of goods, wares, merchandise, or services of the class exported by such association or export trading company;

"(5) do not include any act which results, or may reasonably be expected to result, in the sale for consumption or resale within the United States of the goods, wares, merchandise, or services exported by the association or export trading company or its members; and

"(6) do not constitute trade or commerce in the licensing of patents, technology, trademarks, or know-how, except as incidental to the sale of the goods, wares, merchandise, or services exported by the association or export trading company or its members shall, when certified according to the procedures set forth in this Act, be eligible for the exemption provided in subsection (b).

"(b) EXEMPTION.—An association or an export trading company and its members are exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws with respect to their export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation that are specified in a certificate issued according to the procedures set forth in this Act, carried out in conformity with the provisions, terms, and conditions prescribed in such certificate and engaged in during the period in which such certificate is in effect. The subsequent revocation in whole or in part of such certificate shall not render an association or its members or an export trading company or its members, liable under the antitrust laws for such export trade, export trade activities, or methods of operation engaged in during such period.

"(c) DISAGREEMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL OR COMMISSION.—Whenever, pursuant to section 4(b)(1) of this Act, the Attorney General or the Commission has formally advised the Secretary of disagreement with his determination to issue a proposed certificate, and the Secretary has nonetheless issued such proposed certificate or an amended certificate, the exemption provided by this section shall not be effective until thirty days after the issuance of such certificate.".

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 3

SEC. 205. The Webb-Pomerene Act (15 U.S.C. 61-66) is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately before section 3 (15 U.S.C. 63) the following:

"SEC. 3. OWNERSHIP INTEREST IN OTHER TRADE ASSOCIATIONS PERMITTED.", and

(2) by striking out "SEC. 3. That nothing" in section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof "Nothing".

ADMINISTRATION: ENFORCEMENT: REPORTS

SEC. 206. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Webb-Pomerene Act (15 U.S.C. 61-66) is amended by striking out sections 4 and 5 (15 U.S.C. 64 and 65) and inserting in lieu thereof the following sections:

"SEC. 4. CERTIFICATION.

"(a) PROCEDURE FOR APPLICATION.—Any association or export trading company seeking certification under this Act shall file with the Secretary a written application for certification setting forth the following:

"(1) The name of the association or export trading company.

"(2) The location of all of the offices or places of business of the association or export trading company in the United States and abroad.

"(3) The names and addresses of all of the officers, stockholders, and members of the association or export trading company.

"(4) A copy of the certificate or articles of incorporation and bylaws, if the association or export trading company is a corporation; or a copy of the articles, partnership, joint venture, or other agreement or contract under which the association or export trading company conducts or proposes to conduct its export trade activities, or contract of association, if the association or export trading company is unincorporated.

"(5) A description of the goods, wares, merchandise, or services which the association or export trading company or their members export or propose to export.

"(6) A description of the domestic and international conditions, circumstances, and factors which show that the association or export trading company and its activities will serve a specified need in promoting the export trade of the described goods, wares, merchandise, or services.

"(7) The export trade activities in which the association or export trading company intends to engage and the methods by which the association or export trading company conducts or proposes to conduct export trade in the described goods, wares, merchandise, or services, including, but not limited to, any agreements to sell exclusively to or through the association or export trading company, any agreements with foreign persons who may act as joint selling agents, any agreements to acquire a foreign selling agent, any agreements for pooling tangible or intangible property or resources, or any territorial, price-maintenance, membership, or other restrictions to be imposed upon members of the association or export trading company.

"(8) The names of all countries where export trade in the described goods, wares, merchandise, or services is conducted or proposed to be conducted by or through the association or export trading company.

"(9) Any other information which the Secretary may request concerning the organization, operation, management, or finances of the association or export trading company; the relation of the association or export trading company to other associations, corporations, partnerships, and individuals; and competition or potential competition, and effects of the association or export trading company thereon. The Secretary may request such information as part of an initial application or as a necessary supplement thereto. The Secretary may not request information under this paragraph which is not reasonably available to the person making application or which is not necessary for certification of the prospective association or export trading company.

"(b) ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE.—

"(1) NINETY-DAY PERIOD.—The Secretary shall issue a certificate to an association or export trading company within ninety days after receiving the application for certification or necessary supplement thereto if the Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General and Commission, determines that the association and, its export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation, or export trading company, and its export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation meet the requirements of section 2 of this Act and will serve a specified need in promoting the export trade of the goods, wares, merchandise, or services described in the application for certification. The certificate shall specify the permissible export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation of the association or export trading company and shall include any terms and conditions the Secretary deems necessary to comply with the requirements of section 2 of this Act. The Secretary shall deliver to the Attorney General and the Commission a copy of any certificate that he proposes to issue. The Attorney General or Commission may, within fifteen days thereafter, give written notice to the Secretary of an intent to offer advice on the determination. The Attorney General or Commission may, after giving such written notice and within forty-five days of the time the Secretary has delivered a copy of a proposed certificate, formally advise the Secretary and the petitioning association or export trading company of disagreement with the Secretary's determination. The Secretary shall not issue any certificate prior to the expiration of such forty-five-day period unless he has (A) received no notice of intent to offer advice by the Attorney General or the Commission within fifteen days after delivering a copy of a proposed certificate, or (B) received any noticed formal advice of disagreement or written confirmation that no formal disagreement will be transmitted from the Attorney General and the Commission. After the forty-five-day period or, if no notice of intent to offer advice has been given, after the fifteen-day period, the Secretary shall either issue the proposed certificate, issue an amended certificate, or deny the application. Upon agreement of the applicant, the Secretary may delay taking action for not more than thirty additional days after the forty-five-day period. Before offering advice on a proposed certification, the Attorney General and Commission shall consult in an effort to avoid, wherever possible, having both agencies offer advice on any application.

"(2) EXPEDITED CERTIFICATION.—In those instances where the temporary nature of the export trade activities, deadlines for bidding on contracts or filling orders, or any other circumstances beyond the control of the association or export trading company which have a significant impact on its export trade, make the ninety-day period for application approval described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, or an amended application approval as provided in subsection (c) of this section, impractical for the association or export trading company seeking certification, such association or export trading company may request and may receive expedited action on its application for certification.

"(3) AUTOMATIC CERTIFICATION FOR EXISTING ASSOCIATIONS.—Any association registered with the Federal Trade Commission under this Act as of January 19, 1981, may file with the Secretary an application for automatic certification of any export trade, export trade activities, and methods of operation in which it was engaged prior to enactment of the Export Trade Association Act of 1981. Any such application must be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of such Act and shall be acted upon by the Secretary in accordance with the procedures provided by this section. The Secretary shall issue to the association a certificate specifying the permissible export trade, export trade activities, and methods of operation that he determines are shown by the application (including any necessary supplement thereto), on its face, to be eligible for certification under this Act, and including any terms and conditions the Secretary deems necessary to comply with the requirements of section 2(a) of this Act, unless the Secretary possesses information clearly indicating that the requirements of section 2(a) are not met.

"(4) APPEAL OF DETERMINATION.—If the Secretary determines not to issue a certificate to an association or export trading company which has submitted an application for certification, or for an amendment of a certificate, then he shall—

"(A) notify the association or export trading company of his determination and the reasons for his determination, and

"(B) upon request made by the association or export trading company, afford it an opportunity for reconsideration with respect to that determination.

"(c) MATERIAL CHANGES IN CIRCUMSTANCES; AMENDMENT OF CERTIFICATE.—Whenever there is a material change in the membership, export trade activities, or methods of operation, of an association or export trading company then it shall report such change to the Secretary and may apply to the Secretary for an amendment of its certificate. Any application for an amendment to a certificate shall set forth the requested amendment of the certificate and the reasons for the requested amendment. Any request for the amendment of a certificate shall be treated in the same manner as an original application for a certificate.

"(d) AMENDMENT OR REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE BY SECRETARY.—

"(1) The Secretary on his own initiative shall, upon a determination that the export trade, export trade activities or methods of operation of an association or export trading company no longer comply with the requirements of section 2 of this Act, revoke its certificate or make such amendments as may be necessary to comply with the requirements of such section.

"(2) Prior to revoking or amending a certificate, the Secretary shall—

"(A) notify the holder of the certificate in writing of the facts or conduct which may warrant the action, and

"(B) provide the holder of the certificate an opportunity for such hearing as may be appropriate in the circumstances.

"(3) Before revoking or amending a certificate pursuant to this subsection the Secretary may in his discretion provide the holder of the certificate an opportunity to achieve compliance within a reasonable period of time not to exceed ninety days, except that nothing in this paragraph shall affect any action under section 4(e) of this Act.

"(e) ACTION FOR REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE BY ATTORNEY GENERAL OR COMMISSION.—

"(1) The Attorney General or the Commission may bring an action against an association or export trading company or its members to invalidate, in whole or in part, its certificate on the ground that the export trade, export trade activities or methods of operation of the association or export trading company fail or have failed to meet the requirements of section 2 of this Act. Except in the case of an action brought during the period before an antitrust exemption becomes effective, as provided for in section 2(c), the Attorney General or Commission shall notify any association or export trading company or member thereof, against which it intends to bring an action for revocation thirty days in advance, as to its intent to file an action under this subsection. The district court shall consider any issues presented in any such action de novo and if it finds that the requirements of section 2 are not met, it shall issue an order revoking the certificate or any other order necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act and the requirements of section 2.

"(2) Any action brought under this subsection shall be considered an action described in section 1337 of title 28, United States Code. Pending any such action which was brought during the period any exemption is held in abeyance pursuant to section 2(c) of this Act, the court may make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

"(3) No person other than the Attorney General or Commission shall have standing to bring an action against an association or export trading company or their respective members for failure of the association or export trading company or their respective export trade, export trade activities or methods of operation to meet the eligibility requirements of section 2 of this Act.

"(f) COMPLIANCE WITH OTHER LAWS.—Each association and each export trading company and any subsidiary thereof shall comply with United States export control laws pertaining to the export or transshipment of any goods on the Commodity Control List to controlled countries. Such laws shall be complied with before actual shipment.

"(g) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Final orders of the Secretary under this section shall be subject to judicial review pursuant to chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

"SEC. 5. GUIDELINES.

"(a) INITIAL PROPOSED GUIDELINES.—Within ninety days after the enactment of the Export Trade Association Act of 1981, the Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General, and the Commission shall publish proposed guidelines for purposes of determining whether export trade, export trade activities and methods of operation of an association or export trading company will meet the requirements of section 2 of this Act.

"(b) PUBLIC COMMENT PERIOD.—Following publication of the proposed guidelines, and any proposed revision of guidelines, interested parties shall have thirty days to comment on the proposed guidelines. The Secretary shall review the comments and, after consultation with the Attorney General, and Commission, publish final guidelines within thirty days after the last day on which comments may be made under the preceding sentence.

"(c) PERIODIC REVISION.—After publication of the final guidelines, the Secretary shall periodically review the guidelines and, after consultation with the Attorney General, and the Commission, propose revisions as needed.

"(d) APPLICATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT.—The promulgation of guidelines under this section shall not be considered rulemaking for purposes of subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and section 553 of such title shall not apply to their promulgation.

"SEC. 6. ANNUAL REPORTS.

"Every certified association or export trading company shall submit to the Secretary an annual report, in such form and at such time as he may require, which report updates where necessary the information described by section 4(a) of this Act.

"SEC. 7. CONFIDENTIALITY OF APPLICATION AND ANNUAL REPORT INFORMATION.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Portions of applications made under section 4, including amendments to such applications, and annual reports made under section 6 that contain trade secrets or confidential business or financial information, the disclosure of which would harm the competitive position of the person submitting such information shall be confidential, and, except as authorized by this section, no officer or employee, or former officer or employee, of the United States shall disclose any such confidential information, obtained by him in any manner in connection with his service as such an officer or employee.

"(b) DISCLOSURE TO ATTORNEY GENERAL OR COMMISSION.—Whenever the Secretary believes that an applicant may be eligible for a certificate, or has issued a certificate to an association or export trading company, he shall promptly make available all materials filed by the applicant, association or export trading company, including applications and supplements thereto, reports of material changes, applications for amendments and annual reports, and information derived therefrom, to the Attorney General or Commission, or any employee or officer thereof, for official use in connection with an investigation or judicial or administrative proceeding under this Act or the antitrust laws to which the United States or the Commission is or may be a party. Such information may only be disclosed by the Secretary upon a prior certification that the information will be maintained in confidence and will only be used for such official law enforcement purposes.

"SEC. 8. MODIFICATION OF ASSOCIATION TO COMPLY WITH UNITED STATES OBLIGATIONS.

"At such time as the United States undertakes binding international obligations by treaty or statute, to the extent that the operations of any export trade association or export trading company, certified under this Act, are inconsistent with such international obligations, the Secretary may require the association or export trading company to modify its respective operations, and in so doing afford the association or export trading company a reasonable opportunity to comply therewith, so as to be consistent with such international obligations.

"SEC. 9. REGULATIONS.

"The Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Commission, shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 10. TASK FORCE STUDY.

"Seven years after the date of enactment of the Export Trade Association Act of 1981, the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a task force to examine the effect of the operation of this Act on domestic competition and on United States international trade and to recommend either continuation, revision, or termination of the Webb-Pomerene Act. The task force shall have one year to conduct its study and to make its recommendations to the President.".

(b) REDESIGNATION OF SECTION 6.—The Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "SEC. 6." in section 6 (15 U.S.C. 66), and

(2) by inserting immediately before such section the following:

"SEC. 11. SHORT TITLE.".

EFFECTIVE DATE WITH REGARD TO EXISTING ASSOCIATIONS

SEC. 207. (a) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments to the Webb-Pomerene Act set forth in sections 203, 204, 205, and 206 of this Act shall become effective with regard to an existing association described in subsection (b) only at such time as the association may elect to be certified pursuant to subsection (c).

(b) ELECTION TO CONTINUE UNDER PRIOR LAW.—Application of the antitrust laws to any association which as of January 1, 1981, had filed with the Commission the information specified under section 5 of the Webb-Pomerene Act as in effect immediately prior to the date of enactment of this Act shall continue to be governed by the standards set forth in that Act, unless such association elects to seek certification under subsection (c).

(c) ELECTION TO APPLY FOR CERTIFICATION.—Any association to which subsection (b) applies may, at any time after the effective date of this Act, file an application for certification with the Secretary containing the information set forth in section 4(a) of the Webb-Pomerene Act, as amended by section 206 of this Act. The Secretary shall consider and act upon such application in the manner provided in section 4(b) of the Webb-Pomerene Act, as amended by section 206 of this Act. The association filing an application pursuant to this subsection shall continue to be subject to subsection (b) of this section until the Secretary issues a certificate and such certificate has been accepted by the association; the association must decide whether or not to accept such certificate no later than thirty days after the Secretary's determination with respect thereto has become final.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion. It is to amend S. 734 with the text of section 1 through 4 and title II of H.R. 1799 and the text of H.R. 6016.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ZABLOCKI moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill (S. 734) and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as "The Export Trading Company Act of 1982".

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

FINDINGS; DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 101. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) United States exports are responsible for creating and maintaining one out of every nine manufacturing jobs in the United States and for generating one out of every seven dollars of total United States goods produced;

(2) the rapidly growing service-related industries are vital to the well-being of the United States economy inasmuch as they create jobs for seven out of every ten Americans, provide 65 percent of the Nation's gross national product, and offer the greatest potential for significantly increased industrial trade involving finished products;

(3) trade deficits contribute to the decline of the dollar on international currency markets and have an inflationary impact on the United States economy;

(4) tens of thousands of small- and medium-sized United States businesses produce exportable goods or services but do not engage in exporting;

(5) export trade services in the United States are fragmented into a multitude of separate functions, and companies attempting to offer export trade services lack financial leverage to reach a significant number of potential United States exporters;

(6) the United States needs well-developed export trade intermediaries which can achieve economies of scale and acquire expertise enabling them to export goods and services profitably, at low per unit cost to producers;

(7) the development of export trading companies in the United States has been hampered by business attitudes and by Government regulations;

(8) those activities of State and local governmental authorities which initiate, facilitate, or expand exports of goods and services can be an important source for expansion of total United States exports, as well as for experimentation in the development of innovative export programs keyed to local, State, and regional economic needs;

(9) if United States trading companies are to be successful in promoting United States exports and in competing with foreign trading companies, they should be able to draw on the resources, expertise, and knowledge of the United States banking system, both in the United States and abroad; and

(10) the Department of Commerce is responsible for the development and promotion of United States exports, and especially for facilitating the export of finished products by United States manufacturers.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to increase United States exports of products and services by encouraging more efficient provision of export trade services to United States producers and suppliers, in particular by establishing an office within the Department of Commerce to promote the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies, by permitting bank holding companies and bankers' banks to invest in export trading companies, by reducing restrictions on trade financing provided by financial institutions, and by modifying the application of the antitrust laws to certain export trade.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 102. For purposes of this section and sections 101 and 103 of this Act—

(1) the term "export trade" means trade or commerce in goods or services produced in the United States which are exported, or in the course of being exported, from the United States to any other country;

(2) the term "services" includes amusement, architectural, automatic data processing, business, communications, consulting, engineering, financial, insurance, legal, management, repair, training, and transportation services;

(3) the term "export trade services" includes international market research, advertising, marketing, insurance, legal assistance, transportation, including trade documentation and freight forwarding, communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, and financing, when provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States;

(4) the term "export trading company" means any person, corporation, partnership, association, or similar organization, which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated principally for purposes of—

(A) exporting goods or services produced in the United States; or

(B) facilitating the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services;

(5) the term "export trade association" means an association engaged solely in export trade which is exempt from the antitrust laws under the Webb-Pomerene Act;

(6) the term "State" means any of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; and

(7) the term "United States" means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

OFFICE OF EXPORT TRADE IN DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

SEC. 103. The Secretary of Commerce shall establish within the Department of Commerce an office to promote and encourage to the greatest extent feasible the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies. Such office shall provide information and advice to interested persons and shall provide a referral service to facilitate contact between producers of exportable goods and services and firms offering export trade services.

TITLE II—BANK EXPORT SERVICES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 201 This title may be cited as the "Bank Export Services Act".

INVESTMENTS IN EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

SEC. 202. Section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (12)(B), by striking out "or" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (13), by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (13) the following:

"(14) shares of any company which is an export trading company whose acquisition (including each acquisition of shares) or formation by a bank holding company has not been disapproved by the Board pursuant to this paragraph, except that such investments, whether direct or indirect, in such shares shall not exceed 5 per centum of the bank holding company's consolidated capital and surplus.

"(A)(i) No bank holding company shall invest in an export trading company under this paragraph unless the Board has been given sixty days' prior written notice of such proposed investment and within such period has not issued a notice disapproving the proposed investment or extending for up to another thirty days the period during which such disapproval may be issued.

"(ii) The period for disapproval may be extended for such additional thirty day period only if the Board determines that a bank holding company proposing to invest in an export trading company has not furnished all the information required to be submitted or that in the Board's judgment any material information submitted is substantially inaccurate.

"(iii) The notice required to be filed by a bank holding company shall contain such relevant information as the Board shall require by regulation or by specific request in connection with any particular notice.

"(iv) The Board may disapprove any proposed investment only if—

"(I) such disapproval is necessary to prevent unsafe or unsound banking practices, undue concentration of resources, decreased or unfair competition, or conflicts of interest;

"(II) the financial or managerial resources of the companies involved warrant disapproval; or

"(III) the bank holding company fails to furnish the information required under clause (iii).

"(v) Within three days after a decision to disapprove an investment, the Board shall notify the bank holding company in writing of the disapproval and shall provide a written statement of the basis for the disapproval.

"(vi) A proposed investment may be made prior to the expiration of the disapproval period if the Board issues written notice of its intent not to disapprove the investment.

"(B)(i) The total amount of extensions of credit by a bank holding company which invests in an export trading company, when combined with all such extensions of credit by all the subsidiaries of such bank holding company, to an export trading company shall not exceed at any one time 10 per centum of the bank holding company's consolidated capital and surplus. For purposes of the preceding sentence, an extension of credit shall not be deemed to include any amount invested by a bank holding company in the shares of an export trading company.

"(ii) No provision of any other Federal law in effect on the date of the enactment of this paragraph relating specifically to collateral requirements shall apply with respect to any such extension of credit.

"(iii) No bank holding company which invests in an export trading company may extend credit or cause any subsidiary to extend credit to any export trading company or to customers of such export trading company on terms more favorable than those afforded similar borrowers in similar circumstances, and such extension of credit shall not involve more than the normal risk of repayment or present other unfavorable features.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, an export trading company—

"(i) may engage in or hold shares of a company engaged in the business of underwriting, selling, or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that any bank holding company which invests in such export trading company may do so under applicable Federal and State banking laws and regulations; and

"(ii) may not engage in agricultural production activities or in manufacturing, except for such incidental product modification, including repackaging, reassembling or extracting byproducts, as is necessary to enable United States goods or services to conform with requirements of a foreign country and to facilitate their sale in foreign countries.

"(D) A bank holding company which invests in an export trading company may be required, by the Board, to terminate its investment or may be made subject to such limitations or conditions as may be imposed by the Board, if the Board determines that the export trading company has taken positions in commodities or commodity contracts, in securities, or in foreign exchange, other than as may be necessary in the course of the export trading company's business operations.

"(E) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'export trading company' means a company which does business under the laws of the United States or any State and which is organized and operated exclusively for purposes of exporting goods or services produced in the United States or for purposes of facilitating the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States by unaffiliated persons by providing one or more export trade services. Any export trading company may perform such importing or other activities as are reasonably related to and incident to an export transaction, if the overall effect of such activities is to enhance the exportation of goods or services produced in the United States;

"(ii) the term 'export trade services' includes consulting, international market research, advertising, marketing, product research and design, legal assistance, transportation (including trade documentation and freight forwarding), communication and processing of foreign orders to and for exporters and foreign purchasers, warehousing, foreign exchange, financing, and taking title to goods, when such services are provided in order to facilitate the export of goods or services produced in the United States;

"(iii) the term 'bank holding company' shall include a bank which (I) is organized solely to do business with other banks and their officers, directors or employees; (II) is owned primarily by the banks with which it does business; and (III) does not do business with the general public. No such other bank, owning stock in a bank described in this clause that invests in an export trading company, shall extend credit to an export trading company in an amount exceeding at any one time 10 per centum of such other bank's capital and surplus; and

"(iv) the term 'extension of credit' shall have the same meaning given such term in the fourth paragraph of section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act.".

BANKERS' ACCEPTANCES

SEC. 203. The seventh paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 372) is amended to read as follows:

"(7)(A) Any member bank and any Federal or State branch or agency of a foreign bank subject to reserve requirements under section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as 'institutions'), accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than six months' sight to run, exclusive of days of grace—

"(i) which grow out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods;

"(ii) which grow out of transactions involving the domestic shipment of goods; or

"(iii) which are secured at the time of acceptance by a warehouse receipt or other such document conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), no institution shall accept such bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, in an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 150 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus or, in the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H).

"(C) The Board, under such conditions as it may prescribe, may authorize, by regulation or order, any institution to accept such bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, in an amount not exceeding at any time in the aggregate 200 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus or, in the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H).

"(D) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (B) and (C), with respect to any institution, the aggregate acceptances, including obligations for a participation share in such acceptances, growing out of domestic transactions shall not exceed 50 per centum of the aggregate of all acceptances, including obligations for a participating share in such acceptances, authorized for such institution under this paragraph.

"(E) No institution shall accept bills, or be obligated for a participation share in such bills, whether in a foreign or domestic transaction, for any one person, partnership, corporation, association or other entity in an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 10 per centum of its paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus, or, the case of a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, its dollar equivalent as determined by the Board under subparagraph (H), unless the institution is secured either by attached documents or by some other actual security growing out of the same transaction as the acceptance.

"(F) With respect to an institution which issues an acceptance, the limitations contained in this paragraph shall not apply to that portion of an acceptance which is issued by such institution and which is covered by a participation agreement sold to another institution.

"(G) In order to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, the Board may define any of the terms used in this paragraph, and, with respect to institutions which do not have capital or capital stock, the Board shall define an equivalent measure to which the limitations contained in this paragraph shall apply.

"(H) Any limitation or restriction in this paragraph based on paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus of an institution shall be deemed to refer, with respect to a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank, to the dollar equivalent of the paid-up capital stock and surplus of the foreign bank, as determined by the Board, and if the foreign bank has more than one United States branch or agency, the business transacted by all such branches and agencies shall be aggregated in determining compliance with the limitation or restriction.".

TITLE III—EXPORT TRADE CERTIFICATES OF REVIEW

EXPORT TRADE PROMOTION DUTIES OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

SEC. 301. To promote and encourage export trade, the Attorney General may issue certificates of review. The Secretary of Commerce, in carrying out his responsibilities to promote the export of goods and services of the United States, may advise and assist persons with respect to applying for certificates of review.

APPLICATION FOR ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE OF REVIEW

SEC. 302. (a) To request the issuance of a certificate of review, a person shall submit to the Secretary of Commerce or the Attorney General a written application which—

(1) specifies conduct limited to export trade, and

(2) is in a form and contains any information, including information pertaining to the overall market in which the applicant operates, required by rule issued under section 311.

Each application received by the Secretary of Commerce shall be forwarded, not later than 7 days after receipt, to the Attorney General.

(b)(1) With respect to each application submitted under subsection (a), the Attorney General shall publish in the Federal Register notice that a certificate of review has been requested, the identity of each person requesting the certificate, and a description of the conduct with respect to which the certificate is requested. The notice shall be so published promptly, but not later than 10 days, after the application is received by the Attorney General.

(2) The Attorney General may not issue the certificate until the expiration of the 30-day period beginning on the date the application is received by the Attorney General.

ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 303. (a) The Attorney General shall issue a certificate of review to an applicant for the certificate if the application for the certificate satisfies the requirements of section 302, unless the Attorney General determines under subsection (b) that the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the Attorney General receives an application under section 302, the Attorney General shall determine whether the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, except that if before the expiration of the 60-day period the Attorney General requests that the applicant submit additional information, the Attorney General shall make the determination not later than the expiration of the 60-day period, or of the 30-day period beginning on the date the additional information is submitted, whichever period ends later.

(2) Unless the Attorney General determines that the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall immediately issue a certificate of review to the applicant. If the Attorney General determines that the conduct specified in the application is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall promptly transmit to the applicant a statement of the determination and the reasons in support of the determination.

(c) If the Attorney General denies an application for the issuance of a certificate of review and thereafter receives from the applicant a request for the return of all documents submitted by the applicant in connection with the issuance of the certificate, the Attorney General shall return to the applicant, not later than 30 days after receiving the request, the documents and all copies of the documents available to the Attorney General, except to the extent that the information contained in a document has been made available to the public.

(d) The Attorney General shall specify in each certificate of review issued under this section—

(1) the conduct, including activities and methods of operation, to which the certificate applies,

(2) the person to whom the certificate of review is issued, and

(3) any terms and conditions applicable to the conduct.

(e) A certificate of review obtained by fraud is void ab initio.

REPORTING REQUIREMENT; AMENDMENT OF CERTIFICATE

(1) SEC. 304. (a) any person who receives a certificate of review—

(1) shall promptly report to the Attorney General any change relevant to the matters specified under section 303(d) in the certificate, and

(2) may submit to the Attorney General an application to amend the certificate to reflect the fact or effect of the change on the conduct specified in the certificate.

(b) For purposes of section 302 and section 303, an application for an amendment to a certificate of review shall be deemed to be an application for the issuance of a certificate of review, except that the effective date of the amendment shall be the date on which the application for the amendment is submitted to the Attorney General.

MODIFICATION OR REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 305. (a) If at any time the Attorney General determines that the conduct engaged in under a certificate of review violates or is likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws, the Attorney General shall give written notice of the determination to the person to whom the certificate was issued. The notice shall include a statement of the reasons in support of the determination. In the 30-day period beginning 30 days after the notice is given, the Attorney General shall modify or revoke the certificate, as may be appropriate.

(b) The person to whom the affected certificate was issued may bring an action in any appropriate district court of the United States to set aside the determination made under subsection (a) on the ground that the determination is erroneous.

JUDICIAL REVIEW; ADMISSIBILITY

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in section 305(b), no determination made by the Attorney General with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be subject to judicial review.

(b) No determination made by the Attorney General with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be admissible in evidence in any administrative or judicial proceeding in support of any claim under the antitrust laws.

PROTECTION CONFERRED BY CERTIFICATE OF REVIEW

SEC. 307. (a) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be subject to a criminal action for a violation of the antitrust laws or a violation of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(b) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable for damages in a civil action brought by the Attorney General for a violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(c)(1) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable for damages exceeding actual damages, the loss of interest on actual damages, and the cost of suit (including a reasonable attorney's fee) for a violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the conduct that forms the basis of the action is specified in the certificate and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

(2) If, with respect to any claim under section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15) brought against the person, the court finds that—

(A) the conduct alleged to violate the antitrust laws does not violate the antitrust laws,

(B) the conduct is conduct specified in a certificate of review, and

(C) the certificate of review was in effect at the time the conduct occurred, the court shall award to the person against whom the claim is brought the cost of suit attributable to defending against the claim (including a reasonable attorney's fee).

(d) No person to whom a certificate of review is issued shall be liable under section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 26), or any State antitrust law similar to such section, with respect to threatened loss or damage by violation of the antitrust laws or of any State law similar to the antitrust laws if the threatened loss or damage arises from conduct specified in the certificate of review and if the certificate is in effect at the time the conduct occurs.

INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

SEC. 308. Except as provided in section 307(d), a certificate of review shall have no legal effect on the authority of a court to grant equitable relief in an action for a violation of the antitrust laws brought against the person to whom the certificate is issued. In granting the relief, the court shall have jurisdiction to modify or revoke the certificate of review, as may be appropriate.

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

SEC. 309. (a) Information submitted by any person in connection with the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no officer or employee of the United States shall disclose commercial or financial information submitted in connection with the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review if the information is privileged or confidential and if disclosure of the information would cause harm to the person who submitted the information.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to information disclosed—

(A) upon a request made by the Congress or any committee of the Congress,

(B) in a judicial or administrative proceeding,

(C) with the consent of the person who submitted the information,

(D) in the course of making a determination with respect to the issuance, amendment, or revocation of a certificate of review, if the Attorney General deems disclosure of the information to be necessary in connection with making the determination,

(E) in accordance with any requirement imposed by a statute of the United States, or

(F) in accordance with any rule issued under section 311 permitting the disclosure of the information to an agency of the United States or of a State on the condition that the agency will disclose the information only under the circumstances specified in subparagraphs (A) through (E).

DESCRIPTIVE GUIDELINES

SEC. 310. (a) To promote greater certainty regarding the application of the antitrust laws to export trade, the Attorney General may issue guidelines—

(1) describing specific types of conduct with respect to which the Attorney General has made, or would make, determinations under section 303 and section 305, and

(2) summarizing the factual and legal bases in support of the determinations.

(b) Section 553 of title 5, United States Code, shall not apply to the issuance of guidelines under subsection (a).

ISSUANCE OF RULES

SEC. 311. Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall issue rules to carry out this title.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 312. For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "antitrust laws" shall have the meaning given it in subsection (a) of the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12(a)), except that the term shall include section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45) to the extent that section 5 applies to unfair methods of competition,

(2) the term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States or his designee,

(3) the term "certificate of review" means a certificate issued by the Attorney General under section 303,

(4) the term "export trade" means the export of goods or services from the United States to foreign nations, and

(5) the term "State" shall have the meaning given it in section 4G of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15g).

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 313. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this title shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Section 302 and section 303 shall take effect 90 days after the effective date of the rules first issued under section 311.

Mr. ZABLOCKI (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI).

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to encourage exports by establishing in the Department of Commerce an office to promote the formation of export trade associations and export trading companies, by permitting bank holding companies and bankers' banks to invest in export trading companies, by reducing restrictions on trade financing provided by financial institutions, and by modifying the application of the antitrust laws to certain export trade, and for other purposes."

Two similar House bills (H.R. 1799 and H.R. 6016) were laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate bill (S. 734) and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none and, without objection, appoints the following conferees:

For title I of the House amendment and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. ZABLOCKI, BINGHAM, ECKART, BONKER, WOLPE, SHAMANSKY, BROOMFIELD, LAGOMARSINO, ERDAHL, and GILMAN, and Mrs. FENWICK;

For title II of the House amendment and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. ST GERMAIN, ANNUNZIO, MINISH, LAFALCE, BARNARD, STANTON of Ohio, WYLIE, MCKINNEY, and LEACH of Iowa; and

For title III of the House amendment and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. RODINO, SEIBERLING, HUGHES, MCCLORY, and BUTLER.

There was no objection.

VETERANS' DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND SURVIVORS' BENEFITS AMENDMENTS OF 1982

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 6782, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

□ 1450

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6782, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 400, nays 0, not voting 34, as follows:

Mr. BROWN of Colorado changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS AND SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS AND OVERSIGHT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE ON THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1982

Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation may have permission to sit on Thursday, July 29, 1982, while the House is in session under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to pose an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois. Could the gentleman tell us what this is all about, please?

□ 1510

Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the purpose of the hearing will be to inquire into a reported sale of Federal property located at 49 Fourth Street in San Francisco, Calif., which was recently declared excess to the needs of the Federal Government by the General Services Administration. The subcommittee will not be considering any legislation therefore, but instead, holding what I perceive to be an oversight hearing, which should last half an hour.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell me whether he has spoken to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. STANGELAND) about this hearing?

Mr. FARY. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. And he has no objections?

Mr. FARY. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. Yes, he has no objection?

Mr. FARY. None.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection, and I thank the gentleman for his response.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1983

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill—H.R. 6030—to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for the Armed Forces, for procurements, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6030, with Mr. AUCOIN (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, July 22, 1982, title II was open for amendment at any point.

Are there any amendments to title II?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SIMON

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMON: Page 8, line 23, strike out "$10,409,196,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,694,196,000".

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in behalf of my colleague from New York (Mr. GREEN) and myself.

What it does is, it simply asks the House to do the same thing that the Senate has done, and that is to knock out the interim basing provisions at a savings of $715 million.

In a "Dear Colleague" letter that my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) and I and Mr. GINGRICH and Mr. LEACH of Iowa sent to the Members of this House, we pointed out that this amendment will not affect any of the long-range research; it does not affect nor have any impact on the MX test firing slated for later this year.

I would point out that this amendment on the other body, was supported by the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the senior Senator from Texas, and supported by the ranking members of both parties.

It is an amendment that makes eminent sense. It says simply: "Let us spend our money prudently. Go ahead with the long-range missile planning and research, go ahead with testing of the MX itself, but let us not spend $715 million on an interim basing procedure." That is what the amendment does, pure and simple.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMON. I would be pleased to yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to join the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) in urging my colleagues to support the Simon-Green amendment to cut $715 million in authorization for research and development for interim basing of the MX missile. The other body has already taken this action in its DOD authorization bill. Our proposal will make the MX program more rational, and will bring reason to the defense budget.

Our amendment would defeat the proposal to research the placing of 40 MX missiles in unhardened Minuteman silos while study of long-term basing options for MX continue. The use of Minuteman silos is only one of the multitude of basing modes suggested for MX, and almost as soon as it was announced, it was criticized as vulnerable. Indeed, not even the administration has claimed that the MX so based can survive a Soviet first strike. Of the 40 missiles, only 4, or 10 percent, can be expected to survive. In this basing scheme, the cost per surviving missile is about $1 billion. Based in Minuteman silos, the MX's only use is as a first-strike weapon, or in a launch-on-warning situation, a severely destabilizing approach wherein human error or technical failure could trigger World War III. Given the great costs involved, do we want to base a missile that can only be used under a strategic doctrine the United States does not endorse? Moreover, do we want to base the missile in a manner that is admittedly vulnerable, when the missile's lethality makes it an enormously valuable target for the Soviets? I think the answer to both questions must be no.

In March, the Armed Services Committee in the other body decided the interim basing program had too many problems to justify its funding. The committee disagreed with spending $2.6 billion for this program, saying, "the number of additional warheads that would survive an attack upon MX missiles so deployed does not appear to justifiy the costs * * * associated with this basing scheme." The committee also questioned the proposal from an arms control perspective, and said, "strategic deterrence and crisis-stability could be jeopardized, rather than enhanced, by the deployment of high value, militarily important weapons in so small a number of relatively easily destroyed shelters." These arguments make good sense and led the other body to delete the $715 million in R. & D. funds that our amendment would delete. Our amendment duplicates the action already taken by the full Senate.

If our amendment is accepted, the bill will still contain almost $2 billion for research on the MX. Our amendment affects only the interim basing decision. The $715 million in the bill for R. & D. on interim basing that our amendment would delete was to be spent on engineering studies on preparing the Minuteman III silos to accept the MX and on the implementation of those studies. In view of the strategic inadequacy of this basing proposal, no further funds should be spent on researching the technical aspects of carrying it out.

Even though the President has indicated he has no intention of using it as such, many have argued that we must fund the MX program in its entirety so it can be used as a bargaining chip to leverage arms control concessions from the Soviets. This argument simply does not hold up as to this amendment. First, the MX will remain a bargaining chip under our amendment. Under our amendment, other R. & D. on the missile will continue, and further refinements in the program will continue being made. Research on basing modes—though not on the interim Minuteman basing mode—will continue as well.

I would urge my colleagues to delete the $715 million in this bill for R. & D. on interim basing for the MX missile. This basing scheme is almost universally acknowledged to add nothing to our ability to deter nuclear war. If it cannot work as a deterrent, it deserves no funding at this time. Nor can MX based in a vulnerable basing mode serve as a bargaining chip. Under our amendment R. & D. on the MX missile itself and on long-term basing options will continue. Our amendment deserves the support of the Members of this House, and we would urge your strong approval.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. GREEN and by unanimous consent, Mr. SIMON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SIMON. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, in summary all we seek to do is to eliminate the authorization for R. & D. for this MX interim mode in the Minuteman missile silos, a mode that is universally agreed not to solve the window of vulnerability problem and is universally agreed to be unworkable.

So we ask our colleagues to join us today in saving this $715 million for a mode no one wants while we await the recommendation of the President as to whatever long-term mode he proposes to offer us for the MX missile.

Mr. Chairman, I again thank my colleague for yielding.

□ 1520

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague from New York. I would simply add that the chairman of the Senate Arms Services Committee, in supporting this Senate amendment, pointed out that stopgap alternative to an MX basing system would do little appreciably to augment our strategic deterrent because it fails to solve the ICBM vulnerability problem.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will caution Members that under House rules Members may not refer to, or quote, debate in the other body.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STRATTON AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SIMON

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. SIMON: Page 9, after line 10, insert the following:

(c) Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated in this section for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Air Force related to the basing of the MX missile system, $715,000,000 may not be obligated until the President completes his review of alternative MX missile system basing modes and notifies the Congress, in writing, of the basing mode in which the MX missile system will be deployed and 30 days of session of Congress have expired after the receipt by Congress of such notice. For the purpose of determining days of session of Congress under the preceding sentence, there shall be excluded any day on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain or an adjournment sine die.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Simon amendment. We all are familiar, I think with the arguments on the MX. We debated that very substantially last week, and the effort to strike out the funds for the procurement of the MX was defeated. That certainly was exactly the right action to take in strengthening our national security, as well as backing up our President and our negotiators at the strategic arms reduction treaty negotiations.

I think we ought to be clear on the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) is a rather appealing amendment because, as he pointed out, it does not strike the money for procurement, or for the research on the development of the MX missile. He points out that he is only striking $715 million for money for the interim basing mode; and if I understand his amendment correctly, he is not even striking the money for the permanent basing mode. So, it sounds rather attractive and it looks rather simple, and no doubt was developed in an effort to try to attract votes on that basis.

However, I think it is important that the House understand exactly what the gentleman from Illinois is trying to do. In fact, he and my colleague from New York (Mr. GREEN) in their "Dear Colleague" letter, pointed out and made reference to the fact that the other body had taken similar action when this matter was before the Senate Armed Services Committee and was endorsed by key members of the Senate Armed Services Committee; namely, to knock out the money for an interim basing mode.

What the people who wrote the Simon-Green letter failed to point out, however, the Senate action—or the other body if I am required to refer to it in those terms, Mr. Chairman, having listened to your admonition very carefully—the action in the other body was predicated on a frustration with the administration's ability to define the basing mode until June of 1983. The purpose of their amendment to knock out the interim basing funds was to squeeze the Pentagon, squeeze the White House and get them to agree on a basing mode in a much faster timetable; and obviously, as we found out last week with the letter from the President of the United States that he is going to have a permanent basing mode available by the end of December of this year, the Senate action has already achieved its purpose. It has caused the administration to accelerate its basing decision.

So, with that in mind, the basic problem of the other body no longer exists in this body. What the distinguished gentleman from New York and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois are really doing is about as reasonable as it would be if some doctors were to say, "Well, I am not going to give any prescriptions for any medicine to cure this particular disease, which is a very strange disease, until you come up with a final medicine that will actually do the job."

But we will not know what the final successful medicine is going to be until we have an opportunity to research carefully all of the various alternatives. And that costs money.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) referred to the MX basing in the Minuteman silos, but there are a number of other alternatives that also have to be examined. What the amendment of these two fine gentleman would do would be to cut the legs from the Department of Defense in trying to determine what is the best basing mode. In that connection, let me read to my colleagues in the House a communication that came from our distinguished friend, Frank Carlucci, the Deputy Secretary of Defense. It is addressed to the Honorable Melvin Price, chairman, Armed Services Committee. He says this:

THE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, D.C., July 27, 1982.

Hon. MELVIN PRICE,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It is my understanding that Congressmen Simon and Green have proposed amendments to the FY 83 Defense Authorization Bill that would strike 715 million dollars in RDT&E basing funds from the President's FY 83 request for M-X. This amendment could have significant adverse affect to the M-X program.

As you know, we will select a basing mode for the M-X no later than December of this year. This will give us the long term survivability and endurance we need in the ICBM leg of our Strategic Triad. We have agreed to restrict the use of certain basing funds for M-X until we have made our decision and obtained the approval of Congress to move forward. Our studies to date indicate that Closely Space Basing is an attractive alternative, but it is not the only alternative and should not be pre-selected at this time. If the Simon/Green amendment passes, we could find ourselves faced with an automatic program delay and significant escalation in system cost.

We appreciate your continued support of the President's M-X program including the basing and procurement funds so that we can begin the deployment of this vital modernization of our ICBM force as soon as the basing decision is made. Strong bipartisan support of the M-X is essential to the successful pursuit of the START negotiations now under way in Geneva. I cannot over emphasize the importance of your strong support at this critical time for our nation.

Sincerely,

FRANK CARLUCCI.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

□ 1530

Mr. STRATTON. So what the Secretary is telling us is, now that the House has decided to go ahead with the MX, as we did last week, we certainly ought to give to the President and to the Secretary of Defense, while they seek to find the best mode for this very important missile, every cooperation, and that the money that was cut out by the other body is now of essential importance in getting the best, fastest, and most effective research.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New York, for yielding.

But, let me ask, is it not true that in fact, even if this amendment passes, there is funding in the bill for research and development on the long-term options?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to reply, the point is, how do you know which will be the long-term option and how do you know which will not? How do you know whether it is the aspirin that is going to cure your fever or whether it is the antibiotic? You do not know until you try them, and that is exactly what we do not know about the adequacy of the basing. Which one is the one that is going to be selected?

The only difference between short-term and long-term is that the "long-term guy" is the one who wins the race.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague, the gentleman from New York, yield again?

Mr. STRATTON. Surely, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, my understanding was that the administration was committed to presenting to this Congress a proposal for the long-term basing of the MX missile by December 1 of this year.

Now my colleague has just conceded that this bill, even if the Simon-Green amendment passes, has funding for research and development on the long-term options with respect to the MX missile. We do not touch that in the Simon-Green amendment.

Since that funding is still there—and indeed I understand that the Armed Services Committee cut that a little bit—then why does the gentleman have to preserve $715 million to research the MX in an interim basing mode that no one wants? We have got money in here for long-term basing. The gentleman just told me so himself.

Why does the gentleman need to preserve $715 million when we have other funds in this bill that we do not touch that are designed to deal with whatever recommendation the administration provides us by December 1?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman has a personal crystal ball of his own, I would like to have him tell me what the long-term basing mode is going to be. We do not know which one is eventually going to be selected, and the Defense Department and the President of the United States are going to be working their butts off between now and the end of December to figure out which one is to be the winner.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to think that because he called something or other an interim basing mode, that is going to be the basing mode that will be used between now and December and the long-term one will be used after December. But we are no longer in that business.

The President, by virtue of the pressure that the other body put on him, has now agreed to make a decision on the long-term mode by December. But between now and December the money that the gentleman's amendment would cut out would impede the President's efforts to come up with the best possible basing mode.

Since the gentleman was so generous to get me additional time, I will yield to him right away, but first let me just point out to the gentleman that the other body, which the gentleman is so supportive of, actually put back $560 million for long-term basing precisely for the same reason that we oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the amount that the other body added was not $565 million but $255 million, which is far less than the amount that we are talking about. That made a total of $565 million.

But I would return to the gentleman's acknowledgement that even after the Simon-Green amendment is passed, this bill contains funding which the Simon-Green amendment does not touch for research and development on long-term options for the MX missile.

Mr. STRATTON. How much does it include?

Mr. GREEN. My understanding is that you had cut $150 million of what the administration had asked for in terms of long-term basing. My understanding is that that would leave $160 million that would still be there in terms of research on long-term basing options.

I am not criticizing the committee's decision in cutting that $150 million, but I do not for the life of me understand, when there is money in the bill that is specifically aimed at long-term options for the MX missile, the gentleman insists on keeping $715 million that is aimed only at research on using the missile in an interim basing mode that no one wants to use.

We have enough money sloshing around in terms of funds that have been authorized and appropriated for the Defense Department without authorizing further money in a way that no one wants to use it when there are other funds that will be available to research whatever the administration proposes next December.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, let me just respond to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) on that point.

The gentleman says there will be $160 million. To quote my good old friend, the President of Pakistan, $160 million in this game is just "peanuts." It is just——

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. STRATTON. Let me finish, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) controls the time.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the close-base spacing option, Dense Pack, happens to be the one that is ultimately selected, we are going to need all the $715 million which the gentleman's amendments cuts out, plus the remaining $160 million.

As to the miracle drug that is going to cure your asthma or whatever it is you have got, you never know exactly what the price will be, but it is wise to leave enough money in so that you can afford to pay for the drug when it shows up at the drug store.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, why do we have to leave in money to pay for something that is only a nostrum and is medicine that no one wants to use? That is what the gentleman is insisting on.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the point is that the same money that we have in the bill is good at no matter what drug store we go to, and the fact of the matter is that the Dense Pack is going to be as expensive as probably $800 million or $900 million. That is why we need to keep this money in, so we can get the best basing mode.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman?

Mr. STRATTON. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, who is very knowledgeable on this subject.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I want to say that I congratulate the gentleman on his substitute. I think it is a worthwhile substitute, but since the gentleman is an expert in the area, I would like to ask him some questions.

It is my understanding that the $715 million for basing that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) proposed to delete is for primary basing, and yet there is a dispute by the gentleman from New York over a suggestion by the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) who argues that "even if we delete $715 million, there is an additional $160 million for long-term basing."

But is there not a difference between those two figures? It is my understanding that the $715 million is for primary basing, no matter what that may be, and if we delete that, we are simply going to be deleting the money necessary for research and development for primary basing.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. COURTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the $160 million is for long-term augmentation of permanent basing and, therefore, it is not really moneys for research and development in the primary basing mode; is that correct?

Mr. STRATTON. That is correct. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for just one moment further, I believe that even if the statement of the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) was correct with regard to that $715 million—and I believe he is not correct—regardless of that, the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON), I believe, should satisfy the concerns of the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) because it fences in the money; it does not permit that money to be used until the President makes his basing decision sometime in December.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STRATTON. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, just so the record will be clear as to just what the $715 million encompasses, it is research and development on interim basing, and it is designed to look at the mechanical systems, the electrical systems, the electronic systems, the systems test, the deployment, and the facilities for interim basing. That is what the administration request is that was adopted by the Armed Services Committee.

Now, it is rather startling when one looks at this, that the Armed Services Committee adopted that but in fact it cut the funding that the administration requested for long-term options.

All we are saying in this amendment is that everyone has agreed, despite the administration's original request, that the Minuteman basing mode does not work.

□ 1540

This money is designed for the Minuteman basing mode. There is other money for long-term options, money which was cut by the Armed Services Committee, and I cannot quarrel with that decision.

Mr. STRATTON. I think the gentleman is hung up on a semantic problem. He has in his amendment the term "interim basing" and because those are a couple of words he thinks that it represents something that is walking around somewhere.

But, in fact, the interim basing is something which has very largely been superseded by the actions that evolved in this House last week when the President made a commitment to come up with a final basing mode at the end of December. The fact of the matter is that if he does that, and we certainly anticipate that he will, there will not be any need to spend any money on an interim basin; and we simply do not want to foreclose the option that the President might decide that the closed space basing is the best way to go. That would require not only the $715 million that was cut out, but probably more as well.

You certainly do now want to deny the President that option.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield further, in addition to the money we have been discussing, there is $1,734,000,000 for the research on the missile itself. So I think there is a lot of research money for this missile in the long-term mode in this bill. There will be a lot of money for the long-term mode, close to $2 billion, even if the Simon-Green amendment passes.

All we are saying is the money which the administration earmarked for the interim basing mode for Minuteman silos is no longer needed and you have close to $2 billion for the rest.

Mr. STRATTON. I do not know where the gentleman learned his arithmetic but $715 million is a lot more money than $160 million.

The gentleman keeps on talking about how we have too much money in the bill; $160 million to him and to me sounds like a lot of money. But when you get into the research and development of, let us say, this closed space basing, that is not enough money. You have to have more.

Why should we allow the gentleman to take it out simply because the words "interim basing" is in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield, there is $1,734,000,000 for research on the missile itself. So we are not talking of just $160 million. We are talking about $1,734,000,000 in addition to the $160 million.

Mr. STRATTON. That is for the missile, not for the basing.

Let us not mix up oranges and apples in the gentleman's zeal to try to cut out what is one of the most important weapons systems to match the excess capability of the Soviet Union in the land-based missile field.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is presented as an effort merely to delete interim basing money but, in fact, is one of the more cleverly drafted amendments that we get each year to try to slow down our strategic modernization program, and it should be defeated.

We debated this issue last week and the House concluded that the production of the MX should go forward. The committee leadership proposed at the time, and the House concurred, that we would "fence" basing money—that is, prohibit its obligation—until the President reports back on an alternative basing mode and 30 days of congressional session have elapsed.

We indicated we would take the same steps in title II and Mr. STRATTON, on his behalf and mine, is offering such an amendment today. What the amendment does is prohibit the obligation of funds, some $715 million, until the President notifies the Congress of an alternative basing mode selected and until the Congress has had 30 days to consider it.

Keep in mind that that is 30 days of session and that if there is a break between the first session and the second session, we start counting again when the second session begins. So there would likely be considerably more than 30 days.

It should also be kept in mind that the original stated purpose of the gentleman's amendment has already been accomplished. The gentleman indicated that the Senate held up money originally planned for an interim basing mode in an effort to force the administration to speed up the identification of a permanent basing mode. At the time, the administration was not scheduled to make a determination on an interim basin mode until June or July of 1983.

As a result of the Senate action, work was accelerated on investigating alternative basing modes and the President now anticipates that a recommendation will be to the Congress by the first of December.

The purpose of the amendment, therefore, has already been achieved.

We want to retain these funds in the bill so they will be available for the new basing mode and so that we will not have to further delay the planned deployment of this needed system.

It may be that in working out differences with the Senate in conference we may have pressure to reduce the figure somewhat. But retaining the House figure gives us some flexibility to work out a reasonable agreement in conference and not shortchange the system.

To delete the R. & D. money now after having voted to retain the procurement money would make the House look foolish.

To make a substantial reduction in the money now would send the wrong signal to the Soviets. It would send a signal of uncertainty and confusion to our allies. And worst of all, it would undercut the position of our negotiators at the START talks in Geneva.

Keep in mind always that those negotiations are very difficult for our side because we are talking about a comparison between U.S. systems in development and Soviet systems deployed. The Soviets have 300 SS-18's deployed, operational, ready to fire.

The MX, with our best effort, will not be deployed until 1986, and even then, is only half the size and has only half the throwweight capability of the SS-18.

To tell our negotiators in Geneva now that we are going to slow down the development of our system would make it even more difficult for them and would work toward removing the incentive for the Soviets to negotiate seriously.

The Secretary of Defense has stated that strategic modernization is his No. 1 priority—even higher on the priority list than building up the Navy. The reason for that is simply that the strategic forces have been the most neglected for the last 15 years.

I urge the Members of the House in the strongest terms to reject the Simon-Green amendment and to approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, (Mr. STRATTON).

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(By unanimous consent Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.)

□ 1550

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a vital issue and a most important amendment that is being offered. I know the authors of the amendment and I know of their sincerity and their genuine concern. But I think that, in fairness to the taxpayers, the American people, the Department of Defense, and this administration, perhaps we ought to put things in perspective, because I think things are garbled and out of perspective, and I do not know that we are considering them in their proper context.

Some time back, we were looking at a number of basing modes for the MX. Well, first off, do we need an MX? What is the purpose of it?

Well, if I might go back a ways—and I am sure this is rudimentary and well-known to all within the hearing of my voice, but let me go over it a bit. We have the Minuteman III ICBM in silos that are there as a deterrent so that no power—in this case, the Soviet Union—would feel emboldened and adventuresome and would ever try to take advantage of the United States by their nuclear capability.

Well, we came out some time back with the realization that we had a window of vulnerability that we were facing. Well, now what does that mean—"window of vulnerability"?

Well, we know from monitoring Soviet missile shots over a long period of time that they have been increasing their accuracy without changing their yield, because they already had the yield built in, and we know that over a number of years they have been increasing their accuracy and increasing their technology all the time that SALT I was in place, and they were not prohibited from doing this. SALT I precludes deploying more missiles, but it does not preclude increased accuracy and efficiency of missile systems. So for a number of years while we have had SALT in place, the Soviets had a bigger bank because they did not have the accuracy of United States missiles, and in order to have an insured kill of the target, they had a bigger explosion.

So that has been the basic philosophical difference between the Soviets and the United States, going way back to the beginning.

So when SALT I came about and was signed and put in place, it limited the number of missiles that each side could deploy, but it did not say anything about improving the missile system. So we had a smaller warhead because we depended on our technology and accuracy. The Soviets did not have this. They went for a bigger bang, a bigger throw weight and a bigger explosion at impact.

But all during the SALT prohibitions on putting out new weapons, they were improving their accuracy. It is no secret now, I am sure, but one of the main things that we lost when we lost Iran as a friend were two very important monitoring stations on the Soviet border where we could monitor missile tests that the Soviets were performing on a systematic basis. We could see how much more accuracy they were building into their systems and we could project ahead and say, "Look, they are making this advance and we can project ahead to say that if they continue to improve their missiles, by the year 1982, 1983, at the latest 1985, all of our Minuteman III silos will be in jeopardy because they would have the accuracy to take them out, whether they were hardened or non-hardened silos."

We know now that 1982 is the year, according to our intelligence estimates, and our Minuteman silos are within the so-called window of vulnerability.

So this administration and the previous administration recognized that, from this period of 1982, in a first strike the Soviets could take out 90 percent of our ICBM's. This leaves us, so to speak, rather naked.

So we have been of the opinion since this was recognized as a fact—and I think the entire intelligence community agrees to this—that we have to do something. Well, what do you do?

Well, in order to make us less vulnerable the Department of Defense has tried to come up with a different mode to base the ICBM's. This has caused a great deal of consternation, and it has not been resolved yet. We came out with the theory of the racetrack, where the missiles be shuttled among a series of shelters—because we are limited to the number of missiles we can employ, but we are not limited in the number of holes in the ground.

So we have the MPS, the multiple protected shelters, in which you could put these missiles. So we had a field of missiles, and then we had a racetrack so that one vehicle could go around the track and periodically move the missile from here to there to generate a level of uncertainty as to the missiles' location.

This became a political brouhaha, so to speak. Residents of the States where they were supposed to be based said, "Thank you very much, but we do not believe we would like them based in our State." A number of political factors came into being, and we examined additional methods, including the continuous patrol aircraft. We were going to have aircrafts flying all the time, 50 percent of them would be in the air at all times carrying a missile. Nobody would know where they were. They could not be targeted. And there was the deep underground basing mode, which is still viable. Then there is a dense pack—which is to be distinguished from the six-pack—where enough missiles are placed in a confined area so if one nuclear explosion should go off there, it would put up enough debris, and so forth, into the atmosphere, so that any other following incoming missiles would self-destruct. They would hit rocks and debris, and so forth, and they would either be destroyed or would be inaccurate.

We do not know what is the best basing mode. For this reason the National Security Council and our Department of Defense, our research and development part of the Department of Defense, has not come up with a single recommendation as "this is the best." For this reason the President of the United States has communicated to the Congress, and he has written me a letter, a copy of which I have here, in effect saying that if you give them a little more time, they will come up with a recommendation, based on the best scientific brains that we have in this country, the best recommendation as to what would be the basing mode.

The President wrote me, as he did other Members of the committee, dated July 15, of this year. It says, "Dear Bill"—and I am skipping part—"I believe that we must make a solid commitment this year to deploy the MX missile. We simply cannot allow the land-based leg of the triad to remain vulnerable. We must show our allies that we can make the hard decisions necessary to modernize our strategic nuclear capability decisions that promise to have great influence on the pace of ongoing theater nuclear force modernization initiatives within NATO. And while it is my intention that the MX not be a 'bargaining chip' in the START negotiations," the President says, "we need to secure the powerful leverage that a commitment to produce the MX would provide as we begin effective arms reduction talks with the Soviets."

And he goes on, and it is signed, "Ronald Reagan."

The point is that we must make a decision. The President, who is the Commander in Chief, has said that he will make this decision. As a matter of fact, the National Security Council is to make its recommendation to the President by November 1 of this year. The President has assured us that he will make his decision and recommendation to the Congress by December 1 of this year.

We have already approved money in this budget for the production of the MX missile. What we are talking about now is research and development even leading up to the production. We have already approved this last week.

□ 1600

What the Simon-Green amendment would do is take out the research and development money for basing, even though we have already approved the production of it. This hardly makes sense.

What we are asking from the committee and what the administration is asking of this House is that we go forward with the money and with the research and development necessary.

What the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is saying is, "Hey, we have this money in here for basing," and he would fence this money, fence it off and say that it cannot be spent until the President does what he told us he would do in his letter that is, report to the Congress what basing mode he intends to recommend. After that period, we will have 30 days, the Congress will have 30 legislative days to either accept what he says or reject it; but we should not in the meantime deny to this administration and send a signal to the world that we are inconclusive, that we cannot make up our minds, that we are vacillating, that we are not resolved to go forward with the basing mode, to put it in place, build the MX missile.

Hopefully, God knows I hope this happens, that we can come together with the Soviets and come to an accord, an agreement, that we will not continue the arms race, that we will deescalate, that the Soviets will move out their over 300 SS-20's they have in place in Western Europe today aimed at the NATO countries. Each missile has three warheads independently targeted, over a thousand targeted now. They have gone forward with the SS-18 as well as the SS-20; they have a formidable arsenal already in place.

What we would be foolish to do, in my opinion, is to deny the research and development funds to go forward in an orderly process, even though we have now approved the money for procurement. The President has said that he will make his recommendation by December. For that reason, he is deferring it to study it as far as needed. He will report to us. We, in turn, will have an option to accept or reject, because we built in the follow-on time to give us the opportunity to reflect and to study. For us to precipitously before the fact take out the money to deny it under reasearch and development I think, is being very shortsighted indeed.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would be very pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman is making a very fine analysis of the background of this particular decision. I think the gentleman makes it very clear and very articulate.

As the gentleman was pointing out, my amendment would fence off the $715 million that the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York want to cut out of the bill for and interim basing mode and under that amendment as soon as the President makes his decision at the end of the year, is it not the case that that decision will become the permanent basing mode?

Mr. DICKINSON. Unless we reject it.

Mr. STRATTON. Unless we reject it.

Mr. DICKINSON. But we have that option.

Mr. STRATTON. Therefore, we do not want to eliminate the money that might be needed to fund the President's decision.

Mr. DICKINSON. Exactly, and getting back to the point made by my friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York, he says, "No impact by what they are doing." This is simply not so.

Also the argument has been made that the Senate took out the money, so why do we not go along with the Senate? This is not so. The Senate put in $565 million for what we are attempting to do, even though the House figure is over $700 million; but it really does not make any difference. The fact is the Senate put in $565 million.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, this will be the last request I will make for additional time.

So we have claims and counterclaims, charges and countercharges; but the fact is that some statements that have been made here are in error.

It will have a very serious impact. It will send a wrong message to the world around if we take out this money.

The Senate did, in fact, put $565 million in here, so it is not a zero figure. What we are trying to do is say, "Well, you know, there is no reason to scale it down to that." The figure we are using is what the administration requested, based on a finding by the President and a certification by him to the Congress that this according to all our scientific knowledge and expertise, is the way to go and this is what he is recommending. Then we have 30 legislative days, not calendar days, to examine what the President has recommended to us, to accept or reject; but if we take it out in advance, then we are being terribly shortsighted. We are sending the wrong message to the people.

General Rowny and those who are involved right today in the START talks in Geneva are having the rug pulled out from under them. They could not look at their counterparts across the table, the Soviets, and say, "Hey, we want to talk seriously. We want to talk business."

They would just look back with a smile and say, "Your Congress has already denied this. There is no need to talk about it."

Is this what we want to do? Of course not, but that is the effect of what we are doing; so let us not be pennywise and pound-foolish. Let us not deny ourselves an advantage.

Leave the money in for research and development. Let the President make his finding of fact. Certify it to us. Give us an opportunity to study it and say whether this is good or not. Then we can ratify or not; but let us not deny ourselves the opportunity and the right in advance before the President has even made a finding of fact.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would just like to engage in a slight colloquy with the gentleman.

Last week I was on the floor of the House and the gentleman was as well on the floor of the House when there was the Mavroules-Byron amendment, I believe, to the procurement section. I believe it was under title I. That particular amendment had the complete deletion of basing mode moneys for procurement.

There was a substitute, I believe, by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) that from a substantive standpoint, is it not true, is very similar to the substitute he has today?

Mr. DICKINSON. It fits the money.

Mr. COURTER. Exactly. The body rejected the Mavroules-Byron amendment to delete those basing mode moneys last week and this is simply the repeat of that exercise today.

Mr. DICKINSON. This is in place. Even more seriously, we were talking about production money last time. This is research and development, even less.

Mr. COURTER. That is my point. If the House last week would reject that amendment last week with regard to production, therefore for sure with greater reason they would reject this amendment that has to do with research and development.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KRAMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate his statement, because I think it has clarified an important point in this debate and please correct me if I am wrong.

As I understand the argument of the gentleman from New York, he is arguing that in effect if his amendment were to pass, all it would do is knock out temporary basing money and there would still be funds available to do the R. & D. necessary to find a permanent home for the missile.

If I understand what the gentleman is saying, that is incorrect, that in effect there no longer is, given the substitute of the gentleman from New York, there really is no longer interim basing money in the bill at all. In effect, there is only permanent basing money, so if we were not to accept the Stratton amendment and accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York, in effect we will have no money in the bill or very little money or inadequate money for building the basing mode.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not sure we are on the same frequency; but really, we must keep the research and development money in here for basing, as well as for the missile because that is where we are. We are not ready to start production, even though we approved it last week; so this would be very shortsighted and very injurious to the whole process.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would be very pleased to yield to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank my colleague for his courtesy in yielding.

I would like to point out, first, that the situation is not analogous to that of last week when we dealt with the Mavroules-Byron amendment, because the Mavroules-Byron amendment knocked out every penny of the $1,497,100,000 for procurement of the MX missile.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. KRAMER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, that is not our case here.

Mr. DICKINSON. Tell us, what is our case here?

Mr. GREEN. As I understand our case here, we are knocking out $715 million that the administration requested for R.D.T. & E. on an interim basis. We are not touching $1,734,000,000 that the administration asked for R.D.T. & E. on the missile itself, nor are we touching the $310 million that the administration asked for R.D.T. & E. on long-term options.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right, let me reclaim my time and then I will be glad to go back and forth with the gentleman.

What the gentleman is doing, he is saying that we have approved the money for procurement. The gentleman is saying that he does not want to give them any money for research and development on how to base it.

Now, the President has said, "Give me until December and we will make a recommendation and then we can decide whether to accept it or not."

□ 1610

But why take out the money to research and develop the basing mode—that is what you are trying to do—and then approve the money for procurement? That is ludicrous.

Mr. GREEN. Again, if the gentleman would be good enough to yield to me, and I thank him for yielding, we are not touching a large amount of R.D.T. & E. money, we are not touching the $1.7 billion for research on the missile itself, nor are we touching what the committee left of the administration's $310 million request for R.D.T. & E. on long-term options. All we are touching is the request that the administration made for R.D.T. & E. on an interim basing system that no one wants.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will wait a minute, if he will hold it, where does the gentleman get that statement that no one wants it?

Mr. GREEN. Everyone here is saying we are going right to the long-term system on December 1, no later.

Mr. DICKINSON. Maybe. Maybe.

The gentleman is making assertions of fact that are just not fact. What we are trying to do is to leave money in here to research and develop so he can make a recommendation to us that we could buy off on, or not. Now, is that not the fact?

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I would point out we are leaving in $1.7 billion-plus for R.D.T. & E. on the missile, and when the gentleman goes to conference, even if the Simon-Green amendment passes, he will be going to conference on the committee's recommendation of $160 million for research and development on long-term options.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the missile.

Mr. GREEN. As was pointed out after the other body adopted the equivalent of the Simon-Green amendment, it provided $565 million for R.D.T. & E. on long-term options. So the gentleman has plenty of flexibility in the conference to deal with long-term options. All we are asking is that the money the administration requested for the R.D.T. & E. on the interim basing mode, which was designed for putting the MX missile in the Minuteman silos, be taken out. We do not touch the gentleman's freedom to go ahead on the long-term options.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will permit me to reclaim my time, what the gentleman is saying, and this is what makes it so ridiculous, it is OK to buy the thing but you cannot study how to use it. That is ridiculous. We are trying to come up with a scheme, a system, a design for how it can best be employed, deployed, and used.

The gentleman is saying, "Do not study that, just go ahead and buy it."

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield further, all we are saying is study it some $2 billion worth but do not go studying the thing that everyone has decided not to do.

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, the gentleman may have decided not to do it, but no one else I know of has decided not to do it. That is just in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is saying he is leaving in $1.4 billion for R. & D. on the missile. That does not do any good on the basing mode, as I pointed out earlier, and as I think the gentleman from Alabama has already indicated; if the President were to decide on the closed-space basing in December, there is simply not going to be enough money in the bill to carry out the research on that particular basing mode.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me say in closing, and I have taken too much time, perhaps, if the President decides on a deep underground basing mode or DUM, he is going to have me in opposition. There is no way I would go with that.

If that is what you are talking about, a missile that is going to burrow itself out 5 days after the war goes on, I think that is dumb.

If we are talking about the Continuous Aircraft Patrol, that is more dumb than the one about burrowing out of the ground. So I do not know what they are going to come up with. I do not say I am going to buy it; if they are talking about the DUM system, that is dumb. But I do not support the concept that we should deny research and development funds to study it.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Let me see if I can understand what the amendment does, because I think maybe the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has a point here on the amendment that he is offering as a substitute.

I think what we are doing, in effect, is the right way to go. As I understand it, when the money was put into this defense bill it was for an interim basing mode. At that time, the interim basing mode was hardened, fixed Minuteman silos and the object was to put the MX missile in the hardened silos.

Since that time, there have been a number of comments made that that was not a very sensible proposal, and I think there was even the suggestion that the Secretary of Defense himself, at a press conference, had indicated that he was moving away from that idea. But as I understand it, he never sent any official word to Congress, to any of the committees, actually backing off of that idea.

So the money is still in the bill. What the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) want to do is to take that money out of the bill on the grounds that in fact this interim basing money is no longer needed because the interim basing method that we were talking about, namely, putting the MX in the fixed Minuteman silos, was no longer a viable option; therefore, we ought to take the money out.

But what the amendment of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) does, it seems to me, is to change the focus of this money. What he is saying is that the $715 million cannot be spent until a basing system has been decided upon and 30 days have elapsed.

In essence, is it not true that is what you are doing then, I ask the gentleman from New York, is meld the money from the interim basing money with the long-term basing money and in effect blur the distinction between the two?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct. And the reason for doing that, the rationale for doing it, is that in the debate last week we had a commitment from the President of the United States that he has decided to beef up the schedule for making a decision on the so-called long-term, or the permanent basing plan, and that decision is going to be made in December. The two sums can then go together.

Mr. ASPIN. Yes. So in effect, what the gentleman's amendment is is to blur the distinction; in effect, eliminate the distinction between the money for the interim silo and the long-term basing mode.

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York does not merge those two; it does not say this money can be available only if you have the long-term decision made.

What the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) and I want to do is to say, "Let us not waste $715 million on an interim basing mode that is very, very shortly going to be completely wasted."

Now, if the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) will modify his amendment to say that that money will be available only when the President makes a long-term decision, then I think my colleague from New York (Mr. GREEN) and I would be willing to take another look at it. But that is not, with all due respect to the gentleman from Wisconsin, what the amendment says.

Mr. ASPIN. I think the gentleman may have a point but I am not sure. What we are saying here, what the gentleman's amendment says, is that "none of this money may be obligated until the President completes his review of the alternative MX missile system basing modes and notifies the Congress in writing of the basing mode in which the MX missile would be deployed."

It seems to me he is talking about the permanent basing mode there. He cannot be talking about the interim basing mode. It is the permanent one. It is the review of the permanent one that makes the decision.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield further?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield further to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman I thank the gentleman for yielding further.

What we are talking about is an amendment which the two of us, on the interim basing mode, and the gentleman from New York is offering an amendment in response to our amendment, which is clearly about the interim-basing mode.

Mr. ASPIN. I understand. But it seems to me that the net effect of the amendment of the gentleman from New York is to meld this money and make the interim-basing mode money applicable to the permanent basing mode.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has expired.

(On request of Mr. STRATTON and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON), and he may want to consult some of the people at the staff table there, but let us say the amendment of the gentleman from New York passes, and none of this money can be spent until the President determines a basing mode and 30 days have elapsed.

□ 1620

Let us say that by December he decides on a permanent basing mode, whatever it is. Thirty days go by and he wants to use this interim basing money for research and development on the permanent basing mode, does he have to ask for a reprograming? Is that a reprograming decision?

Mr. STRATTON. The answer to that is no, because we did not specify that this money could be used only for an interim basing mode. If the gentleman will yield, I think his discussion is a very clear discussion and might produce some results here because the gentleman from Illinois, who is always cooperative and clearheaded, indicated that if I were willing to amend my amendment by indicating that if it was the long-term basing mode we were talking about the President notifying the Congress about in writing, that then he would reconsider his position.

I would be happy to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that on line 7 of my amendment I would be happy to insert, if I get whatever permission is required, the term "long-term" before the word "basing" on line 7. I would do that, of course, only if the gentleman would then support my substitute amendment.

Mr. ASPIN. Let us explore the issue with the gentleman from Illinois before the gentlemen from New York makes his request. Would that satisfy the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SIMON. I do not want to be speaking for the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) but in effect what we want to do then in the amendment of the gentleman from New York is kill this interim basing mode, and that is the aim of our amendment. As far as I am concerned, I would be willing to accept that amendment. I do not want to speak for the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise one further question, because I think it is an important one. The administration request has two different line items, if you will. There is the $715 million we are talking about for the interim basing mode, and we will be going to conference with a decision of the other body to delete that, so it is between $715 million and zero.

The next item in the administration request is the second line item, and in essence that is the R.D.T. & E. on long-term option. The administration requested $310 million. The Armed Services Committee recommendation cut that to $160 million. The other body, however, increased it to $565 million.

Mr. ASPIN. That is correct.

Mr. GREEN. So I would be a little concerned if we found ourselves in the posture where the administration request for $310 million for long-term basing R. & D. could wind up in the conference at $715 million on one line item, and $565 million on the next line item, and we would suddenly find ourselves with $1.285 billion being spent on something for which the administration requested $310 million.

Mr. ASPIN. I follow the gentleman's concern. I do think, though, in the long run we are going to end up with more money in the long-term basing mode no matter what happens. The indications are that this is just a downpayment, and if we put the $715 million into the long-term leasing mode, as the gentleman from New York wanted, it would be money well spent.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will yield again, I would be happy to join my colleague from Illinois if we could get some assurance that we would not go outside the limits on the long-term proposition which the other body has come up with in terms of their increase in the administration's recommendation, which is $565 million.

What concerns me, if we go to the outside limits of the scope of the conference on both the interim basing request, if it is to be made available for long-term basing R. & D. plus the administration request for long-term basing R. & D., we would wind up with something more than four times what the administration requested.

Mr. ASPIN. But there is one more point. It is that the House Armed Services Committee has already struck $150 million for the long term.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

(At the request of Mr. STRATTON and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. If we now add $715 million back, we will in effect have almost $565 million.

Mr. STRATTON. About $865 million.

Mr. ASPIN. No; it is subtraction.

Mr. STRATTON. We let in $150 million; we took $150 million out.

Mr. ASPIN. You left $160 million in.

Mr. STRATTON. All right, $875 million.

Mr. ASPIN. So, it would go to conference with $875 million and $565 million.

Mr. GREEN. Unfortunately you do not, because they are separate items. You go to conference with $715 million and zero in one item, where you could come out with $715 million and go to conference with $160 million and $565 million, and could come out with $565 million. That I find a very difficult position to find ourselves in. You may wind up with $1.280 billion where the administration requested $310 million.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise this point before the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York agree to this request. It perhaps is a subtle difference in what is taking place here.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin is in fact right, which appears to be acknowledged by the gentleman from New York, what is simply accomplished here is moving the $715 million from the interim basing mode into the long-term basing mode. The net result would be, if we agree to the gentleman's request, that we are in effect going to still spend that money in the different context, being the long-term basing mode, whereas if we go to a vote on the Simon-Green amendment and it is adopted, we will eliminate spending $715 million which ultimately, I think, under the assumption that the gentleman from Wisconsin is correct, it is going to be spent, so I think there is a not so subtle difference; that is, if we go forward with the Simon-Green amendment as proposed, we have a chance to eliminate spending in a method I think is appropriate for the Department of Defense.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I think the gentleman from Ohio overlooks the fact that in order to spend this money the President has first of all to report to the Congress, and we than have 30 legislative days in which to reject his recommendation if we do not want it, so that money is not automatically going to be spent simply because the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York have agreed to the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. ECKART. If the gentleman will allow me, if in fact we adopt his suggested substitute as amended, inserting the words "long-term", then in fact do not we move the $715 million over to the long-term basing mode?

Mr. STRATTON. Those other two things are accomplished.

Mr. ASPIN. I think the gentleman is correct, but what I am saying is, we will end up probably spending that kind of money in any case. Once this decision has been made there is not going to be any $565 million spent on this interim basing mode, if we were to take the money out of the interim basing mode and put it into the long-term basing mode, which I think is the result of the amendment of the gentleman from New York, in which I think the gentleman from Illinois really wanted to do and the gentleman from New York wanted to do, it seems to me that makes a lot of sense. It is the right thing to do. We ought to be spending the money on research and development to look at this things.

If it were my choice, I would not have taken out the money for the continuous patrol aircraft. I think we ought to look at all options. I was not all that happy with the committee taking that money out. I do not think Mr. EMERY's amendment to eliminate the research and development money for deep underground ought to be taken out either. We ought to look at the options.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, to try to cut through this, at the present time if one went to conference on the funding for the long-term option, the maximum amount within the scope of that conference would be $565 million.

Mr. ASPIN. Right, and the minimum would be $160 million.

Mr. GREEN. If we could have some assurance from the committee, one, that the Stratton amendment would be amended so that the funding that is fenced off, as the gentleman from New York says, would be used only for long-term basing, a maximum amount that would be sought for long-term basing would be set at $565 million, then obviously I think we have——

Mr. STRATTON. I think the gentleman from New York realizes, of course, that the House Armed Services Committee or the House cannot commit the conference. We have to go to conference.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. We have to go to conference with the other body, but the gentleman can have our assurance that we will certainly fight to make sure that that is all used for the permanent basing mode.

□ 1630

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed, the point is that the House position is to defend what passes the House. The House position, if it passes this bill after this amendment is adopted, would be that there is $715 million in one account and only $160 million in the other account. The Senate position would be that there would be $565 million in one account and zero in the other account. It is inconceivable to me that the number does not come out somewhere in the middle on both of those accounts.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, if I could get some sort of assurance that that would be the case, I would be more amenable.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will make the assurance that they will fight for the House position.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me, as a matter of fact, from reading the Senate report on page 59, it turns out that what they say is that "$250 million is recommended for authorization for development activities necessary to bring about the earliest possible initial operational capability of a permanent rather than an interim survivable basing for the MX." And that figure, with a figure of $310 million which I did not read earlier, add up to the $565 million, and they are specifically designating it all for a permanent basing mode.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have no quarrel with what my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON), has just said, that the maximum that could be spent on long-term basing, if we went to a conference between what the other body has done and what our Armed Services Committee recommends to us, would be $565 million. That is plain.

Mr. STRATTON. The conference can choose between the two figures.

Mr. GREEN. I do understand that.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) will assure the other gentleman from New York that the gentleman from New York will fight for the House position, I think that is enough and that should satisfy him, because the House position is, of course, a much lower position on the long-term basing mode. If the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) can assure the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) that we will fight for the House position—I say, "we"; I am not on the conference—that the House conferees will fight for the House position, I think that will take care of the gentleman's concerns.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I am not sure it does, because if my colleague, the gentleman from New York, would amend his amendment, there would then be $715 million plus $160 million or $880 million available for the long-term basing.

Mr. ASPIN. It would be $875 million.

Mr. GREEN. Yes; $875 million. I stand corrected.

That I find troublesome, particularly since as one goes to conference, we are not absolutely sure exactly——

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has expired.

(On request of Mr. STRATTON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I cannot understand why the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN), who is a strong supporter of the President and a strong supporter of our national defense, should have any trouble with trying to get the President of the United States the money that is required to do the adequate research on a permanent basing, which is exactly what we want and, I am sure, what he wants. The sooner we get that basing underway, the more secure our country will be.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, my problem is that the President of the United States asked for $310 million on long-term option R.D.T. & E. It is a little troublesome to find ourselves going into a position where we could come out of conference with over $1.2 billion or four times more than what the gentleman has asked for.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, the first point is, of course, that we are not going to be at $1.2 billion at the end of the conference, and the second point is, of course, that we have taken out $750 million in the interim basing mode. The third point is that in the long run we have to spend more money on the interim basing mode.

What the gentleman has accomplished and what the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) has accomplished by this amendment is to eliminate some funding which would be in the interim basing mode and which really would be wasted and put the money into the long-term basing mode. That is exactly where it should be spent.

Whatever the amount is that is spent in this bill, will have to spend more in future years. So to take this money out of a place where it is going to be wasted and put it in a place where it is going to do some good is a real accomplishment, and the money will not be wasted even if it went into the full funding, and it will not.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, how does the gentleman from Wisconsin rationalize that there was testimony for $300 million for long-term basing and testimony for support of $700 million for short-term interim basing, and now in effect we are going to move an extra $700 million into long term for which there is apparently no support?

Mr. ASPIN. Because what has happened is that since then the Senate has put the administration's feet to the fire, and the House Armed Services Committee has concurred that we have to come up with a basing mode decision by December 1. If they had known that 1 month or 2 months into the fiscal year they would have to come back with a basing mode, my guess is that they would have asked for a lot more money on the long-term basing mode.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be in the position of backing out on an amendment that I am cosponsoring with my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) without his approval, but it does seem to me that what we have won with this modified Stratton amendment is the elimination of the interim basing mode, and that is a significant victory for the people of this country.

No. 2, with all due respect for our fine friends on the Armed Services Committee, it is not so much what they work out in conference there, but what the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations is going to do, what our colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ADDABBO), and his friends will do, and I think frankly that they will pull this figure down significantly.

So with that understanding—and I am not sure where we are—perhaps we can proceed.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, let me say first of all that I would like to assure my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) that the gentleman in the well (Mr. ASPIN) and I can guarantee this from long experience—is really no patsy for the Defense Department, so he is not giving us phony figures or kidding us in any way.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my substitute amendment may be modified by inserting on line 7, after the words "of the," "long-term."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do so to propound a question to the gentleman from New York.

What assurances do we have that in fact the President will be making a decision by the end of this calendar year?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, let me say that if the President does not, the money is still fenced in. That is the purpose of our particular amendment.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, continuing to reserve my right to object, under the gentleman's amendment, as it would be modified, would the failure of the administration to propose a long-term basing mode in fact keep this money unobligated and unspent?

Mr. STRATTON. Absolutely. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I am prepared at this point to accept the substitution of the Stratton amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON), and I make that statement with the understanding that this gentleman at least is going to be taking a very close look at that conference report.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I just want to clear up one question. I think we are at the bottom line on this, and I think it is a good place for compromise.

The question I have to the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is that he asked unanimous consent to insert the word "long-term," and it is my understanding that that is akin to the word "permanent"; is that correct?

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman is correct, and I am glad that the gentleman added that explanation.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) to modify his amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The amendment is modified, and the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has expired.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, we have just witnessed a very interesting discussion, a very interesting debate. We have heard the terms, "interim basing" and "long-term basing." We have even had an arithmetic lesson. We have had a lesson in diplomacy. My distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN), worked out a deal right here on the floor of Congress before us all. Everyone seems to be happy and smiling.

The tragedy is that we have not addressed the issue to which these amendments pertain. I think my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee, started down the appropriate road. We just drew radically different conclusions.

Very briefly, placing this amendment in its proper context, Mr. Chairman, several years ago some people in the Pentagon decided that someone had opened a "window of vulnerability" on our land-based missiles.

□ 1640

We have a triad: air, sea, and land.

Someone decided that sometime in the mid-1980's our land-based ICBM's would be vulnerable to a Soviet attack. I think that ought to be debated and discussed.

I frankly believe that is an abstract issue. Nevertheless, a number of my colleagues believe this.

We began to hear the thundering herds rallying around the notion of the window of vulnerability and the argument, in rather simplistic terms, went like this: We have fixed-based ICBM's and therefore we ought to place them in a mobile mode, move them around so the Soviets will not know where they are, or some other mode that would give them "survivability," which means they could survive a nuclear attack.

This was not just an effort to change the mode within which the missiles were planted. But someone came up with a new missile as well.

I argued against the entire system because I believed that building a new missile with perhaps the most powerful warheads known to humankind was not a weapon of deterrence but a war-fighting weapon that gave us first-strike capability, bringing the world closer to the brink of nuclear disaster, not taking us further away.

But a number of my colleagues decided, well, we still need the missile. In the meantime we have been struggling, trying to find this appropriate surviving basing mode.

I draw the conclusion that no one else has spoken to on this floor. I do not believe that there is any such thing as a survivable land-based missile system.

I think that is lunacy in the first order. For us to sit here talking about interim basing modes, long-term basing modes, let us look at the entire options.

Let me quote two persons. First, I would quote the Chair of the President's Commission established to look at the question of whether we could find this elusive so-called surviving basing mode, chaired by Charles Townes, a physicist from the University of California. He said the Commission concludes that—

It finds no practical basing mode for missiles deployed on land's surface available at this time that assures an adequate number of surviving ICBM warheads.

The Congressional Office of Technology Assessment makes the following conclusion:

We see that all available models of basing MX pose serious problems. None of them is without serious risk, high cost, or significant drawbacks.

Mr. Chairman, the Pentagon has already spent millions of dollars looking for a survivable mode. Over a decade of work has gone into finding some survivable mode.

The best minds in this country have tried to do it.

First we decided that maybe we ought to dig 5,000 holes in the ground.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, they looked at 5,000 holes in the ground. Maybe we could move these missiles around and the Soviets would not know.

That was not workable.

We came up with the racetrack concept. We raced the missiles around.

We came up with a mass transit system for our missiles. We came up with a variety of different things.

What has been the product of all of this? No conclusive program whatsoever. The question that I pose, Mr. Chairman, is how much and how long.

I would like now to recite for you what I euphemistically refer to as the litany of lunacy, all of the various basing modes that we have talked about and scratched over the past 10 years.

Listen. First we started off with launch under attack. That is an insane approach. We scratched it off.

Orbital-based missiles, shallow underwater missile system, Hydra, ORCA, Ship-Inland, Ship-Ocean, Sea Sitter, wide body jet, short takeoff and landing (STOL), vertical takeoff and landing (VTOL), Dirigible, Midgetman, Hard Rock Silo, Hard Tunnel, South Side Basing, Sandy Silo, Commercial Rail.

That might have worked. Put it on Amtrak and lose it forever.

Dedicated Rail, Off-Road Mobile, ground effect machine, euphemistically referred to as GEM.

Road Mobile (Minuteman), Road Mobile (new missile), Covered Trench, Hybrid Trench, Dash to Shelter. That sounds intriguing.

Mobile Front End. I do not see Mobile Back End. Pool. Maybe it has pockets.

Minuteman/MPS system, MX/MPS system, continuous airborne aircraft, earlier referred to by one of my colleagues as dumb.

Deep Underground Basing, referred to by the ranking minority member as dumb.

A ballistic missile defense for our present system, and some think it will cost $30 to $50 billion, some think as high as $100 billion, to produce a ballistic missile defense for these systems.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, Dense Pack, our most recent finding.

That is the litany of lunacy, Mr. Chairman.

The point is we have spent millions of dollars in 10 years trying to find the system. We keep rejecting systems. We sit here saying let us have a long-term mode and interim basing mode. Let us look at all of the options.

They have looked at all of the options, the brightest minds in this country. You cannot challenge their patriotism, you cannot challenge their intellectual acumen, their scientific capability, their commitment to the defense of the United States. But they have come up with no system.

We are playing games with each other with "Let us wait until there is a decision on the basing mode." There is no such thing as a surviving basing mode, Mr. Chairman.

Let us look at this interim basing mode that has been referred to.

Our present Minuteman III silos will leave the MX missile vulnerable because the argument used is we must take them out of their mixed mode in their present formulation. So to simply put a new warhead in the same configuration does not make it less vulnerable; it makes it more powerful. It makes it more destabilizing. It creates the potential for nuclear war. It gives us first-strike counterforce capability because now we have a time-urgent, hard-target weapon that has the capability to kill. It threatens deterrence.

Now we have this Dense Pack approach. It is based on an unknown quantity, Mr. Chairman, known as fratricide. That is that one incoming exploding missile will explode other incoming missiles. We do not know if it works or not. It is a theory. We are not sure.

Some people believe that there are a number of ways to defeat the whole concept of fratricide. Explode a missile underground. There is no fratricide.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. You can explode the missile underground and how can you have a fratricide from the top if you are exploding it underground? Some people think you can have what they call a pin-down concept that would defer the ability of the weapon to function.

□ 1650

Some believe that bringing big powerful warheads on top of this system would totally devastate the system. Some think that a sequential attack, 1, 2, 3, 4, over a different time frame would defeat this system. But here is Dense Pack, based on the notion of fratricide, and there is not one of us in here who knows anything about fratricide or whether it can even work. I certainly do not even want to test it out. I hope we never fire a nuclear weapon. It is insanity, Mr. Chairman. Dense Pack is speculative, it is unproven, it is not approved by this administration. It is certainly no panacea. I mentioned how it could be defeated, to say nothing of the fact that it would violate the SALT II Treaty. It would push us to develop an ABM system costing billions and billions of dollars. It would even require that we may have to even renegotiate our ABM treaty, one of the few treaties that we have that works.

We are not throwing nuclear weapons at each other right now, Mr. Chairman, and maybe that is because deterrence works. The entire MX missile system is a first strike weapon that has enormous capacity to bring grief. It is a crisis destabilizing weapon. But I have made those arguments before.

My distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES), made a very intelligent argument a few days ago, saying this entire system was wasteful, unnecessary, and of dubious value at best. I make the argument here that we are kidding ourselves about finding some survivable basing mode. What we need to do is get into our brains that there is no such thing, and then we will not be spending this money, playing arithmetic games, "Well, we are going to save America $150 million; now we have got 900-some-odd million dollars to find a basing mode." If you had $20 billion to find a basing mode and 10 more years, you could not do it. Why do we not awaken to that reality, Mr. Chairman? Let us have a debate on the floor of this Congress, but let us not debate over whose amendment is more political and who can get into the conference. Let us talk about whether we need this system, and the answer to that is "No"; whether this system is dangerous, and the answer to that is "Yes"; and whether we can find a basing mode that is survivable, and the answer to that is "No".

Mr. Chairman, if we engage in a serious and significant debate, we would reject this matter. I am sorry that my distinguished colleague even engaged in this bargaining process on the floor. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York went straight to the issue. Take the money out for the basing mode, because there is no such thing.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON), as modified, as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON).

The amendment, as modified, offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON), as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DAN DANIEL

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAN DANIEL: On page 8, line 23, strike the period and insert the following: ", of which $1,000,000 is available only for research, development, test, and evaluation of the C-17 cargo transport aircraft.".

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to assure that the DOD spends $1 million contained in the pending title on R. & D. for the C-17.

The Members will recall that last week when we were debating the C-5 versus the 747 I made the observation that the C-17 would be needed in a few years to replace the C-130 and the C-141 both of which are nearing the end of their useful lives. The C-17 is a worthy replacement for these airlifters and I hope we can accelerate this program.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate greatly the gentleman's offering this amendment. I commend him and the others of the committee who took part in this so that this amendment would be before us today.

I think in the dabate last week on the subject of airlift the case was well and strongly built for the fact that we will need a follow-on airlifter that will and should properly be the C-17. So I fully support this amendment, and I would certainly encourage the Pentagon and the Air Force to move ahead with this needed R. & D. so that we would get an airlifter as soon as possible.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, we agree with the amendment, and we would be willing to accept it on this side.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Virginia and on behalf of the committee, I am willing to accept the amendment if the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) agrees.

I would also add that the Air Force has about $31 million remaining in the CX program in prior year authorization and appropriation.

It is my understanding that the Air Force has already taken the appropriate action to initiate C-17 research and development and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will insure a fiscal year 1983 program. I am hopeful that the Air Force will reprogram whatever funds are required to have a meaningful program during fiscal year 1983.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAN DANIEL).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the committee on the subject of the S-3A weapon system improvement program.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Armed Services reduced the Navy research and development request for $78.3 million by $15 million for the S-3 weapons system improvement program.

The committee's action was understandable since the descriptive material provided to the committee by the Navy was inaccurate. It did not represent the fiscal year 1983 program tasks. I have subsequently met with Navy representatives and believe that they have finally gotten the program straightened out. I wonder if the chairman would accept the recommendation that the Navy initiate a request for reprograming during fiscal year 1983 to carry out the S-3 improvement program as required to meet the current submarine threat?

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will yield, I am in agreement with the gentleman from California that the Navy could during fiscal year 1983 submit a request for reprograming, outlining the S-3 tasks for consideration by the Congress. It certainly would have our careful attention.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee how he and the committee view the Marine Corps AV-8B aircraft and the requirement for an improved radar and a two-seat trainer.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would respond to the gentleman from Missouri that the committee has always been solidly behind the AV-8B. The gentleman may recall that for 3 consecutive years the Department of Defense took steps to terminate the program and it was the Armed Services Committee and, indeed, the Congress who overturned that decision and provided authorization and appropriations for this important system.

There were no funds requested for fiscal year 1983 by the Marine Corps for either an AV-8B trainer or an improved radar. Authorization was not requested because of funding constraints.

While I cannot speak for the committee, I can say that personally I concur in the Marine Corps stated requirements for a trainer and a state-of-the-art radar and would hope that during the coming year the Marine Corps would give consideration to reprograming funds to procure a trainer and investigate candidate radars, to include those already developed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thank the chairman of the Armed Services Committee and concur in his assessment and hope that the Marine Corps would initiate reprograming action to fulfill its requirements for the AV-8B.

□ 1700

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I had originally intended at this point to offer an amendment deleting funding for the antisatellite weapons (ASAT's). However, I have decided not to do that, but rather to make a statement and in the course of it to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. Chairman, the peaceful exploration and use of space has provided many of the wonders of the past several decades. Thus far space has been used primarily, though not exclusively, in a cooperative manner, particularly between the Soviet Union and the United States.

But that achievement now stands threatened. We have entered into an arms race in space with the Soviet Union that promises to heighten global tensions, further strain our already overburdened technical industries, and risk an entirely new kind of warfare.

Repeated efforts to halt this senseless escalation have made some some limited progress. Unfortunately, we have thus far fallen short of the opportunity to end a space arms race before it gathers momentum, though there may still be time.

A series of three negotiating sessions with the Soviets in 1978 and 1979 were cut short by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, though observers agreed progress was being made. I believe we should return to this type of negotiation and stop the arms race in space.

I am appreciative of the importance of protecting our space program, both civilian and military. We rely on our satellites for overseas communication, navigation, and other purposes. The military meanwhile conducts an estimated 70 percent of its overseas communication via satellite. In addition, our nuclear weapons advance warning attack system depends on satellites for early detection. Because of legitimate uses such as these by both the United States and the Soviet Union I will not at this time offer the amendment to delete funding which I had intended. Instead, Mr. Chairman, I will take the opportunity to engage in a colloquoy with the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee and its Subcommittee on Research and Development, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE).

I want to ask the chairman if he would explain the funding provided in H.R. 6030 for antisatellite weapons and high-energy weapons?

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEISS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. First of all, let me say there are about $219 million in this bill for space weaponry. I wish, like the gentleman does, that we did not have to spend any money on space weaponry.

We have tried unsuccessfully over the years to negotiate a treaty with the Soviet Union. The Soviets have chosen to not only ignore our proposals but indeed to put systems into space that are a threat to our national technical means and national security.

I know that this administration has taken a rather tough stand on space weaponry. It is my belief that the systems that we have in research and development are oriented toward defense and until such time as the Soviets express a sincere and honest desire to negotiate these systems by treaty, then I believe we must continue to support the research to obviate a technological or military surprise.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Armed Services Committee made a significant change in the Defense Department's request for high-energy weapons research programs. I would appreciate an explanation of what the committee did and why it did so.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, we did. We reassigned the request that we had for this particular phase of weaponry into a higher field of technology, like short-wave wave length lasers and so forth.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the chairman.

These questions are being asked, Mr. Chairman, because of the concern I and others have that we may be in the early stages of an arms race in space. I know that the Soviet Union is developing one type of Asat, and we are doing so as well. Both nations also are researching Asat's that would use high-energy weapons, such as laser beams. I want to ask the chairman whether he shares the view that we may in fact be entering a space arms race?

Mr. PRICE. It could be. It could happen.

Mr. WEISS. In 1978 and 1979 the Carter administration conducted a series of three negotiating sessions with the Soviets on an Asat control agreement. The Soviets have expressed some indication of a willingness to resume these talks. I wonder what prospect the chairman sees for a resumption of negotiations and an effective Asat ban?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WEISS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the Carter administration did make proposals to the Soviets on arms control, as far back as March 1977.

The Carter administration's proposal to the Soviets on arms control was first offered in March 1977. Negotiations commenced at Helsinki in June 1978 and were followed by additional rounds of negotiations at Bern, Switzerland, in early 1979 and at Vienna, Austria, April-June 1979.

The antisatellite arms control negotiations were at a divergent negotiation point at the time of the Afghanistan invasion. At that time, the arms negotiations impetus was the Soviets responsibility. The Soviets were to coordinate their negotiators stance within their Government and get back with U.S. negotiators. As a result, the Afghanistan conflict eliminated the negotiating opportunity.

The United States has not resumed ASAT arms discussions at this time. We hope they will, though.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the gentleman.

The Reagan administration has expressed its intent to proceed with an active ASAT program, and it seems to me that it is doing so with some disregard for the arms control process. In its "interim declaratory policy" on arms control in space it states:

> We must not count on immediate progress in the area of space arms control because the issues are complex and present difficult obstacles to international negotiations.

This seems to me unnecessarily pessimistic. Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that arms control can only become more difficult and complex as ASAT systems are developed?

Mr. PRICE. Our programs are strictly defensive. I do not think the Soviets can say the same thing.

Mr. WEISS. I thank the chairman for his response to my questions.

Of course, the concern that I think all of us have is that the earlier commitments that were made by both the Soviet Union and the United States that they would not militarize space have a grave danger of being eroded. The world may suddenly wake up and find that "Star Wars" is not just a program that one sees in the movies or on television. If we don't take steps to avert it, it may well become an awful addition to the nightmare reality that we already face with the prospect of nuclear warfare.

The production of a preemptive strike force of antisatellite weapons (ASAT's), such as those devices both the United States and the Soviet Union currently are close to producing, is certain to lessen the security of both nations' satellites. The satellites would best be protected by an agreement eliminating the presence of ASAT's.

In August 1981 the Soviet Union submitted to the United Nations a draft treaty banning the stationing of weapons in space. This proposal deserves careful consideration. But we must go further. We must halt those ASAT's which would not be stationed in space but would instead be launched by high-flying jets. A moratorium should be placed on further ASAT testing, current ASAT programs should be dismantled, and verification should be strictly detailed and enforced. Outside of the context of this Department of Defense authorization I plan to introduce a resolution urging the immediate resumption of negotiations to halt this space arms race. History has shown us how quickly an arms race can get out of control.

The world can be no safer if we permit the arms race to escalate into space. Indeed, the insecurity of all nations reliant on satellites would be immeasurably increased, and the risk of global conflict would grow. Only by committing our Nation to a concerted effort to end the race to put ASAT's into place can this danger be avoided.

□ 1710

I hope and I urge the Armed Services Committee not to allow itself to be trapped into a position where this Congress and this Nation will not move forward to negotiate an end to the space arms race because the Russians will be deemed to be offensive in their programs while the U.S. programs will be considered to be strictly defensive.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WEISS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. Both sides, it seems to me, will rely on their own belief in their own good faith, constantly questioning the good faith of the other side. It seems to me that down that path lies the mutual and total destruction of all humanity.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. EMERY

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. EMERY: Page 11, after line 5, add the following new section:
>
> DEEP BASING OF MX MISSILE SYSTEM
> SEC. 205. None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this title may be used to carry out research and development of the deep basing mode for the MX missile system.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is really very simple. After much consideration and study of the various MX basing alternatives, I have come to the conclusion that the so-called deep basing option is, indeed, not a viable option when MX misssile basing is concerned.

I have become very interested in two of the alternatives that have been proposed. One is the so-called ballistic missile defense option. The other is the so-called cluster pack or dense pack scheme.

I do not think we have all the answers with either one of those two systems; but for a variety of reasons I am convinced that the deep basing option is not viable.

First of all, the technology is certainly in question as to whether or not we can develop a cost-effective system that is capable of digging through possibly several hundred feet of rubble after digging its way through a thousand or more feet of rock.

Second, the response time would be limited. This system would not be able to respond for maybe as many as 48 or 72 hours after an attack, whereas the MX scheme as it has been proposed was designed to provide an accurate and rapid response system, which of course is the main reason for missile upgrades that we have been considering.

I do not attempt to strike any money, because I feel that it is necessary to adequately fund the research and development effort for whichever basing mode we may desire. I have offered this amendment because I do not believe that money spent on the deep basing mode is money well spend, nor that it will provide us with a secure, reliable, survivable system.

I ask for support of my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Let me ask the gentleman from Maine, if I might, I think what he is saying may be correct. I am not sure that this deep underground system makes any sense at all.

I am worried, though, at us gradually eliminating research and development for various options in this bill. I mean, we have eliminated the continuous patrol aircraft and eliminated the deep underground system. I guess that bothers me.

If this were procurement money and we could see what the thing was, I think the gentleman would be right; but I am a little worried about eliminating the R. & D. money in this bill for this system.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. EMERY. The reason I have decided to offer the amendment crafted as I have is that it does not attempt to strike the money and, of course, the $160 million or whatever else spent on other options that I believe are more viable and hold more promise would allow us to provide adequate research and development on those other areas; but I think all the other questions aside, you have to ask yourself what it is that is different about the deep basing scheme.

One of those things that is different is that it is not a quick response scheme. All the other schemes, all the other basing modes allow the missile to be launched in response to an enemy attack. This one will not allow you to respond until it digs its way out of an underground cavern or an underground silo.

Now, it may well be desirable to have some reserve force 2 or 3 days later, but that is a different kind of a weapon. That is a different kind of a system. That is going an entirely different direction.

What we have been talking about with any of the MX alternatives is an alternatives that allows the system to survive so that it can be used relatively soon, like minutes or hours after an initial attack.

Mr. ASPIN. But what is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, I agree, this may be a backup system, this underground system might be a backup system. It cannot clearly or it ought not to be, at least as far as we know now, it ought not be the primary basing mode for this system.

Mr. EMERY. If the gentleman will yield, that is exactly my point. This I do not believe is a primary basing scheme under any circumstance, if we are talking about the purposes for which as I understand it, the MX missile program was originally initiated.

Now, we have just had a long discussion here this afternoon about interim basing mode versus primary and I think we came to the decision that we would concentrate on primary and not worry about some interim secondary scheme.

Mr. ASPIN. The interim is different. We are talking about now a secondary or backup scheme perhaps for the deep underground system.

Mr. EMERY. Well, if the gentleman would yield further, if we are talking about a secondary system or backup system, that is one step removed from the entire argument that we have drawn for the MX; so it would seem to me that we ought to discuss it in the mode, MX-II, if you will, or son of MX.

We are talking about a different kind of system. As far as I know, we have not even begun to discuss the possibility of moving to a secondary system, a backup system or a system for some other purpose. This opens up an entirely different area of discussion that we have not delved into either here on the floor or in the Armed Services Committee.

If I might continue for just a second, the primary concern that I have is that for the purposes that we have delineated, for improving the survivability of our land-based system, this is a different approach. This one does not fill that bill, because it does not provide the quick response and the others do.

So I do not feel that the deep underground basing scheme is a fitting and proper answer to the problems that we have identified and that we are trying to solve with any one of these missile systems.

Mr. ASPIN. I understand, but I am worried about the fact that what we are doing by this is, of course, eliminating the spending of any money in this title for any research and development on the deep basing mode at all, whether it be secondary or any other.

Mr. EMERY. Well, if I might respond to that, the gentleman is quite correct; but it would seem to me that if we want to talk about a secondary scheme or some other kind of a secure reserve, then we ought to embark on that program separately and distinctly from the MX program that we have been discussing.

Furthermore, I just do not have the confidence that the scheme is going to do the job that we need done. It does not preclude us from going into other areas. We have eliminated continuous patrol aircraft in committee, which is a decision I also agreed with; but I make no attempt to limit any other options. In fact, any other options that are viable, and in answer to the original questions for which the MX system was designed to resolve, I certainly have no problem with supporting research and development for those.

I have particular interests. I am interested in the possibility of a BMD proposal, deceptive and survivable, and an alternate, plus the basing mode.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. I am trying to work out some possibility here with the gentleman from Maine. Is there some way that we could think of some language that we could put in there that would alleviate the option for some R. & D. money to be spent on a backup system or secondary mode, while keeping the intent of the gentleman here that the money not be spent on the deep underground system as the primary mode?

Mr. EMERY. Well, if the gentleman will yield further, let me ask, Is there any understanding in the gentleman's mind that the Armed Services Committee or the Pentagon has proposed a secondary backup system for the MX? Is that on the table now, or has it been proposed by anyone? This is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. ASPIN. Well, I am being advised here that they are talking about a secure reserve force, which apparently is something like that.

Mr. EMERY. Let me simply say to the gentleman that if we are already looking beyond MX to a secondary secure force, I would like to have the advantages of hearings in the Research and Development Subcommittee. I would like to have the advantage of a full discussion and presentation of those options from the Pentagon and a full discussion in the committee and here on the floor. All those things have been lacking.

I do not think we need to invent a secondary system to a missile system that we have not even proposed here today.

□ 1720

Mr. ASPIN. No, I understand. But the point of the research and development money is to look at things, study them, study the options. I worry when we have language in the bill that says none of this money shall be used for research and development on something, especially if we really do want to have, eventually, some research and development money maybe on a backup system.

I am just trying to see if there is not something—because I think both of us agree on what it is the gentleman is trying to do with this amendment—and I am worried that it might cut off something that otherwise would make some sense.

Mr. EMERY. If I might respond to that, there may be some additional language, but I would think that we might want to consider discussion by the committee of a secondary alternative as a separate and distinct entity from this MX program.

We have not had the benefit of that kind of a discussion. In the absence of that sort of planning and continuity, I do not think there is any option.

Mr. ASPIN. How about if we were to add language here which says, "None of this money may be used to carry out research and development of the deep basing mode as the primary basing mode for the MX missile system"?

Mr. EMERY. I would prefer not to do that because then it implicitly suggests that we have decided that we need a secondary system or a backup system to the MX even before we have deployed it.

Mr. ASPIN. It does not. It just says, "Look, we are dealing with R. & D.," and it just says we are not stopping them from looking at it, spending R. & D. money on it.

Mr. EMERY. That is exactly what I am trying to accomplish. I do not want to spend R. & D. money on it.

Mr. ASPIN. Even as a backup system?

Mr. EMERY. No, not as a backup system. It seems to me if we are going to talk about a backup system for a missile that we have not even based yet, then we ought to make the decision: First, that we need it; and second, we are going to develop a program to accomplish that. And we have not even made that decision.

Mr. ASPIN. What worries me about the gentleman's position is that we are talking about research and development money, R. & D., and research and development money should be very carefully considered when we cut out research and development money. Research and development money means we cannot even look at the option; it means we cannot even do the studies.

Maybe we are going to discover this thing would be a very good backup system. We will never know if the gentleman's language is in the bill and survives conference.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ASPIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EMERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding further.

Mr. Chairman, let me restate what I said a few minutes ago. If we decide as a policy in the Congress or from the administration or from the military that we wish to look at a backup system, that is exactly like coming to Congress and saying, "Well, we need a new ship program," or "We need a new tank," or "We need a new satellite," or something else.

It seems to me that if we are going to start talking about another kind of a missile system, separate and distinct from the MX program that we have been debating here, we ought to do that and not try to slide into it here by trying to edge into a research and development scheme which we are saying is not suitable for one thing but just might be valuable for something else.

Mr. ASPIN. The problem, of course, is that one cannot even come to a hearing to propose it without spending some money to look at it, in order to make the proposal. We have to have some information in order to go to a hearing, in order to present the testimony to Congress; some preliminary studies, at least, even some paper studies to look at the option in order to make a presentation to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. The point is, with this amendment we cannot even do those paper studies that would be required to make the presentation to Congress. Let me suggest: How about if we were to put at least a modest amount of money, suggested here, that we propose a modest amount of money in the bill, not to exceed $10 million to look at the basing, this underground system, just as a backup system.

Would the gentleman object to that?

Mr. EMERY. If the gentleman will yield further, yes, the gentleman would object to that because I just believe if we are going to talk about a backup system, a new missile system, a new program, someone ought to come to the Congress from the Pentagon, from the administration, and say, "We think we need a backup system for the MX that we want to study, among other options."

I would certainly be interested in doing the R. & D. on that, but it would disturb me very much for us to have an unresolved MX system, questions about the basing mode, survivability, response time, various schemes of Soviet attack and all these other things, and say, even before those questions are resolved, that then we have to have a backup system. I do not think that sends a very good signal.

Mr. ASPIN. The point about all of these things is that what the gentleman is talking about is R. & D., research and development. And now to shut off options means we cannot even have the Advanced Research Projects Agency do anything. We cannot even subcontract with any university or think tank to look at it; we cannot do anything.

It is a very, very bad idea, and please, do not cut out R. & D. money. It makes no sense to be arbitrarily deciding on the floor of the House, without any information, without any backup, without any hearings, as to whether or not we ought to even at least spend some money to look at a subject.

To cut out money like that is crazy. To put language in here that prohibits looking at options is goofy.

What we ought to do for sure, if this was procurement money, we would have a good case to take some money out. But do not write language into the bill prohibiting looking at options. It is not a good idea. It is just not a very sensible way to have a defense policy.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ASPIN. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. EMERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, we are not cutting this money out. I want to make that very plain. We are not changing so much as a red cent in this bill.

Mr. ASPIN. Exactly.

Mr. EMERY. All I am asking is that for primary basing options, for options as to basing the MX missile, let us look at a scheme that answers the original question. I do not use the words "primary basing."

Mr. ASPIN. Let me tell the gentleman what he is saying. He is saying that none of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this title may be used to carry out research and development of the deep basing mode for the MX missile system, period.

Mr. EMERY. That is right.

Mr. ASPIN. We cannot use it to look at it in any way, shape or form. If the subject comes up, we have to avert our eyes and spend more money on something else. It is not a very sensible way to go.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine (Mr. EMERY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Those in favor of a recorded vote will rise and remain standing until counted.

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present and ask for a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair has not finished his count on the number of Members standing.

He has now finished his count, and an insufficient number has arisen.

For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present and ask for a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair is unclear of the gentleman's intentions.

Does the gentleman ask for a division?

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Those in favor of this amendment will stand, rise and remain standing until counted.

The yeas will take seats.

Those opposed will stand.

Mr. EMERY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until the count is over.

The noes will be seated.

On this vote by division, the yeas are 2 and the nays are 8.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. EMERY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EMERY. As a point of information, will the Chairman tell me why the request for the recorded vote came late? He had not announced the vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair at that point had asked the Members to rise and remain standing for the count on the gentleman's request.

Mr. EMERY. Did the gentleman announce an insufficient number?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Not at the point that the gentleman made his point of order.

Mr. EMERY. I am afraid I do not understand why the request for the recorded vote came too late, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair was unclear of the gentleman's desires at that time. Without objection, the division will be vacated.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Those in favor of a recorded vote will again stand.

Mr. EMERY. Pending that request, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following members responded to their names:

□ 1740

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Three hundred eighty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present, and the Committee will resume its business.

□ 1750

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine (Mr. EMERY) insist on his demand for a recorded vote?

Mr. EMERY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my demand for a recorded vote, and I demand a division.

On a division (demanded by Mr. EMERY) there were—ayes 66, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title II?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a short colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE), the chairman of the full committee, so that I might make a matter of record what I understand the situation to be. This will be very brief, because I do not think an amendment is necessary here. I think we have an agreement.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, the Committee on Armed Services provided an additional authorization of $20 million for Air Force advance attack weapons to accelerate the advance cluster munitions, the CBU-90 system.

Subsequently, following what we did, I am advised that the Air Force completed the test and evaluation of the combined effects munitions, of the CEM.

There are two ongoing programs. One is the CBU-87 and one is the CBU-90. It is my understanding that the CBU-90 has experienced some problems. The CBU-87 has met its tests. The Air Force is willing to go forward with it. All we have to do is authorize the redirection of some funds from one program, which is the 90, to the CBU-87, causing no additional expenditure of funds. It is simply a redirection of funds. As I understand it, it is the agreement and the willingness of our committee that this be done. I would like to refer this to our chairman and see if this is his understanding and agreement, that we can direct the Air Force just to redirect a portion of what had been in the CBU-90 for the CBU-87.

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will yield, I understand the gentleman's question, and I certainly support his recommendation that the $10 million of the additional authorization provided by the committee is to be used for the combined effects munitions, CEM-87. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I actually have no amendment. I just wanted to make it a point of legislative history that this was agreeable and the intent of the committee.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HARTNETT

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARTNETT: Page 10, line 9, strike out "and".

Page 10, line 11, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

Page 10, after line 11, insert the following: (8) $5,555,000 is available only for the Intermediate Water Depth Mine program.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. The chairman of the committee and I have looked at the amendment. We understand its importance. I cannot speak for the chairman, but we have agreed that this is needed. It does not add any money. It simply redirects some funds. I personally will support it.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the acceptance of the amendment, in view of the Navy's requirement for the intermediate water depth mine. It does not require any additional authorization. I have no objection to accepting the amendment.

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking minority Member and the distinguished chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HARTNETT).

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 1800

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to engage in a colloquy with the chairman, if I might.

Mr. Chairman, we will have some 13,000 M-60 and M-1 tanks with 105-millimeter guns in our inventory through the turn of the century. And I am concerned that we do not have ongoing product improvement programs to insure that the 105-millimeter maintains capability in dealing with future threat armor.

After the committee markup it came to my attention that the Army was putting together a package program for evolutionary improvements to the M-68 105-millimeter cannon and the XM-833 kinetic energy round that will if successful make the 105 cannon equivalent to the 120-millimeter cannon with the XM-833 round already in development.

Unfortunately, this package was not completed in time for committee consideration.

It seems to me that regardless of the merits of the 120-millimeter cannon, we should be doing everything we can to exploit the growth potential of the 105-millimeter gun system which will remain the primary main tank gun for the forseeable future.

I wonder if the chairman would agree with the recommendation that the Army initiate a request for reprograming fiscal year 1983 to initiate a development program for evolutionary improvements to the 105-millimeter tank cannon and ammunition?

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, I would agree with the gentleman from Georgia. The committee would encourage the Army to submit a reprograming request outlining the development program for evolutionary improvements to the 105-millimeter tank gun system. I think it is an important program and the committee would certainly be willing to consider a reprograming request.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the chairman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Just let me say that starting several years ago we had the 105 on the M-1 tank. Then there was an agreement to put the 120 millimeter on the tank. The war in Lebanon right now, I think, has demonstrated really impressively that the 105 can kill the T-72 Soviet tank. The 105 needs improvement. This amendment adds no money, but permits the upgrading.

I think it makes a great deal of sense. If we can upgrade and improve the existing cannon on the M-1 tank and anything else that uses the 105, it will save millions and millions of dollars and perhaps do as much or a better job as the proposed 120.

The chairman and I again have looked at this and talked with staff. It makes sense to us. It adds no money, and we certainly support it.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title II?

If not, the Clerk will designate title III.

Title III reads as follows:

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 301. (a) ARMY.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $16,697,100,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Army as follows:

(1) For general purpose forces, $6,129,145,000.

(2) For intelligence and communications, $911,868,000.

(3) For central supply and maintenance, $4,906,339,000.

(4) For training, medical, and other general personnel activities, $3,587,108,000.

(5) For administration, $1,039,204,000.

(6) For support of other nations, $123,436,000.

(b) NAVY.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $21,545,000,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Navy and the Marine Corps as follows:

(1) For strategic forces, $1,775,212,000.

(2) For general purpose forces, $10,604,659,000.

(3) For intelligence and communications, $930,902,000.

(4) For central supply and maintenance, $5,942,966,000.

(5) For training, medical, and other general personnel activities, $1,806,858,000.

(6) For administration, $484,208,000.

(7) For support of other nations, $195,000.

(c) MARINE CORPS.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $1,481,500,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Marine Corps as follows:

(1) For general purpose forces, $864,292,000.

(2) For central supply and maintenance, $359,561,000.

(3) For training, medical, and other general personnel activities, $186,669,000.

(4) For administration, $70,978,000.

(d) AIR FORCE.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $17,278,100,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Air Force as follows:

(1) For strategic forces, $3,085,928,000.

(2) For general purpose forces, $3,745,598,000.

(3) For intelligence and communications, $1,418,292,000.

(4) For airlift and sealift, $1,205,813,000.

(5) For central supply and maintenance, $5,458,958,000.

(6) For training, medical, and other general personnel activities, $1,968,882,000.

(7) For administration, $387,822,000.

(8) For support of other nations, $6,807,000.

(e) DEFENSE AGENCIES.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $5,673,640,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of activities and agencies of the Department of Defense (other than the military departments) as follows:

(1) For general purpose forces, $343,208,000.

(2) For intelligence and communications, $1,903,274,000.

(3) For central supply and maintenance, $1,377,576,000.

(4) For training, medical, and other general personnel activities, $1,699,005,000.

(5) For administration, $350,577,000.

(f) ARMY RESERVE.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $704,900,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Army Reserve as follows:

(1) For mission forces, $433,310,000.

(2) For depot maintenance, $7,741,000.

(3) For other support, $263,849,000.

(g) NAVY RESERVE.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $644,600,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Navy Reserve as follows:

(1) For mission forces, $389,925,000.

(2) For depot maintenance, $103,775,000.

(3) For other support, $150,900,000.

(h) MARINE CORPS RESERVE.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $51,115,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Marine Corps Reserve as follows:

(1) For mission forces, $27,434,000.

(2) For depot maintenance, $1,515,000.

(3) For other support, $22,166,000.

(i) AIR FORCE RESERVE.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $761,400,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Air Force Reserve as follows:

(1) For mission forces, $537,829,000.

(2) For depot maintenance, $100,375,000.

(3) For other support, $123,196,000.

(j) ARMY NATIONAL GUARD.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $1,151,900,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Army National Guard as follows:

(1) For training operations, $193,028,000.

(2) For logistical support, $871,547,000.

(3) For headquarters and command support, $79,307,000.

(4) For medical support, $8,018,000.

(k) AIR NATIONAL GUARD.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 in the total amount of $1,744,400,000 for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for the operation and maintenance of the Air National Guard as follows:

(1) For operation of aircraft, $525,250,000.

(2) For logistical support, $287,237,000.

(3) For training support, $928,245,000.

(4) For servicewide support, $3,668,000.

(l) NATIONAL BOARD FOR THE PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE, ARMY.—There is hereby autorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 the amount of $875,000 for the expenses of the Secretary of the Army, upon the recommendation of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, under section 4308 of title 10, United States Code, and the expenses of the Secretary of the Army under sections 4309 and 4313 of such title.

(m) CLAIMS, DEFENSE.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 the amount of $172,500,000 for payment, not otherwise provided for, of claims authorized by law to be paid by the Department of Defense (except for civil functions).

(n) COURT OF MILITARY APPEALS, DEFENSE.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 the amount of $3,210,000 for salaries and expenses for the United States Court of Military Appeals.

GENERAL AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR PAY RAISES, FUEL COSTS, AND INFLATION ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 302. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983, in addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated in section 301, such sums as may be necessary—

(1) for increases in salary, pay, retirement, and other employee benefits authorized by law for civilian employees of the Department of Defense whose compensation is provided for by funds authorized to be appropriated in section 301;

(2) for unbudgeted increases in fuel costs; and

(3) for increases as the result of inflation in the cost of activities authorized by section 301.

RESTRICTION ON LONG-TERM LEASES OF VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

SEC. 303. (a) None of the funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization of appropriations in section 301 may be obligated or expended in connection with a long-term lease of a vessel for the Navy if the lease includes a substantial termination liability unless and until (1) the Secretary of the Navy has notified the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives of the proposed lease, and (2) a period of 30 days has elapsed after the date on which such committees receive such notification. Any such notification shall include a description of the terms of the proposed lease and a justification for entering into such a lease rather than obtaining the vessel involved by acquisition.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply with respect to the lease of a ship if the ship was being leased by the Navy on September 30, 1982.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ASPIN

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASPIN: Page 18, after line 3, insert the following new section:

T-5 REPLACEMENT TANKER PROGRAM

SEC. 304. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to authorizations of appropriations in this title for the Navy may be obligated or expended for any activity in connection with the lease of any vessel associated with the T-5 Replacement Tanker Program which has a main propulsion system or any other major component not built in the United States.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman of the O. & M. Subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAN DANIEL).

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have examined this amendment and we have no objection to it on this side.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we had an opportunity to study the amendment over here. We certainly have no opposition. We would certainly accept it on this side.

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, there was a cigarette ad some years ago that promoted the slogan, "The Thinking Man's Filter."

After one reviews this amendment as enticing as it looks on the surface—after the smoke clears away—we can easily discern that it is not a thinking person's amendment.

Why?

My real concern, and I know yours, too, is jobs and a secure defense. The T-5 tanker program would mean 5,300 more years of American jobs over a 3-year period. The program would generate more than $152 million to the shipbuilding industry and support services. This would in turn generate $3 million in State income tax and another $5 million in sales tax. This, along with our Nation's defense, is a compelling argument for the T-5 tanker.

Notwithstanding the jobs concern, there is the question of whether the Navy should be saddled with equipment and technology which taxes their mission and is behind the curve of current technology. The only American alternative to foreign engine on the T-5 propulsion system would cost in excess of an additional $100 million and be well behind the current technological state-of-the-art. I ask you to remember, the Navy is leasing this ship, and will not have to pay for the fuel and maintenance on these engines, and I think it is the least we can do for them and our fellow taxpayers that we give them the powerplant that will do the most for the least money.

The sponsor of this amendment is trying to impose one policy on the Navy when it has ships built for purchase, and another on a civilian company when it builds a ship for Navy charter.

The author of the amendment wants to tell a private shipbuilder who builds a ship for lease to the Navy, that when they build a ship, it must be 100 percent domestically built, but on the other hand, if the Navy were having it built for purchase, we would be willing to settle for a mere 51-percent domestic content.

Totally illogical!

As the Navy is not buying these vessels, but leasing them, it certainly has no interest in circumventing any Buy America Act provisions. Instead unlike the alleged buy America banner, the sponsor of the amendment waves, the proposed domestic content of the T-5 tanker is 92 percent—yes 92 percent. The act cloaks himself in, passed by this Congress requires 51 percent.

That is why I allege this amendment is not a thinking persons' amendment.

Basically—I want to save these 5,300 man-years of American jobs involved in the construction of the T-5 tanker.

Yes, I am as much a proponent of buy American as the next person. But enlightened opinion must dictate that we must bring commonsense and reason to this process. If we never buy anything from other nations, can we expect to sell to other nations. I will accept 92-percent American job input into the T-5 tanker and I hope you will too.●

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRIBLE

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRIBLE: Page 18, after line 3, add the following new section:

RESTRICTION ON PURCHASE OF COAL FOR MILITARY BASES IN EUROPE

SEC. 304. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to authorizations of appropriations in this title may be used to purchase coal or coke for use at United States military installations in Europe other than coal or coke mined in the United States.

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. NELLIGAN), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MCDADE), the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BEARD), the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) and I propose an amendment to title III of the Defense Authorization Act to require DOD to purchase

American coal for its European operations.

From fiscal year 1962 until fiscal year 1981, the Defense Department purchased all coal for the European theater from American mines. During this period more than 15 million metric tons of coal were purchased, providing jobs for thousands of Americans and adding tens of millions of dollars to the American economy.

In 1982—after the 1979 Trade Adjustment Act had terminated the "buy American" provisions for coal—the Defense Department began purchasing European coal, and acquired 55 percent of its requirements from European mines.

As a result, American coal companies, railroads, and shippers have lost approximately $38 million in revenues. Federal and State taxes have been lost.

More important, hundreds of American jobs have been lost.

This amendment would correct that situation.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBLE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We have examined this amendment. We have no objection to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBLE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed with the author and with the chairman of the subcommittee this amendment. I would just like to make the point that I regret that the amendment is even necessary.

What we are doing is saying that the Department of Defense should buy coal from this country for use in Europe. Now, historically we have done this. Two years ago I think it was the requirement was lifted and the Department of Defense is buying coal mined in Europe at some cost of about $2 million per year over what it would cost to mine it in this country. This comes about because of organized labor and the unions that operate our fleets at sea, it costs $5 per ton more to buy American coal than it would if it were bought in Europe. It costs the Department of Defense about $2 million a year more. But it costs about $35 million in lost revenue in the freight, in the mining, in the employment of people and so forth.

So, it is really a false economy. It costs the taxpayers instead of saving.

So in order to protect the interests of the miners in Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, wherever, this amendment is necessary—because we have allowed the unions to jack up the price. Unfortunately, we have put ourselves in a position where we are noncompetitive in our maritime fleet, because of what the unions are able to charge the shipowners.

For this reason, millions of American-owned ships have registered under foreign flags. And in order to compensate for this, we have to mandate that they must ship x amount of whatever we are shipping, not just coal, in American bottoms, and we do this to compensate, because we have artificially allowed the unions to raise the cost of business by what we are paying union employees.

This is a good amendment. It does not cost money; it saves money. But I just wanted to go on record as saying I feel very strongly that it is unfortunate that the situation appertains that we have to do this by legislation, when in fact if we did not artificially make the cost of shipping in American bottoms so high, we would not have this competitive problem and be at a disadvantage in selling abroad.

We on this side accept the amendment. We think it is a good amendment.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to require American military bases in Europe to use only American coal.

For 20 years only American coal was burned at our bases in Europe. Then this fiscal year, for the first time, our Defense Department started to purchase coal on the foreign market for use at our bases in Europe.

The results have been dramatic and harmful to the American coal industry, especially in the Appalachian Mountain coalfields, which includes my home State of Tennessee. It is the eastern coalfields that have supplied our European bases and they are the ones hurt by this new policy of buying foreign coal.

During the 20-year period before this fiscal year, more than 15 million tons of American coal were purchased for use at our bases in Europe. That averages out to three-quarters of a million tons of coal per year. That is no small amount of coal, especially when you consider that my State of Tennessee, which is trying hard to increase its coal exports, ships approximately 800,000 to 1 million tons annually for the export market. Any drop in coal exports from the Appalachian coalfields hurts the ability of coal producers in Tennessee to increase our coal exports.

The Defense Department claims they have saved $2 million by purchasing foreign coal instead of our coal, but I say that that $2 million is dwarfed by the $36 million in lost revenues to American coal companies and shippers, and millions in lost wages to American coal miners, not to mention the millions in lost tax revenues to both the Federal government and State Governments in Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virignia, and most importantly, 500 lost jobs in the coalfields.

I do not see this as a free trade issue. American tax dollars pay for our bases in Europe, pay for our troops and their equipment. They should also pay for American coal. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, billions of dollars are spent by this Nation for the defense of Europe with the notion that this expenditure lends to the security of the United States. This assistance, supported by taxpayer dollars, however, should not work to displace U.S. labor or create economic chaos within U.S. industry.

Nonetheless, by extending the concept of free trade to the energy management programs of the U.S. Army-Europe, we have done just that. As a result of the 1979 Trade Adjustment Act and Executive Order No. 12260 of December 1980, the longstanding practice of U.S. defense installation use of American coal in Europe was opened to competitive bidding to foreign coal producers. In fiscal year 1982, for the first time in two decades, non-U.S. furnished fuels were purchased by our defense installations in Europe.

This action has had severe repercussions on the U.S. anthracite coal industry and shipping interests. In addition, it runs contrary to U.S. policy goals of achieving energy independence; a goal especially critical in the context of national defense.

Because of the fiscal year 1982 procurement procedure and the subsequent purchase of foreign coal, our domestic anthracite industry has lost $18 million and 800 miners will be out of work. Add to this adverse impact a revenue loss of $3.8 million to Conrail and $3.4 million to American shipping interests and you will find a total U.S. loss of $25.2 million—a loss far exceeding the net savings realized by the Defense Department of $1.4 million through foreign coal purchases.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, this loss of jobs and revenue is not the proper return for U.S. taxpayer support of the defense of Europe.

Surely, this is not the type of return we want for our investment in security.

The U.S. Army-Europe energy management program was the largest single consuming source for domestic anthracite coal. Without it, large sums of money invested in production and transportation facilities will be wasted and untold numbers of the labor force will be left without employment.

I submit this is a perverted application of U.S. aid to Europe. However, today we have a chance to rectify this problem through the adoption of this amendment. This amendment not only protects U.S. investments in jobs and coal production, it tells U.S. taxpayers that Defense dollars are being spent without jeopardizing our own interests.●

● Mr. NELLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, the DOD contract has historically been an American-supplied contract. The coal utilization program was initiated in fiscal year 1962, and until last year's fiscal year 1982 contract, all requirements were supplied by U.S. firms.

Last year, for the first time, DOD purchased foreign coal and coke and the results have been disastrous for the American coal, transportation, and shipping industries.

DOD awarded 55 percent of its European coal requirements to foreign firms.

Fully 84 percent of the DOD requirement for bituminous, and 37 percent of the DOD requirement for anthracite was awarded to foreign energy suppliers.

The American taxpayer paid $36,250,000 for foreign coal and coke, when this money could have purchased American coal.

The savings to the American taxpayer from purchasing foreign coal and coke were minimal. In terms of last year's contract, it has been estimated that the DOD saved about $2 million through purchasing foreign coal and coke. However, the loss to the American coal, rail transportation, and shipping industry has been estimated at over $38 million.

By purchasing foreign coal and coke, the American coal industry lost $23,500,000; the U.S. rail system lost $4,230,000 worth of business; and the U.S. shipping industry lost $10,550,000.

According to the Anthracite Industry Association, about 500 American workers may lose their jobs because of the foreign coal purchases.

Reliance of foreign fuel sources for U.S. defense needs may be seen as unwise and undesirable. Foreign labor or industrial problems could disrupt the American logisitical system for its forces.

At present, defense installations in Europe already rely on oil for 52 percent of their energy requirements. Most of this oil comes from the Middle East. If we allow foreign nations to supply coal and coke, then virtually all of our energy requirements for European facilities will be supplied by foreign nations.

Mr. Chairman, this is an opportunity for the House to show that it is interested in the American worker and that we care about their jobs. The jobs of American miners, railroaders, and seamen are at stake. I urge my colleagues to show these workers that this House means business by giving American workers this business and not foreigners. I urge the passage of the Trible-Nelligan-McDade-Beard-Rahall amendment to supply U.S. bases overseas with U.S. coal.●

● Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the comments made by my distinguished colleagues and to rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Virginia (Mr. TRIBLE) and Pennsylvania (Mr. NELLIGAN). And I would like to commend them for their effective efforts on behalf of both American coal and American defenses.

Mr. Chairman, two of the most severe problems facing our country today are our inadequate defense capability and the unemployment plaguing our workers.

And it was for just this reason that I was shocked and angered to learn that our own U.S. Department of Defense had cut back on its purchases of U.S. coal and was buying coal from foreign countries instead.

Mr. Chairman, this is like buying American flags made in Japan.

And this policy has undermined our defenses and put even more of our miners out of work. Have we already forgotten the lessions OPEC taught us?

During the 1970's, OPEC just about brought us to our knees. They nearly succeeded despite the fact that we had the preponderance of manpower, sophisticated weaponry, and state of the art aircraft and naval vessels. The lethal weapon they had at their disposal, the knife they held at our throats, was energy—the fuel we need to keep our giant economy alive and throbbing.

In recognition of this fact, our country began a massive campaign to get our country off of foreign energy and onto reliable domestic resources—resources like our own U.S. coal. And this is why the Congress has required the Department of Defense, ever since it first passed legislation back in 1972, to burn American coal at our overseas military bases.

But the implementation of the Trade Agreements Act and DOD's decision to buy foreign coal flies in the face of these hard-earned lessons. It will make our overseas bases dependent on foreign energy once again. And it will mean that we will not be able to stand on our own two feet if our foreign supplies are cut off.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us calls for billions of dollars to shore up our Nation's defenses. But if we build our defenses on the foundation of foreign energy, we will be building on shaky ground. With all our weaponry, our best defense is still energy independence.

But when you look into, it, this policy gets even worse, Mr. Chairman. Not only has this policy undermined our Nation's defense—it has added hardship to our already beleaguered mining industry. Our coal industry is already facing bad times. In an industry which has long suffered from boom and bust cycles, many operators are telling me that there are the worst times anyone can remember. Nearly 6,000 miners are out of work in my own State of Kentucky. And in nearly every county in my district, hardworking, capable mine operators are parking their trucks in the yard and sending their workers home.

And then our own Government cuts back on its purchases of U.S. coal—putting our own workers onto the unemployment lines and padding the paychecks of European coal miners. Mr. Chairman, when you consider the hardship faced by any family when its breadwinner loses his job, there is no question about this policy—we have no business trading these badly needed jobs away overseas.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude witn one final observation. I have heard this policy justified as a cost-saving measure. But I wonder whether our Washington bookkeepers have taken into account that while they may be saving $2 million on the cost of coal—this small saving has been more than offset by tremendous hidden costs. As a matter of fact, between lost coal sales, lost railroad business, and lost shipping income, not to mention higher unemployment costs, this policy has cost our country more than $35 million. now, Mr. Speaker, where I come from, a $33 million net cost is no saving.

Mr. Chairman, the U.S. Department of Defense's purchase of foreign coal is an ill-conceived and ill-advised policy. I applaud the efforts of my distinguished colleagues to correct this mistaken policy.●

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TRIBLE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FAZIO

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FAZIO: Page 18, after line 3, insert the following new section:

LIMITATION ON STUDIES OF CONTRACTING-OUT OF COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL TYPE FUNCTIONS

SEC. 306. (a) Funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization of appropriations in this title may not be obligated or expended in connection with any study begun after September 30, 1982, of the benefits or feasibility of contracting for performance by contractor personnel of any commercial or industrial type function or activity of the Department of Defense being performed by the Department of Defense personnel on September 30, 1982.

(b) Of the total amount of funds authorized in this title, $567,600,000 is available only for salaries and other costs for the employment of and performance of functions by direct-hire civilian employees of the Department of Defense in excess of 947,000 such employees.

Mr. FAZIO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to commend my good friends and distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. NICHOLS) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAN DANIEL) for the leadership role they have taken on a matter of enormous consequence to our national security—the contracting out of commercial and industrial services at our military installations.

Contracting out, in and of itself, is not bad. Indeed, where an activity can be performed by the private sector at a lower cost than it can be done by the Government, and where contracting out such a function does not impair the readiness capabilities of our Armed Forces, then there is every reason to allow the private sector to prevail.

As in most instances, however, theory and reality run on two separate tracks. We are currently faced with a situation where great pressure is being applied to the Department of Defense to significantly increase the number of contracts for services now performed in-house. This is being done ostensibly to make Government more cost effective. In actuality, however, it is being done to reduce the number of Federal employees. Never mind that such a policy will not effectively reduce the taxpayers' burden, but might actually increase it; never mind that we are not really decreasing Government, but instead creating a "shadow government"; and never mind that we are adversely affecting national security. This is the Office of Management and Budget's directive.

The Armed Services Committee has, as one of its primary mandates, the duty to insure that the Department of Defense and the services that comprise that Department have the capability to maintain our national defense. If the members of the committee perceive that administration policies are contrary to that good, then they must intercede, and that is precisely what has occurred.

The committee, during consideration of H.R. 6030, and under the guidance of the gentlemen from Virginia and Alabama, put language in the report which recommended a 1-year moratorium on studies for contracting out of commercial and industrial activities so that the Congress could pass permanent legislation redefining the framework for this program. In addition, the committee recommended the addition of 17,000 civilian spaces which OMB had deleted in its budget request in anticipation of conversions to contract.

This action by the committee is laudable indeed; however, events between the time the committee reported H.R. 6030 and the present make it, in my opinion, necessary to embody the report language into the measure before us now.

It is with some reluctance that I propose this action, for I do not usually favor a moratorium on normal governmental procedures. In this case, however, I see no recourse, for we are no longer dealing with normal procedures. OMB has, by its directives, placed the Department of Defense in an untenable situation.

OMB Circular A-76 directs the Federal agencies on contracting out. The current circular has failed in two crucial areas: First, lack of clear definitions as to which functions are nongovernmental; such as commercial/industrial activities, and thus suitable for contracting out; and second, a clear direction as to standards for determining cost efficiency.

But to make matters worse, in attempting to revise A-76, OMB in a draft version went far beyond reasonable standards when in its fervor to increase contracting out, it eliminated the need for cost studies for any function involving 25 or fewer people, and, gave the heads of Federal agencies broad discretion to remove the requirements for any cost studies, no matter how many people are involved.

This is the same administration that promotes efficiency in Government, while eliminating any test of efficiency. This cannot be tolerated. Congress cannot sit idly by and watch various administrations degrade the quality and efficiency of Government by continuously changing policies on contracting. It is time we act responsibly, halting the ravaging of functions within DOD, and developing a sound, comprehensive, and equitable policy.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, we have examined this amendment and so far as it pertains to title III, we have no objection to it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I am happy to yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I have examined this. I support the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from California as one that would strengthen the committee's position.

I have no objection to it.

Mr. FAZIO. I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is certainly acceptable on this side.

Mr. FAZIO. I thank the gentleman for his comment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. FAZIO).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title III?

If not, the Clerk will designate title IV.

Title IV reads as follows:

TITLE IV—ACTIVE FORCES

AUTHORIZATION OF END STRENGTHS

SEC. 401. (a) The Armed Forces are authorized strengths for active duty personnel as of September 30, 1983, as follows:

(1) The Army, 783,800.

(2) The Navy, 564,200.

(3) The Marine Corps, 194,600.

(4) The Air Force, 595,700.

(b)(1) The authorized fiscal year end-strengths prescribed by law for active-duty personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force may each be increased by not more than one-half of 1 percent if the Secretary of Defense determines that such increase is in the national interest.

(2) The authority provided by this subsection shall expire on October 1, 1983.

QUALITY CONTROL ON ENLISTMENTS INTO THE ARMY

SEC. 402. Effective on October 1, 1982, section 302(a) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1981 (Public Law 96-342; 10 U.S.C. 520 note), is amended by striking out "October 1, 1981" and "September 30, 1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1982" and "September 30, 1983", respectively.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title IV?

If there are no amendments to title IV, the Clerk will designate title V.

Title V reads as follows:

TITLE V—RESERVE FORCES

AUTHORIZATION OF AVERAGE STRENGTHS

SEC. 501. (a) For fiscal year 1983 the Selected Reserve of the reserve components of the Armed Forces shall be programmed to attain average strengths of not less than the following:

(1) The Army National Guard of the United States, 407,400.

(2) The Army Reserve, 258,700.

(3) The Naval Reserve, 105,500.

(4) The Marine Corps Reserve, 38,300.

(5) The Air National Guard of the United States, 101,100.

(6) The Air Force Reserve, 66,000.

(7) The Coast Guard Reserve, 12,000.

(b) The average strength prescribed by subsection (a) for the Selected Reserve of any reserve component shall be proportionately reduced by (1) the total authorized strength of units organized to serve as units of the Selected Reserve of such component which are on active duty (other than for training) at any time during the fiscal year, and (2) the total number of individual members not in units organized to serve as units of the Selected Reserve of such component who are on active duty (other than for training or for unsatisfactory participation in training) without their consent at any time during the fiscal year. Whenever such units or such individual members are released from active duty during any fiscal year, the average strength prescribed for such fiscal year for the Selected Reserve of such reserve component shall be proportionately increased by the total authorized stength of such units and by the total number of such individual members.

AUTHORIZATION OF END STRENGTHS FOR RESERVES ON ACTIVE DUTY IN SUPPORT OF THE RESERVES

SEC. 502. Within the average strengths prescribed in section 501, the reserve components of the Armed Forces are authorized, as of September 30, 1983, the following number of Reserves to be serving on full-time active duty for the purpose of organizing, administering, recruiting, instructing, or training the reserve components:

(1) The Army National Guard of the United States, 14,419.

(2) The Army Reserve, 8,251.

(3) The Naval Reserve, 12,038.

(4) The Marine Corps Reserve, 678.

(5) The Air National Guard of the United States, 5,158.

(6) The Air Force Reserve, 479.

(b) Upon a determination by the Secretary of Defense that such action is in the national interest, the end strengths prescribed by subsection (a) may be increased by a total of not more than the number equal to 2 percent of the total end strengths prescribed.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF CERTAIN PERSONNEL AUTHORIZED TO BE ON ACTIVE DUTY IN SUPPORT OF THE RESERVE COMPONENTS

SEC. 503. (a) For fiscal year 1983, the table in section 517(b) of title 10, United States Code, shall be deemed to read as follows:

Grade	Army	Navy	Air Force	Marine Corps
E–9	265	156	132	6
E–8	1,244	329	441	56.

(b) For fiscal year 1983, the columns under the headings, "Army", "Air Force", and "Marine Corps" in the table in section 524(a) of such title shall be deemed to read as follows:

Army	Air Force	Marine Corps
1,351	281	95
671	267	40
234	170	21.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title V?

If not, the Clerk will designate title VI.

Title VI reads as follows:

TITLE VI—CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

AUTHORIZATION OF END STRENGTH

SEC. 601. (a) The Department of Defense is authorized a strength in civilian personnel, as of September 30, 1983, of 1,050.060.

(b) The strength for civilian personnel prescribed in subsection (a) shall be apportioned among the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, and the agencies of the Department of Defense (other than the military departments) in such numbers as the Secretary of Defense shall prescribe. The Secretary of Defense shall report to the Congress within sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act on the manner in which the initial allocation of civilian personnel is made among the military departments and the agencies of the Department of Defense (other than the military departments) and shall include the rationale for each allocation.

(c) In computing the strength for civilian personnel, there shall be included all direct-hire and indirect-hire civilian personnel employed to perform military functions administered by the Department of Defense (other than those performed by the National Security Agency) whether employed on a full-time, part-time, or intermittent basis, but excluding special employment categories for students and disadvantaged youth such as the stay-in-school compaign, the temporary summer aid program and the Federal junior fellowship program and personnel participating in the worker-trainee opportunity program. Personnel employed under a part-time career employment program established by section 3402 of title 5, United States Code, shall be counted as prescribed by section 3404 of that title. Whenever a function, power or duty, or activity is transferred or assigned to a department or agency of the Department of Defense from a department or agency outside of the Department of Defense, or from another department or agency within the Department of Defense, the civilian personnel end-strength authorized for such departments or agencies of the Department of Defense affected shall be adjusted to reflect any increases or decreases in civilian personnel required as a result of such transfer or asssignent.

(d) When the Secretary of Defense determines that such action is necessary in the national interest or if any conversion of commercial- and industrial-type functions from performance by Department of Defense personnel to performance by private contractors which was anticipated to be made during fiscal year 1983 in the Budget of the President submitted for such fiscal year is not determined to be appropriate for such conversion under established administrative criteria, the Secretary of Defense may authorize the employment of civilian personnel in excess of the number authorized by subsection (a), but such additional number may not exceed 2 percent of the total number of civilian personnel authorized for the Department of Defense by subsection (a). The Secretary of Defense shall promptly notify the Congress of any authorization to increase civilian personnnel strength under this subsections.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title VI?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. NICHOLS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 23, line 6, insert the following new sentence after "of that title.": "Personnel employed in an overseas area on a part-time basis under a nonpermanent local-hire appointment who are dependents accompanying a Federal civilian employee or a member of a uniformed service on official assignment or tour of duty shall also be counted as prescribed by section 3404 of that title.".

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is very simple in nature. It will allow the Department of Defense to account for overseas dependent employees on a pro rata basis if they are part-time personnel.

The Members will recall that the Congress enacted the Part-Time Career Employment Act in 1978 in an effort to expand job opportunities for personnel wishing to work part time. Among other things, this act permits a Federal agency to count part-time personnel—for example, two people each of whom are each working half time—as one employee for the purpose of the agency's employment ceiling. Unfortunately, the act does not apply to overseas areas.

In overseas areas, in particular, dependents of military personnel and Government civilian employees are limited in the work available to them and those wishing to work part time are finding it extremely difficult to obtain employment on base because the installation would then have to count one against this ceiling. The real effect of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, will be to increase the job opportunities for dependents of military personnel and civilians overseas.

Although there is no formal administration position on this matter, I understand that the Department of Defense and the Office of Personnel Management support this change in the counting of personnel. Pro rata accounting is now used for personnel of the Department of Defense and other Federal agencies.

Mr. Chariman, I will to yield to the cosponsor of this amendment, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MITCHELL) for his comment.

Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. As a sponsor, of course, I am for it.

As the chairman has explained, it is a very uncomplicated, noncontroversial amendment.

It simply permits the Defense Department to count part-time employees overseas. These are part-time employes who are spouses of people in the service, count them the same way overseas as they do here in the United States.

It is only fair that we do this, because we have such a problem of unemployment overseas with spouses of people in the service.

The President issued an Executive order to improve the employment conditions for overseas people and the results of that study showed that the unemployment of military wives was well above the level of civilian wives in the private sector; so because it is especially acute overseas and because the number of jobs for Americans are so limited, I think we have to go along with this.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment makes good sense. It will help improve the job situation for military spouses overseas and I am pleased to support it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further comments. I ask for passage of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. NICHOLS).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title VI?

If not, the Clerk will designate title VII.

Title VII reads as follows:

TITLE VII—MILITARY TRAINING STUDENT LOADS

AUTHORIZATION OF TRAINING STUDENT LOADS

SEC. 701. (a) For fiscal year 1983, the components of the Armed Forces are authorized average military training student loads as follows:

(1) The Army, 78,311.
(2) The Navy, 66,930.
(3) The Marine Corps, 20,435.
(4) The Air Force, 48,769.
(5) The Army National Guard of the United States, 18,052.
(6) The Army Reserve, 14,579.
(7) The Naval Reserve, 1,000.
(8) The Marine Corps Reserve, 2,971.
(9) The Air National Guard of the United States, 2,328.
(10) The Air Force Reserve, 1,351.

(b) The average military student loads for the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force and the reserve components authorized in subsection (a) for fiscal year 1983 shall be adjusted consistent with the manpower strengths authorized in titles IV, V, and VI of this Act. Such adjustment shall be apportioned among the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force and the reserve components in such manner as the Secretary of Defense shall prescribe.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title VII?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STRATTON

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON: Page 25, after line 6, insert the following new section:

EXTENSION OF REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF STUDENTS REQUIRED TO BE IN A UNIT OF THE JUNIOR RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

SEC. 702. Section 602 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1981 (Public Law 96-342; 94 Stat. 1087), is amended by striking out "August 31, 1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "August 31, 1982".

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I have examined the amendment, and I am prepared to accept it on behalf of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to review this amendment. It is the same amendment that we have had for the past 2 years. It is a good amendment and it should be passed. I support it.

Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, our side has no objection to the amendment either. I feel that it should be extended. It is a worthy program.

I have an example of the success of this program in my congressional district, the School of Notre Dame in Utica, N.Y., an outstanding school, an excellent program, with broad participation. It would be a shame to exclude them from this type of program.

This school has 650 students and 150 of them participate in the junior ROTC program which, of course, is a ratio of 25 percent; so I am pleased to accept this amendment also, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, there were two or three amendments dealing in this same general framework. Does the gentleman's amendment reduce the number from a minimum of 100 to less, so that the junior ROTC can exist if it does not have the 100?

□ 1820

Mr. STRATTON. That is correct, yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right.

Mr. Chairman, I think there are many cases in which an arbitrary floor of 100 is really not reasonable. I think the amendment is reasonable. I think if a school such as I might have in my district—and in fact do—which has a very gungho ROTC program, they win awards and so forth, and I am thinking particularly about Enterprise, Ala. They have gone all over the country, they have a rifle competition team, a drill team; they are outstanding, but they are just right at 98, 99.

To arbitrarily say that you cannot have a unit when they want a unit, I think is wrong and I would certainly support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may come up at this time, that my amendment on troop withdrawal may be considered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was having trouble, along with the Chairman, hearing the request.

The gentlewoman would like to go back and reopen one of the titles?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. That is exactly right. It is the troop withdrawal amendment that I had put an amendment to, we had passed the title where that was, and I am asking unanimous consent to be able to offer it at this time.

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentlewoman puts a fellow on the spot.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentlewoman's amendment was to title IV.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will leave that up to the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON).

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER)?

Mr. STRATTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. STRATTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Are there other amendments to title VII? If not, the Clerk will designate title VIII.

Title VIII reads as follows:

TITLE VIII—CIVIL DEFENSE

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 801. Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1983 to carry out the provisions of the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2251), in a total amount of $252,340,000, as follows:

(1) For salaries and expenses, $32,198,000.
(2) For State and local assistance, $156,340,000.
(3) For emergency planning and assistance, $63,802,000.

AMOUNT AUTHORIZED FOR CONTRIBUTION FOR STATE PERSONNEL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

SEC. 802. Notwithstanding the second proviso of section 408 of the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2260), $60,000,000 of the amount authorized to be appropriated by the first section of this Act is available for appropriations for contributions to the States under section 205 of such Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2286) for personnel and administrative expenses.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. SCHROEDER

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentlewoman is not recognized, the Chair will state, until the Clerk reports the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of someone.

Is the amendment to be offered the amendment dealing with divorced spouses at this point?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield, Mr. Chairman, it certainly is. That is the one we have been talking about. It is the new title IX to the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, this is just a suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Will the gentleman suspend?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman yield for that purpose?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if that is the amendment to be offered at this time, it is my understanding—and perhaps I am incorrect—that we were going to rise at 7 o'clock this evening, and due to the importance of the amendment, since there would be some protracted debate, I was wondering if, by agreement, we could agree this could go over until tomorrow.

Now, I do not care, but I was just thinking perhaps it would interfere with the momentum, and interfering with the debate, it might be more advantageous to go over until tomorrow.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield, the gentlewoman has a little trouble in agreeing to do anything since the gentlewoman was not allowed to put in her prior amendment. Chivalry appears to be dead on my side of the aisle, so I am very nervous about agreeing to anything like that. I am afraid we would have to go with the normal procedure because we may come in tomorrow and they may decide that we cannot present it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand. First, I made the suggestion, really, trying to be helpful. Second, I am sorry if you were not here in time to offer the amendment you wanted to before. But you have the right, and I was suggesting that as perhaps being helpful, but the gentlewoman will do what she pleases.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. SCHROEDER : after title VIII insert the following new title (and redesignate the succeeding title and section accordingly):

TITLE IX—FORMER SPOUSE'S PROTECTION

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 901. This title may be cited as the "Uniformed Services former Spouses' protection Act".

PAYMENTS OF RETIRED AND RETAINER PAY

SEC. 902. (a) Chapter 71 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1408. Payment of retired or retainer pay in compliance with court orders

"(a) In this section:

"(1) 'Court' means—

"(A) any court of competent jurisdiction of any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

"(B) any court of the United States (as defined in section 451 of title 28) having competent jurisdiction; and

"(C) any court of competent jurisdication of any foreign country with which the United States has entered into an agreement requiring the United States to honor any court order.

"(2) 'Court order' means a court's final decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such a decree (including a final decree modifying the terms of a previously issued decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such previously issued decree), which—

"(A) is issued in accordance with the laws of the jurisdiction of that court;

"(B) provides for—

"(i) payment of child support (as defined in section 462(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 662(b)));

"(ii) payment of alimony (as deined in section 462 (c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 662 (c))); or

"(iii) division of property (including a division of community property); and

"(C) specifically provides for the payment of an amount, expressed in dollars or as a percentage of disposable retired or retainer pay, from the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member to the spouse or former spouse of that member.

For purposes of this definition, 'final decree' means a decree from which no appeal may be taken or from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed for taking such appeals under the laws applicable to such appeals, or a decree from which timely appeal has been taken and such appeal has been finally decided under the laws applicable to such appeals.

"(3) 'Disposable retired or retainer pay' means the total monthly retired or retainer pay to which a member is entitled under the provisions of this title (other than chapter 61 of this title), title 14, section 3 (a) of the Act of August 10, 1956 (70A Stat. 619; 33 U.S.C. 857a (a)), or section 221 (a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 213a (a)) less amounts which—

"(A) are owed by such member to the United States;

"(B) are required by law to be, and are deducted from the retired or retainer pay of such member, including fines and forfeitures ordered by courtsmartial, Federal employment taxes, and amounts waived in order to receive compensation under title 5 or title 38;

"(C) are properly withheld for Federal State, or local income tax purposes, if the withholding of such amounts is authorized or required by law and to the extent such amounts withheld are not greater than would be authorized if such member claimed all dependents to which he was entitled;

"(D) are withheld under section 3402 (i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 3402 (i)) if such member presents evidence of a tax obligation which supports such withholding;

"(E) are deducted as Government life insurance premiums (not including amounts deducted for supplemental coverage); or

"(F) are deducted because of an election under chapter 73 of this title to provide an annuity to a spouse or former spouse to whom payment of a portion of such member's retired or retainer pay is being made pursuant to a court order under this section.

"(4) 'Member' means a person who is or was appointed or enlisted in, or conscripted into, any of the uniformed services, and includes a former member of any of the uniformed services.

"(5) 'Secretary concerned' has the meaning given that term by section 101 (5) of title 37.

"(6) 'Spouse or former spouse' means the husband or wife, or former husband or wife, of a member who, on or before the date of a court order, had been married to that member.

"(7) 'Uniformed services' has the meaning given to that term by section 101 (3) of title 37.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"((1) service of a court order is effective if—

"(A) an appropriate agent of the Secretary concerned designated for reciept of service of court orders under regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h) of this section, or, if no agent has been so designated, the Secretary concerned, is personally served or is served by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested;

"(B) the court order is regular on its face; and

"(C) the court order or other documents served with the court order identify the member concerned and included the social security number of such member; and

"(2) a court order is regular on its face when the order—

"(A) is from a court of competent jurisdiction;

"(B) is legal in form; and

"(C) includes nothing on its face that provides reasonable notice that it is issued without authority of law.

"(c)(1) Subject to the limitations of this section, a court may treat disposable retired or retainer pay payable to a member for pay periods beginning on or after June 25, either as property solely of the member or as property of the member and his spouse in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction of such court.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section does not create any right, title, or interest which can be sold, assigned, transferred, or otherwise disposed of (including by inheritance) by a spouse or former spouse.

"(3) This section does not authorize any court to order that a member apply for retirement or retire from the uniformed services at a particular time in order to effectuate any payment under this section.

"(d) Not later than 90 days after the effective service of a court order with respect to a member who is entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, or, in the case of a member who, on the date of the effective service of a court order with respect to such member, is not entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, not later than 90 days after such member first becomes entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, the Secretary concerned shall, subject to the limitations of this section, pay to the spouse or former spouse of the member the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay specifically provided for in the court order. Payments under this section shall not be made more frequently than once each month, and the Secretary concerned shall not be required to vary normal pay and disbursement cycles for retired or retainer pay in order to comply with such court orders. Payments from the disposable retired or retainer pay of any member pursuant to this section shall terminate in accordance with the terms of the applicable court order, but not later than the date of the death of the member or the date of the death of the spouse or former spouse to whom payments are being made, whichever occurs first.

"(e)(1) The total amount of the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member payable under subsection (d) of this section shall not exceed 50 percent of such disposable retired or retainer pay.

"(2) In the event of effective service of more than one court order which provide for payment to more than one spouse or former spouse from the disposable retired or retainer pay of one member, such pay shall be used to satisfy, subject to the limitations of paragraph (1) of this subsection, such court orders on a first-come, first-served basis. Such court orders shall be satisfied (subject to the limitations of paragraph (1) this subsection) out of that amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains after the satisfaction of all court orders which have been previously served.

"(3)(A) In the event of effective service of conflicting court orders under this section which assert to direct that different amounts be paid during a month to the same spouse or former spouse from the disposable retired or retainer pay of the same member, the Secretary concerned shall—

"(i) pay to that spouse the least amount of disposable retired or retainer pay directed to be paid during that month by any such conflicting court order, but not more than the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains available for payment of such court orders based on when such court orders were effectively served and the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) of this subsection;

"(ii) retain an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay that is equal to the lesser of—

"(I) the difference between the largest amount of retired or retainer pay required by any conflicting court order to be paid to the spouse or former spouse and the amount payable to the spouse or former spouse under clause (i) of this subparagraph; and

"(II) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains available for payment of any conflicting court order based on when such court order was effectively served and the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) of this subsection;

"(iii) pay to that member the amount which is equal to the amount of that member's disposable retired or retainer pay (less any amounts paid during such month pursuant to legal process served under section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659) and any amounts paid during such month pursuant to court orders effectively served under this section, other than such conflicting court orders) minus—

"(I) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay paid under clause (i) of this subparagraph; and

"(II) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay retained under clause (ii) of this subparagraph.

"(B) The Secretary concerned shall hold the amount retained under clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) until such time as that Secretary is provided with a court order which has been certified by the member and the former spouse to be valid and applicable to the retained amount. Upon being provided with such an order, the Secretary shall pay the retained amount in accordance with the order.

"(4)(A) In the event of effective service of a court order under this section and the service of legal process pursuant to section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659), both of which provide for payments during a month from the retired or retainer pay of the same member, such court orders and legal process shall be satisfied on a first-come, first-served basis. Such court orders and legal process shall be satisfied out of moneys which are subject to such orders and legal process and which remain available in accordance with the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of this paragraph of this subsection during such month after the satisfaction of all court orders or legal process which have been previously served.

"(B) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the total amount of the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member payable by the Secretary concerned under all court orders pursuant to this section and all local processes pursuant to section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659) with respect to any member may not exceed 65 percent of the disposable retired or retainer pay payable to such member.

"(5) A court order which itself or because of previously served court orders provides for the payment of an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which exceeds the amount of such pay available for payment because of the limit set forth in paragraph (1) this subsection, or which, because of previously served court orders or legal process previously served under section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659), provides for payment of an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which exceeds that amount available for payment in accordance with the limits of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) of this subsection, shall not be deemed to be irregular on its face solely for that reason. However, such order shall be deemed to be fully satisfied under this section by the payment to the spouse or former spouse of the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay available for such payment in accordance with the limits of paragraphs (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(f) (1) The United States and any officer or employee thereof shall not be liable with respect to any payment made from retired or retainer pay to any member, spouse, or former spouse pursuant to a court order that is regular on its face if such payment is made in accordance with this section and the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h) of this section.

"(2) No officer or employee of the United States who, under regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h), has the duty to respond to interrogatories shall be subject under any law to any disciplinary action or civil or criminal liability or penalty for, or because of, any disclosure of information made by him in carrying out any of his duties which directly or indirectly pertain to answering such interrogatories.

"(g) Any person receiving effective service of any court order under this section shall, as soon as possible, but not later than 30 days after the date on which effective service is made, send a written notice of such court order (together with a copy thereof) to the member affected by such court order at his last known address.

"(h) The Secretaries concerned shall prescribe uniform regulations to administer this section within the uniformed services.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1408. Payment of retired or retainer pay in compliance with court orders.".

SURVIVOR ANNUITIES

SEC. 903. (a) Section 1447 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) 'Former spouse' means the surviving former husband or wife of a person who is eligible to participate in the Plan.

"(7) 'Court' has the meaning given that term by section 1408(a)(1) of this title.

"(8) 'Court order' means a court's final decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such a decree (including a final decree modifying the terms of a previously issued decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or of a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement agreement incident to such previously issued decree).

"(9) 'Final decree' means a decree from which no appeal may be taken or from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed for the taking of such appeals under the laws applicable to such appeals, or a decree from which timely appeal has been taken and such appeal has been finally decided under the laws applicable to such appeals.

"(10) 'Regular on its face' has the meaning given to that term by section 1408(b)(2) of this title.".

(b)(1) Section 1448(a) of such title is amended—

(A) in paragraph (3)(A) by inserting "or elects to provide an annuity under subsection (b)(2) of this section," after "for his spouse,"; and

(B) in paragraph (3)(B) by inserting "or elects to provide an annuity under subsection (b)(2) of this section," after "for his spouse,".

(2) Section 1448(b) of such title is amended to read as follows:

'(b)(1) A person who is not married and does not have a dependent child when he becomes eligible to participate in the Plan may elect to provide an annuity to a natural person with an insurable interest in that person or to provide an annuity to a former spouse.

"(2) A person who is married or has a dependent child may elect to provide an annuity to a former spouse instead of providing an annuity to a spouse or dependent child if the election is made in order to carry out the terms of a property settlement agreement entered into with a former spouse (without regard to whether such agreement is included in or approved by a court order).

"(3) In the case of a person electing to provide an annutiy under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection by virtue of eligibility under subsection (a)(1)(B), the election shall include a designation under subsection (e).

"(4) Any person who elects under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection to provide an annuity to a former spouse shall, at the time of making such election, provide the Secretary concerned with a written statement, in a form to be prescribed by that Secretary, signed by such person and the former spouse setting forth whether such election is being made pursuant to a voluntary written agreement previously entered into by such person as a part of or incident to a proceeding of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, and if so, whether such voluntary written agreement has been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order.".

(c) Section 1450(a)(4) of such title is amended—

(1) by inserting "former spouse or other" before "natural person"; and

(2) by striking out "if there is no eligible beneficiary under clause (1) or clause (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "unless the election to provide an annuity to the former spouse or other natural person has been changed as provided in subsection (f) of this section".

(d) Section 1450(f) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) A person who elects to provide an annuity to a person designated by him under section 1448(b) of this title may, subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, change that election and provide an annuity to his spouse or dependent child. The Secretary of Defense shall notify the former spouse or other natural person previously designated under section 1448(b) of this title of any change of election under the first sentence of this paragraph. Any such change of election is subject to the same rules with respect to execution, revocation, and effectiveness set forth in section 1448(a)(5) of this title.

"(2) Any person who, incident to a proceeding of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, enters into a voluntary written agreement to elect under section 1448(b) of this title to provide an annuity to a former spouse and who makes an election pursuant to such agreement may not change such election under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless—

"(A) in any case in which such agreement has been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order, the person—

"(i) furnishes to the Secretary concerned a certified copy of a court order which is regular on its face and modifies the provisions of all previous court orders relating to the agreement to make such election so as to permit the person to change the election; and

"(ii) certifies to the Secretary concerned that the court order is valid and in effect; or

"(B) in any case in which such agreement has not been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order, the person—

"(i) furnishes to the Secretary concerned a statement, in such form as the Secretary concerned may prescribe, signed by the former spouse and evidencing the former spouse's agreement to a change in the election under paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(ii) certifies to the Secretary concerned that the statement is current and in effect.

"(3) Nothing in this chapter authorizes any court to order any person to elect under section 1448(b) of this title to provide an annuity to a former spouse unless such person has voluntarily agreed in writing to make such election.".

MEDICAL BENEFITS

SEC. 904. (a) Section 1072(2) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) for a period of 180 days following the date of a final decree of divorce, dissolution, or annulment of a marriage to a member or former member, the unremarried former spouse if, on the date of such final decree of divorce, dissolution, or annulment, that former spouse had been married to the member or former member for a period of at least 20 years during which period the member or former member performed at least 20 years of service which is creditible in determining that member's or former member's eligibility for retired or retainer pay, or equivalent pay, as a result of his service in any of the uniformed services.

The Secretary concerned may extend the 180-day period described in subparagraph (F) of this paragraph with respect to any former unremarried spouse of a member or former member for such period as the Secretary considers necessary, but only for the purpose of continuing any medical treatment of the former unremarried spouse which had been provided under this chapter before the end of such 180-day period.".

(b) Section 1076 (b) of such title is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "A dependent described in section 1072 (2)(F) of this title may be given medical and dental care pursuant to clause (2) of this subsection without regard to subclause (B) of such clause.".

(c) Section 1079 of such title is amended—

(A) by striking out "and children" in the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof ", children, and certain former spouses"; and

(B) by striking out "and children" in the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof ", children, and certain former spouses (as described in section 1072 (2) (F) of this title)".

(d) The section heading of sections 1080, 1081, and 1083 of such title are each amended by striking out "and children" and inserting in lieu thereof ", children, and certain former spouses".

(e) the items relating to sections 1079, 1080, 1081, and 1083 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 55 of such title are each amended by striking out "and children" and inserting in lieu thereof ", children, and certain former spouses".

EFFECTIVE DATE AND TRANSITION

SEC. 905. (a) The amendments made by this title shall take effect on the first day of the first month which begins more than 120 days after the date of enactment.

(b) The amendments made by section 902(d) of this title shall apply only with respect to payments of retired or retainer pay payable under chapter 71 of title 10, United States Code, for periods beginning on or after the effective date of such amendments, but without regard to the date of any court order.

(c) The amendments made by section 903 of this title shall apply to persons who become eligible to participate in the Survivor Benefit Plan before, on, or after the effective date of such amendments.

(d) The amendments made by section 904 of this title shall apply in the case of any former spouse of a member or former member of the uniformed services only if the final decree of divorce, dissolution, or annulment of the marriage of the former spouse and such member or former member is dated on or after the effective date of such amendments.

(e) For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "court order" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(a)(2) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 2 of this title);

(2) the term "former spouse" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(c)(6) of such title (as added by section 2 of this title); and

(3) the term "uniformed services" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(a)(7) of such title (as added by section 2 of this title).

Mrs. SCHROEDER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, it is getting late. We were going to rise anyway. We would like the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) to have ample time on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that the gentlewoman will be first up tomorrow, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY) having assumed the chair, Mr. AUCOIN, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6030) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1454

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1454.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, due to a serious illness in my family, I was unavoidably away from Washington on Friday, July 23, 1982, and unable to record my votes on rollcalls 209, 210, 211, 212, and 213. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay" on passage of H.R. 2329, Cherokee Indian Claims Act (rollcall No. 209), "nay" on the previous question on the rule as reported to H.R. 2643, Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1981 (rollcall No. 210), "aye" on adoption of House Resolution 528, the rule providing for consideration of H.R. 5203, FIFRA Act amendments (rollcall No. 211), "aye" on adoption of House Resolution 529, the rule providing for consideration of H.R. 5427, Radio Marti (rollcall No. 212), and "aye" on the motion to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of H.R. 5427, Radio Marti.

AMERICAN WHEAT SHOULD NOT BE SOLD TO SOVIET UNION

(Mr. WEAVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, the Reagan administration has busted our budget by bringing in a military funding proposal for billions and billions and hundreds of billions of dollars for military weaponry to defend ourselves against our primary adversary, the Soviet Union, while at the same time the papers report today that President Reagan himself is going to approve an extension of grain sales to the Soviet Union, thereby bailing the Soviet Union out, helping the Soviet Union in this hour of their need by supplying them cheap grain, grain at prices to the Soviet Union at less than it costs our farmers to produce it.

Now, I say the most single important thing we can do to secure our Nation is to keep that grain for ourselves, and that is why I am offering an amendment to the Defense authorization bill to have our military buy this grain that would otherwise go to the Soviet Union and put it in storage as military preparedness grain reserve.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

AMERICAN WHEAT SHOULD NOT BE SOLD TO SOVIET UNION

(Mr. AuCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to yield to my colleague from Oregon, who was not able to complete his statement.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I will just finish by saying that my amendment would have the military buy this grain that is going to help and aid and abet the Soviet Union if we sell it to them at prices below the cost of production, and use if for our own national security. So, I think that the Weaver amendment creating a military preparedness grain reserve would be the single most important thing we could do for our national security, far more important than the billions they spend on some of these other weapons, because it would keep the grain here for our security and deprive the Soviet Union of getting that grain and helping, aiding and abetting the Soviet Union as President Reagan apparently wants to do.

I call the Reagan administration to task right now for being an absolute hyprocrite and practicing hyprocrisy in giving the Soviet Union our grain. I find this to be one of the worst possible policies imaginable for this country to do.

STATUS REPORT ON RECONCILIATION

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I take this minute to briefly summarize what is happening on the reconciliation issue that we are following carefully today.

The Agriculture Committee met today and is presently marking up their reconciliation bill. They have adopted a dairy provision which involves savings of $1.3 million. They have enacted a wheat diversion program and included rice in that provision. They now are presently marking up the food stamp section and they hope to complete their action by tomorrow.

The Armed Services Committee is tied to whatever happens on the cost of living issue and we anticipate that that bill will be considered on the floor on Thursday.

Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs met today and reported out their bill. We anticipate that they will be going to the Rules Committee later this week for action next week.

The Energy and Commerce Committee also was in markup today. We expect that they will continue their markup schedule for the rest of the week.

The Foreign Affairs Committee is also tied to whatever happens on the cost of living index, which is included in the postal provision.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is also included or impacted by whatever happens on the COLA vote which is scheduled again for Thursday, and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries area would involve a COLA reduction on the Coast Guard.

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee went to the Rules Committee, achieved a rule, and the rule would allow for one amendment to provide for the 4-percent cap on COLA as the single amendment which would be offered.

The reason for that is that the committee itself did not meet its full target and did not include the 4-percent goal.

We complete the action with regards to the Veterans' Committee which was completed today, and Ways and Means which was still in the process of considering their provisions.

NUCLEAR FREEZE

(Mr. FLORIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, we are here today on instructions from the American people.

House Joint Resolution 521 calls upon both the United States and the Soviet Union to pursue a mutual and verifiable freeze and reduction in nuclear weapons. This resolution arises from a broadbased public conviction that the leadership of the nuclear superpowers can and must do better in the pursuit of peace.

It is regrettable that this resolution is necessary. It is regrettable that officials currently responsible for nuclear policy talk casually of the plausibility of fighting a nuclear war. It is regrettable that they seriously contemplate nuclear scenarios involving tens of millions of potential fatalities.

In response to this irrational and casual approach to confrontation, the reaction of the American people has been rational and sober. House Joint Resolution 521, the freeze resolution, is carefully worded to insure that the freeze will be mutual and verifiable and that it will enhance rather than detract from stability. The resolution reflects the conviction that neither the reckless pursuit of security nor the careless pursuit of peace should be allowed to increase the risk of war.

The critics of the freeze contend that it will disadvantage the United States. But the freeze would apply to the Soviet arsenal as well as our own and would have to be verifiable on both sides.

The critics of the freeze argue that it would lock us into an inferior position. But this ignores the facts. The U.S. ballistic-missile submarines are superior to the Soviets', our long-range bombers are superior to the Soviets', our cruise missiles are superior to the Soviets', and our stockpile of nuclear bombs outnumbers the Soviets'. Even on the most unlikely and pessimistic assumption that our land-based missiles could be completely crippled in a first strike, surprise attack, we would have 15 or more undetectable ballistic missile submarines hidden in the vast reaches of the oceans, from which we could deliver an unimaginably ferocious counter-attack. One such submarine has 16 missiles, each of which has 10 warheads. This means that the discharge of the weapons of two submarines could demolish every major city in the Soviet Union.

The critics of the freeze also contend that a freeze would prevent the United States from developing new weapons needed as bargaining chips in negotiations. The trouble with this argument is that the table is piled high with old chips that we have never bargained for anything but an increased chance of mutual annihilation. In the early 1970's this country developed a means of launching multiple warheads from a single rocket. Instead of proposing that both superpowers forgo these weapons, we tried to deploy them to gain advantage over the Soviets. Now that the Russians have developed the same technique, the critics of the freeze can think only of escalating the arms race again. But each new turn of this lethal spiral has increased instability and danger, until the world is poised today on a hair trigger, with nuclear weapons that can reach their targets in minutes.

I said at the outset that we are here with instructions from the American people. Our instructions are to call a halt, and then to undo the hideous trap closing in upon mankind.

It is a tribute to democracy that the public has risen up to remind officialdom of these fundamentals. In addressing the Soviet Government, as well as our own, the American people speak for the voiceless public of Russia as well as for themselves. If mankind survives this critical passage—as I have faith we will—it will be to the lasting credit of democracy that it rose up to meet mankind's greatest challenge.

I cast my vote for the freeze.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 6323, ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT AND DEMONSTRATION ACT OF 1983

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 97-671) on the resolution (H. Res. 535) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6323) to authorize appropriations for environmental research, development, and demonstration for the fiscal years 1983 and 1984, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 6542, WILDERNESS PROTECTION ACT OF 1982

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 97-670) on the resolution (H. Res. 534) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6542) to withdraw certain lands from mineral leasing, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 6862, REDUCING BUDGET AUTHORITY AND OUTLAYS ON CERTAIN CIVIL SERVICE PROGRAMS

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 97-672) on the resolution (H. Res. 536) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6862) to reduce budget authority and outlays under certain civil service programs pursuant to the first concurrent resolution on the budget—fiscal year 1983, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

NEW SIXTH COLUMN STRIKES AT U.S. IN THE TRADE WAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. GAYDOS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous material, on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, the term Fifth Column came into the language almost 50 years ago in another time of international unrest and undeclared war.

It was coined when a Spanish general observed that the city of Madrid was under seige by five columns of attackers—four striking from outside and a fifth of agents within.

Novelist Ernest Hemingway clearly illustrated the meaning of the term in his play on the Spanish Civil War, "The Fifth Column," when he wrote:

> Oh, they always shoot from the windows at night during the bombardment. The fifth column people. The people who fight us from inside the city.

During the wider war that followed, the meaning was broadened to include those who spied and committed sabotage.

Today, as then, there is great economic distress and international unrest, and the United States is even involved in war of kind—it is a trade war.

This war is fought with subsidies and cartels that would be illegal here, and with dumped goods, rather than guns—it is trade war.

And seige is laid to industries and factories, and the spoils are jobs and the casualties the jobless—it is a trade war.

But with us still are those who shoot from the windows, who fight from within.

Today they gather scraps and pieces of information and they steal the hard-won and expensive trade secrets of those who have been more successful or more clever.

A different kind of war, the passage of time, both require a new name for today's economic window shooters.

But since they descend from the Fifth Column. The name should reflect its traditions.

So they are a Sixth Column to my mind.

And their concern in the trade war, as in real war, is for advance knowledge of the plans and tactics and strategies of the future, in the short-term and in the long-term.

Furthermore, their existence supports the assertion that we have a war on our hands. Theirs is a craft born of war and practiced only under war-like pressures.

You see, if you are at peace and have goodwill towards someone, you do not need to read their mail or know their plans or puzzle out their moves.

So, Mr. Speaker, today I ask interested Members of the House of Representatives to consider the economic future of the United States, and the significance to it of the Sixth Column, and the meaning of some recent developments that relate to both.

Some of these developments—the attempted theft by Japanese companies of IMB's newest computer design and technology—are all well known.

Others are buried in thick reports and books and on the inside pages of newspapers.

But taken altogether they do clearly signal the intent of our Japanese trading partners and so-called, allies.

Taken altogether they point to the next big assaults and shocks in the ongoing trade war.

And taken altogether they are a warning this Congress cannot afford to ignore if our purpose is, as the Constitution says, to promote the general welfare.

The future is an alluring thing for Americans, Mr. Speaker, and we always have put full faith in it.

Even now our theorists tell us that advanced and advancing technology and bold enterprises, that have yet to be dreamed of, will carry the Nation to unparalleled wealth and stable employment in the future.

This is an article of faith among some who weave economic theory and others who implement political policy.

Forget steel, forget automobiles, forget the strength and social stability all the basic industries now under attack have produced, they say.

Forget their importance to the national economy and the national security, the future is coming, they urge.

Salvation is in computers and aircraft and all manner of advanced technology, and here the United States has a good lead and a strong foothold, they insist.

And there is condescension and scorn in their tone toward any who question their vision.

But others have visions, too, Mr. Speaker, and they see things a little differently.

So this scripture from the book of the future generally is preached to us with little attention given to the forces at work in the world or to the vision of others.

Today's sermon is on another vision of the future.

For all of time the future has concerned mankind, including Confucius, who said:

> If a man take no thought of what is distant, he will find sorrow close at hand.

And including the Roman, Publilus Syrus, who warned:

> By tolerating an old wrong, we invite a new one.

And including Thomas Jefferson, who observed:

> History, by apprizing the past, will enable men to judge the future.

These remarks, then, will survey the recent past, touch on the present, and try to reach into the future.

They will touch on aircraft and computers, and on the idea of capital mobilization for economic war, and on the sixth column.

Since Mr. Jefferson is one of our own, and closer to us in time, I will follow his advice first and try to judge the near future.

So let us look at the fairly recent past to see how our trading partners have handled new developments in their market.

A good example for examination is offered in the experience of Sony Trading Co. in its attempt to sell in Japan goods made in the United States.

By the way, here we do not have as a factor the often-mentioned differences between cultures as a barrier—Sony is a Japanese company.

Sony found that foreign appliances were Superior—let me stress Superior—to anything made in Japan and decided to import them, the Wall Street Journal reported last month.

And Sony apparently found a ripe market because, as the journal said:

> U.S. refrigerator sales grew steadily for about 3 years until Japanese manufacturers—Matsushita Electric, Hitachi Limited and Toshiba Corp.—jumped into the market.
>
> Their models were identical to the Whirlpool imports in size and price.
> Sony has learned that if something can be copied and the market for it appears large enough, it almost certainly will be turned out by Japan's competitive industries.

Sony's sales are about one-fifth of what they were before the Japanese firms moved in, and the Journal reported that the line of former moneymakers now is a loser.

Some would call this not more than sound business practice on the part of the Japanese while other would call it protectionist in the extreme.

But I will call it nothing for the time being and move on.

However, I will move no further than the celebrated aluminum baseball bat case that came to light last year. A relatively small thing.

In that experiment in free trade, Japan-style, a California manufacturer began selling there the aluminum baseball bat, for which he developed the technology.

He began making money. And soon after that the government threw him out of the market by the use of rules and regulations.

But Japanese consumers were not deprived of the popular aluminum bats.

By that time Japanese firms were making them, including the firm through which our California casualty in the trade war had been marketing.

As the Sony trading's president told the Journal:

> Japanese manufacturers may not have the morals for international business. They are always imitating. It is a very bad point.

I call it a way of life in matters large and small.

And it amounts to a tolerance of old wrongs that invites bigger new ones, which are coming along nicely, as we shall see.

Furthermore, these practices are as big a barrier to foreign goods as anything a government could contrive.

They do as much violence to the spirit of free trade as any tariff or nontariff barrier that could be established.

So—although the Government of Japan is talking about removing some barriers—there still is a barrier to penetrate that may be impenetrable.

On top of that, talk can mask intent as well as disclose it.

And this is an article of faith at least as old as mankind, but one expressed very well in the Book of Psalms in these words:

> The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart; his words were softer than oil, yet they were drawn swords.

So let us talk of free trade, but let us realize that the results may well be something else.

The results in Japan have been miraculous and their vision of the future is not all that grim.

Steel, automobiles, consumer electronics, all the components of the Japanese economic miracle, have their genesis in the Government of Japan and the people of Japan.

Japan's industry is conceived and nurtured behind barriers and sent full grown into the world to compete, and it is backed literally by the full faith and credit and the savings of the people as invested by the government.

According to Dr. Chalmers Johnson of the University of California, at Berkeley, the boiler on the Japanese economic engine is the fiscal investment and loan plan, which is largely devoted to carrying out government economic policy and providing capital to business.

Dr. Johnson—who wrote "Miti and the Japanese Economic Miracle"—likens it to a nationalized savings and loan with assets of about five times the world's largest commercial bank.

He estimates that sums equaling 5 percent to 6 percent of the GNP are available for stoking the boiler.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this year our defense expenditures will come to about 5.9 percent of our gross national product.

This estimate includes sums to be spent protecting Japan's trade and energy routes.

The Japanese spend about 1 percent of their GNP on defense, and they are extremely creative in the way they use it.

They are using it in part to build an aircraft industry, which I will touch on later.

As for the boiler, our General Accounting Office has diagramed it in a new report entitled, "Industrial Policy: Japan's Flexible Approach."

The GAO diagram shows about $77 billion of capital going into the boiler in 1981, and it is comprised of: $15 billion from the welfare and national pension special accounts; $26 billion from what the GAO calls other special accounts; $35 billion from Japan's postal service savings system, the place where most Japanese put their savings.

The government has this large sum of personal savings to invest because there is little alternative to the system and incentive to use it.

Mr. Speaker, that is what went into the boiler in 1981, and the GAO says it came out this way: $38.5 billion to the government-owned Japan Development Bank to implement economic policy; $21.9 billion for public investment in equity and loans and public works; and $16.4 billion earmarked for local government for equity loans and public works.

I am uneasy with these figures for two reasons.

First, the GAO charted the flow of capital in yen and I converted it to dollars based on the published exchange rate of 1 day last month. There are more zeros involved than my hand calculator could accommodate.

So, if there is error, it is unintentional.

Second, I am uncomfortable at being told that large amounts of such mobile capital can be had at rates below the prime.

About 85 percent of the Japan Development Bank's loans in the early years of the miracle went to steel and the other basic industries that found such success in the world.

On top of that, private lenders follow the lead set by the development bank.

This is part of the much-discussed concensus in Japanese society.

The GAO report defined concensus almost as clearly as Hemingway did the Fifth Column. The agency noted that:

> In general the close coordination between the Ministry of Finance and the Bank of Japan is an example of the concensus nature of policymaking; that is, the belief that monetary and fiscal policies should be unified in support of industry.

Allow me to summarize, Mr. Speaker: One aspect of the heralded concensus in Japan is the belief that monetary and fiscal policies should be unified in support of industry.

How do these things work out in practice?

I cannot say with certainty, but we can draw some details from the recent Washington Post story dealing with an American manufacturer who is opening a plant in Japan to use technology they do not have. His products are used in computers.

What he gets in return for delivering this technology and these jobs is this: 8.3 percent financing for his $2.5 million plant from the Japan Development Bank; and short-term working capital at 6.5 percent; and, purchase of his plant site by the local government for leasing to him at "ludicrously" nominal costs.

Why, we have not mobilized our capital toward a goal with that force since World War II.

And the Japanese never demobilized after World War II.

Dr. Johnson noted to me that for years our partners did maintain wartime levels of economic mobilization. But he said that now they are mobilized more for economic defense, as he sees it.

Nevertheless, it does not look to me like they are letting the assault and beachhead industries like steel and automobiles wither.

For example, The Journal of Commerce last March carried a short story that made note of a $3.7 billion modernization planned this year for the five biggest Japanese steel companies. I can not imagine the Development Bank would be standoffish if approached.

Meanwhile, American steel companies are canceling or delaying the bulk of $7 billion in modernization plans because of a bad market that is under assault by imports and outrageous interest rates. Japan's steel exports to us are up about 15 percent, by the way.

In that regard, efficiency is not always the determining factor on steel imports from Japan.

A formal finding has just been made that Japan Steel Works engaged in dumping here—selling at 14 percent under fair value—in the time it increased certain sales here by 8,500 percent.

The product was stainless clad and the finding came in response to a complaint by a U.S. firm, Lukens Steel.

Did Lukens suddenly become inefficient?

No, but in 1979 Japan Steel Works expanded its stainless clad capability by two or three times, I am told.

You see, they suddenly had this excess capacity and apparently the decision was to work the capacity and move out the product and to hell with profit.

Furthermore, I would not be surprised to learn the Japan Development Bank had a hand in making the expansion possible.

Meanwhile, the Mitsui Trading Co. last week was indicted by a Federal grand jury in California and quickly entered a case-closing plea to 21 counts of an indictment in a dumping case.

One way they planned to dump, according to court records, was by setting up what was called a "window company" in Texas.

Said a Mitsui memo on the matter:

> We will be able to sell Japanese-made (wire) rope as American-made by passing it through their plant.

I am told that in Japanese such a company is called Dummi—D-u-m-m-i. It comes from the English word dummy.

Remember, they are describing the company, not their trading partners.

Matsui paid criminal and civil fines totaling $11.2 million

But there will be no trial in which all of the facts will be placed on the public record. At this point I would include an article by William Allan, that appeared in the Pittsburgh Press.

U.S. PULLS PUNCH IN MITSUI STEEL DUMPING

(By William Allan)

Plea bargaining in San Francisco the other day should make a few Pittburgh hearts beat faster.

The U.S. unit of Mitsui & Co., a huge Japanese trading firm, pleaded guilty to 21 criminal charges in connection with dumping steel—charging less for it in America than in Japan. The company agreed to pay $11 million in civil penalties and $210,000 in fines.

Specifically, Mitsui U.S.A. was accused of reporting to the U.S. Customs Service fictitiously high prices to avoid the Antidumping Act of 1921, then selling at unfairly low prices by means of $1.3 million in kickbacks, credits and secret rebates.

Three Mitsui employees face criminal charges, but the U.S. Justice Department agreed not to use the company's guilty plea against them. And two American firms pleaded guilty and have been fined.

That sort of wraps up the legal aspects, but what should interest Pittsburgh is what's between the lines of the agreement.

The Japanese firm said it was neither admitting nor denying any wrongdoing, but it did plead guilty to all 21 counts of the indictment and the $210,000 in fines was the maximum.

That has to be a record for plea bargaining.

The $11 million in civil penalties was negotiated by the Justice Department "to cover the wrong done to the U.S. Government as part of a plea arrangement," said one report.

That's nice. But what about the wrong done to U.S. steel firms, now operating at a 49-year low? And how about the damage to 100,000 U.S. steelworkers laid off with little prospect of being recalled in the near future?

The average person need not understand fully all his legal wheeling and dealing to know that for years the steel industry—management and labor—has been hollering that the Japanese were dumping steel on the American market.

But, generally speaking, the bureaucrats have been pooh-poohing the idea. They'd rather believe talk of poor American workmanship, low American productivity, and American industrialists too cheap to invest in new equipment.

Then one of the big Japanese exporters is caught with egg all over its face, pleads guilty to everything, accepts the maximum fine and says so-sorry to have hurt Japanese image abroad.

A big part of the settlement was the Justice Department agreeing to halt its investigation of Mitsui of Japan and to withhold from a grand jury any further charges against Mitsui U.S.A. arising from this probe.

U.S. Attorney Joseph Russoniello explained that although the indictment's allegations represented $14 million in steel imports, the government could have gone after Mitsui on another $36 million worth of imports.

However, he said, to fully document the entire $50 million would have been a "horrendous" task in terms of manpower and expense. The investigation, he said, already had involved 85 agents at a cost of almost a million dollars.

To Russoniello's credit, he apparently nailed down this case, and he's demanding that Mitsui turn over the $11,210,000 in penalties and fines in the form of a cashier's check by Sept. 30.

But in laying back, he's dead wrong. It's good business to put 85 bureaucrats to work if they bring in $11 million for each million invested. And the Japanese would be the first to admit it.

However, the Mitsui case does not sound like it involved a defensive action, Mr. Speaker.

But whether mobilized for attack, or defense, it is really only a matter of emphasis.

The point is that they are mobilized.

It is U.S. Company against foreign country in the on-going trade war.

I wish time allowed me to include whole pages and chapters from Dr. Johnson's books.

He seasons his text with terms from the Japanese language and gives an idiomatic explanation of their meaning, which can deepen understanding.

For example, there is the earlier-mentioned practice that has private banks following government loan patterns in dealing with industry.

Dr. Johnson explains that the practice is called Yudo, which is guidance or inducement, in Japanese—guidance as in Yudo Bakudan, which is guided missile.

So it might benefit the House to think about how that guidance comes about.

The GAO says that it begins in deliberations by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry's Industrial Structure Council. The Council is made up of representatives from government, labor, industry, academia, and other areas.

The GAO noted that:

> MITI's planning . . . specifically focuses on which industrial sectors are to be targeted for growth and how.

The results are called mitivisions, which is the way they see the future.

The mitivision for the 1980's calls for growth in high value added manufacturing, enterprises that link high technology with low use of resources and energy.

Specifically named and covered by GAO's remarks are aircraft and computers and robotics.

Japan wants an aircraft industry, general aviation and commercial.

Here the United States has been hands down the world's best.

So, take notice of the GAO finding that current industrial policies stress the development of Japanese technology.

Then notice that the Government requires that self-defense aircraft bought from the United States—patrol planes and our most advanced fighter—must be built in Japan on license.

They are built in Japan on license despite the fact that it probably would be cheaper to buy them from the American manufacturers, according to a June 15 report in the Christian Science Monitor.

As the Wall Street Journal reported last May, it provides a way to learn about up-to-date aircraft manufacturing systems and technologies.

In addition, there seems to be another requirement.

UAW president, Douglas Fraser noted last year in a speech on his union's automobile domestic content bill that the Japanese require 40 percent of the value of those self-defense aircraft to be made in Japan.

The technology and production bases for military and civilian aircraft are easily interchangeable.

And our partners have found a way of squeezing the most out of our defense dollars and their industrial development dollars.

But there is still more, Mr. Speaker.

The Boeing Commerical Airplane Co. is an American success story.

Boeing has a new transport on the market, the 767, and it is being challenged worldwide by a 70 percent government-owned European consortium that produces the Airbus.

Boeing beat out Airbus in Japan.

And Japanese manufacturers will produce 15 percent of the worldwide production value of Boeing's 767.

You see, according to Mr. Fraser, Boeing made the agreement to help clinch sales to Japanese airlines and the Japanese Government negotiated arrangements for three companies to participate with Boeing.

Japan Air Lines is listed by Dr. Johnson as being Tokushu Kaisha—which is a special company created to further develop or protect national interests.

Japan Air Lines is 45 percent government owned.

The GAO estimates that between 1978 and 1990 the Government will have sent through the boiler and into the aircraft industry about $1 billion in research and development.

Projects receiving money include a new generation of commerical aircraft, possible a 150-seat transport, and a new engine, possibly to power it.

None of this is as effective as completely closing your domestic market while you perfect your product, but it is very close in intent and probable result.

And it does drag in technology.

Japan right now does not have the know-how to design and build large commercial aircraft or the knowledge to establish a world-class industry.

So, as a spokesman for the Japanese Aerospace Trade Group told the journal: "There is no way but international cooperation."

You do not have to be subject to MITIVISIONS or enjoy SEN "[senrigan no otoko]"—which is the power to see the future—to know a few things, including these:

First, Boeing will have government-sponsored competition other than the Airbus before too long; and.

Second, it will sell for less than a comparable Boeing airplane—in fact, profit might not matter—and potential buyers will be offered government-backed financing that Boeing cannot match; and,

Third, Boeing probably will not be invited to participate in any of the worldwide production of it if U.S. airlines buy it; and,

Last, some theorists will naively attribute the decline of Boeing to the genius of Japanese management and their workers' stronger grasp of the work ethic.

No clairvoyance is not necessary to know these things.

All that is necessary is experience and memory of Sony and Whirlpool and the baseball bat and Lukens and countless others.

In the trade war, someone always is "machi bu seh"—which is waiting in ambush.

Computers also fell into MITI'S Vision and under GAO scrutiny.

There is intense United States-Japan competition to stay competitive in the current market and to move ahead in what is to come in the future: Very large integrated circuits, high speed operations, optical scanning and artificial intelligence.

In the middle of this intense and high-stakes competition we have last month's attempted theft of IBM's newest computer designs and technology by agents of two Japanese companies that shelled out almost $650,000 for the information.

The companies are Hitachi Ltd.—I mentioned them earlier—and Mitsubishi.

Both companies and some employees—totaling more than a dozen in the home offices in Japan—have been indicted in this instance of Sixth Column activity.

Let us take a closer look at Hitachi because the allegation is that Hitachi executives were in the pot for about $622,000.

First, consider that MITI's goal for 1990 is 30 percent of the world computer market and 18 percent of the U.S. market, according to the December 14 issue of Business Week.

Business Week also noted that:

> The Japanese are willing to buy market share to boot the giant (IBM) out . . . vendors offer deep discounts to central banks and government agencies to get them to replace their IBM computers while Japanese plug compatible machines.
>
> Hitachi acknowledges it will discount 50 percent to 60 percent below IBM's price to win a contract.
>
> Japanese computer makers try, when possible, to avoid competing internationally.
>
> Increasingly exports are required because the Japanese market is miniscule compared to the U.S.

IBM spokesmen are reluctant to discuss the significance of what has happened.

After all, criminal charges are pending trial and, furthermore, IBM's second largest foreign operation is sited in Japan. I suspect IBM does not want unnecessary disturbance in either area.

Nevertheless, independent observers and news stories relating to the episode give some indication of what was at stake.

The December 14 Business Week noted that IBM would deliver a shock to the Japanese if they changed the basic operating system on which everything else depends.

If that happened, Japanese-made computer equipment that has been compatible no longer would be. Sales would disappear.

In terms of war, IBM would have flanked the competition and would have cleared the field for a while.

And such changes were involved.

At least the following significance can be attached to the attempted theft episode:

In terms of sales lost to the Japanese if flanked, at least $350 million over the time required to catch up by independent research or even the simplified research of reverse engineering and copying; and,

Success of the attempted theft would have freed millions of dollars in research and development money for application to future developments; and,

Success would have advanced what they call computer architecture, again savings on R. & D.

"It would not have represented a leap-frogging," said John Shea of the Technology Analysis Group, a California consulting firm, "but it would have been a 150 percent improvement."

Mr. Speaker, I do not mean by these remarks to suggest or even hint that this instance of sixth column activity is a conspiracy going into the higher reaches of the Government of Japan.

I do believe this is the case.

But I do not assert that success would have kept on track and on schedule the assaults through Hitachi-like price cutting necessary to build toward the MITI goals for United States and world market share.

It might even have accelerated them a bit.

And it certainly would have cut off a successful flanking move by IBM.

This episode has the look of an act of trade war;

Or at least the look of an instance of "naguri komi"—which is cut-throat competition by raiding a competitor's place of business with the intent of striking him over the head with your fist.

I have just a few closing words on computers, Mr. Speaker.

The GAO report indicated 1982 subsidies for computer-related R. & D. in the amount of $44 million in Japan.

It noted that Nippon Telephone & Telegraph plans in certain areas are closely parallel to MITI's goals and that NTT has its own $350 million R. & D. budget.

Government-owned, NTT has a well-known preference for doing business with Japanese firms, an unofficial barrier in which outsiders have made only slight penetration. Incidentally, Hitachi is a member of the NTT family of suppliers and shares technology.

However, the Sixth Column does appear connected with the Japanese Government in one instance that is more truly competitive than combative.

As Dr. Johnson explained in a speech earlier this year:

> The main problem is a different kind of capitalism in Japan and other newly industrialized countries. . .
>
> The U.S. Government maintains an international political intelligence service, the CIA.
> The Japanese Government maintains an international commercial intelligence service, JETRO.

JETRO, the Japan External Trade Organization, maintains offices in 49 countries, including five in the United States, and is concerned mainly with markets and, more recently, potential U.S. exporters to Japan.

That Business Week issue of last December looked at JETRO and other information gathering efforts, and here are excerpts from its findings:

> The Japanese have people gathering data and sending the data back to a central clearing operation run by MITI and JETRO.
>
> The Japanese have a much better intelligence gathering operation than JETRO. It's a company called Mitsubishi and Mitsui and . . . (the trading companies). . .
>
> After contact with a foreigner, all Japanese go through debriefing sessions. The information they've gathered is put down and analyzed.
>
> Interesting data are then published and circulated freely among companies, often grouped with digests of related articles in U.S. technical magazines or reports in technical conferences.
> They have made a science of it.

For example, the article reported that Mr. Shea of California estimates that up to 40 percent of the baseline data used to reach their current level of computer activity came from energetic and skillful research.

And of the development of the upcoming very large scale integrated circuit, he said this: "Information from the West very definitely will support the program on a very large scale."

Mr. Speaker, as I began these remarks I said I would show intent and targets.

The targets are clear, I think, and I will get to intent in a minute.

It would be naive of me to say American businessmen do not copy competitors or acquire technology through licensing arrangements.

I know our companies engage in some kind of Sixth Column activities, or rough tactics, in the case of some multinationals.

But by and large, they do not do it with the complicity of the government and special companies established to protect or further interests, as in airliner purchases.

They do not have the Nation's Capital mobilized for either attack or defense.

And concerted action by U.S. companies probably would draw the scowl of the Justice Department.

There is resentment in Japan over the IBM case even within the Government, and there is doubt the accused executives will be extradited for trial.

If they were U.S. businessmen making such payments in Japan, I am told they probably would be liable for prosecution under the U.S. bribery statutes.

And if by chance some American businessman should get caught following the Japanese practice of giving expensive gifts to professional associates in connection with a computer deal somewhere, they just might have to answer under the Corrupt Practices Act.

Boeing just paid a $450,000 fine that was related to unreported payments to middlemen in the sale of aircraft overseas. That fine was levied by our Government.

Dr. Johnson thinks we can meet the challenge by modifying the adversarial aspects of our society, and Mr. Shea's thoughts run in part along similar lines.

But I do not think we can match the power of what some call state capitalism.

You see, state capitalism combines the strengths of capitalism and socialism.

And even if we changed our behavior and our laws, we still would have: Country versus company competition; and, cut-throat competition and trade war tactics like cutting prices by 60 percent to establish market share because rewards will come later; and, competition not really pressed to gather profit because it has comfortable and mobilized capitalization; and, subsidies and government encouraged cartels.

Moreover, we still would have a trading partner that seems determined to take home what is the major part of the feast that theoretically is world trade, leaving mere scraps for the others at the table.

As Paul McCracken, the Chairman of former-President Nixon's Council of Economic Advisers, wrote recently:

> . . . A re-examination of the (world trade) system is in order.
>
> An imbalance has developed between the magnitude of U.S. responsibility for the international economic and political order and our share of the industrial world's economic activity . . .
> Domestic policies and programs must reflect the demise of an order in which the U.S. carried the responsibilities and the costs while others gave individual attention to nestling within the system and getting rich.

The relationship that Mr. McCracken described would in Japanese be termed "isoro teki kankei"—which is the relationship involving a man who sponges off another.

And here is the intent: To forge the theory of comparative advantage into the weapon of advantage any way you can get it;

And to use that weapon to win not a secure and comfortable niche in the world economy, but to cut away a big slice of the whole thing.

In short, what's theirs is theirs, in their vision;

And what is ours is theirs.

I do not think we can model our culture on theirs, and I do not know that it would be desirable—not because there is anything wrong with theirs, but because we are different.

My Desktop Book of National Proverbs tells me the Japanese have a saying for this type of situation.

In Japan they say:

The stupid man leaves the door an inch open;
The lazy man, three inches;
And the fool, wide open.

I do not think they will open their door.

And it is even more foolish to worry about what could be lost in a trade war that might start if we protest while daily the spoils of that feared trade war mount up in the counting houses and postal savings system of Japan;

While daily our unemployment lines grow longer;

And while daily MITI's Vision grows brighter.

Mr. Speaker, judgment is difficult because so much is at stake in the world, and experience is a treacherous road map.

But this Congress—and before MITI's Vision of the future becomes clearer—must recognize there is an assault and this Government must make plans for dealing with it.

And to go on pretending that this is all due to some natural economic force or some flaw in our character is to commit Seppuku—a form of suicide imposed on those who dishonored themselves—we must all—think about it.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAYDOS. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURTHA), a very active member of the Executive Committee and one who was with the Steel Caucus from its very inception.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the chairman again for having this special order on this subject.

I would like to take a moment to commend the U.S. Department of Commerce for rejecting a European Economic Community proposal for the settlement of the countervailing duty cases. We must keep as our minimum demand that any settlement negotiated with the EEC must be to the benefit of the domestic steel industry, and the EEC's latest proposal of a 10-percent reduction clearly was not.

The Steel Caucus was instrumental in inserting this domestic benefit clause in section 704 of the 1979 trade law, and I am encouraged that our negotiators have held firm to this demand to date.

Steel imports have been at record high levels—22.8 percent of the U.S. market during the first quarter of this year—contributing to 116,000 layoffs and 28,000 short-work weeks for our steelworkers.

The Commerce Department has ruled that these European governments had unfairly subsidized 3.9 million tons of steel imported in 1981 and must pay a countervailing duty equal to the subsidy. Since that decision was announced in early June, the affected governments have accused the United States of launching an economic war that could damage their already sagging economies. They are threatening to rebel against the U.S. efforts to block their participation in the building of the $10 billion Siberian gas pipeline project with the Soviet Union.

Any steelworker who hears these complaints knows that an economic war is already going on—waged against them by the foreign subsidized steel producers who are dumping their product in the United States. Our steelworkers and steel producers can compete with anyone on a fair basis. Instead, they are being flooded with unfairly subsidized imports from countries seeking to relieve their economic ills by exporting unemployment to the United States.

This unfair competitive advantage has wreaked havoc on the domestic industry and is finally being redressed by the Department of Commerce and the International Trade Commission. Our U.S. negotiators should not back off our hard line approach, but should use the strong European reaction to search for a more adequate solution that would insure free and fair markets and prevent any further increased tension with our allies.

□ 1850

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague.

Again I wish to emphasize for the record that the gentleman's yeoman services and his continued interest in the Steel Caucus has served us well, and he is one of the stabilizing factors in making the Steel Caucus what it is, a hard-hitting group of 140 Congressmen dedicated to helping straighten out the import problem relating to steel in this country.

□ 1930

Mr. Speaker, I want to close by again emphasizing that the Steel Caucus, which I have serve as chairman for the last 2 or 3 years, its staff and members of the executive committee, the Members generally in the House, will be notified and we will take out a special order on the subject matter which I have discussed. I want to emphasize that although some members of the Steel Caucus did participate informally by submitting prepared statements in this presentation, it was not—and I will repeat and emphasize—it was not an action by the Steel Caucus done formally or informally by Executive order. I say this as the record is clear that when the Steel Caucus does take a formal position, does pass a formal resolution, under those circumstances notice will be sent to each and every Member of the House of Representatives, to our colleagues; press releases will be made and sufficient time reserved so that all may participate completely and, hopefully, effectively.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to close by commenting again that our colleagues who have not joined the Steel Caucus, who are not paid-up members, should, because the Steel Caucus will continue to explore in detail, formally and informally and as a matter of record, the subject matter which is the subject of my special order today.

If I have not already done so, I again ask that all items, formal and informal statements submitted by my colleagues, members of the Steel Caucus, be made part of the formal record at this point:

● Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, last week members of the Steel Caucus Executive Committee were most disturbed by press reports that the administration might settle its dispute over steel imports with the Europeans through bilateral agreements which would not protect the interests of the American steel industry.

According to the reports, much pressure was being exerted by the European Economic Community (EEC) to reach a settlement that would prove unfavorable to our domestic producers.

Consequently, the executive committee met in an emergency meeting on Thursday morning, July 21, 1982, and agreed unanimously to inform Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige of opposition to the European offer.

That same night, Secretary Baldrige rejected the European offer to limit steel exports to 90 percent of the 1981 levels. I would like to submit here, for the RECORD, the official press release of the Commerce Department on this decision:

The U.S. Department of Commerce could not accept a last-minute proposal by the European Communities (EC) to suspend 12 steel countervailing duty (CVD) investigations involving Belgium, France, Italy and the United Kingdom because the legal requirement of removing the apparent injurious effects caused to the U.S. industry by subsidized steel imports was not met.

The proposals were formally presented to Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige at 5:30 p.m. Thursday by the ambassadors of the four countries, accompanied by representatives of the EC. The contents of the proposals had been received that morning. The EC requested that the Commerce Department suspend the investigation on the basis of quantitative restraint agreements, as permitted in U.S. law. Under that provision, the deadline for reaching an agreement is midnight July 24.

In announcing his decision, Baldrige said, "We welcome any attempt by the Community to settle the unfair steel trade cases between the U.S. and the EC, but unfortunately these proposals are not legally acceptable. U.S. law requires that any quantitative restraint suspension agreement must eliminate the injurious effect of subsidized exports of the subject merchandise to the United States. Since the steel imports from the EC that caused the injury increased almost 30 percent from 1980 to 1981, the 10 percent reduction offered today from the higher 1981 levels was simply not sufficient to remove injury as required."

Baldrige stated that if acceptable suspension agreements could have been concluded on these products, the steel trade tension between the EC and the U.S. would still not have been eliminated. He noted that 19 antidumping (AD) cases on the same products and 13 other AD and CVD cases are still pending. Baldrige felt that an overall settlement leading to withdrawal of all cases was the best way to relieve the current trade tension and repeated his willingness to continue discussions with the EC to find an equitable basis to deal with the problem in its entirety, as well as the proposed suspension agreements.

The EC required that the U.S. accept all of the 12 proposed agreements or none. In its decision the DOC compared the EC's suggested restraint level to the levels at which the U.S. International Trade Commission made preliminary determinations of injury in 1980 and 1982. Most of the proposed restraint levels were above the levels found to be injurious by the ITC. DOC also considered the current state of the U.S. industry, now running at less than 45 percent utilization, and the level of subsidies found in the June 10 preliminary determinations, which in one case amounts to 40 percent.

Subsequent to that decision the Secretary made a counterproposal to the EEC that provided about a 20-percent cut in steel imports. Unfortunately, the Europeans turned that proposal down.

In the meantime, in accordance to the relevant trade laws, future negotiations on these cases will require the Commerce Department to seek the approval of the domestic steel industry before reaching a settlement.

Now I have been advised that the Secretary will pursue additional discussions along these lines this week in Brussels. It would seem to be in the interests of the European Community to participate in these negotiations. Otherwise they will risk final determinations and penalties.

I urge the Secretary to do everything in his power to settle these cases as soon as possible in order to get our steelworkers back on the job.●

● Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, the war being waged against the American steel industry by foreign steel producers has taken yet another twist.

News reports indicate that several of the European governments which have been accused of subsidizing their steel mills and permitting them to dump their steel in this country at prices far below production costs have been applying equally unfair pressure on this Government to let them plea bargain their way out of the trade suits filed against them.

These news reports indicate that the Europeans have used the Russian gas pipeline deal and other diplomatic issues in an attempt to exert a form of international blackmail against our Government.

They want to force a negotiated settlement, without the consent of the injured American steelmakers which brought the complaints. If they are successful our domestic steel firms would suffer even further losses of jobs, sales and would have to have longer delays in their efforts to modernize their plants.

Further, the European nations, pressuring for favorable settlements, want a guarantee that there will be no future filings against them of additional antidumping cases or countervailing duty. That would provide them with free reign to systematically destroy our domestic steel production capabilities.

Already, basic steel employment in America stands at a depressing 49-year low. If current trends continue, our steel producers can expect to lose $2 billion during this decade and another 100,000 American steelworkers will be without jobs.

As a member of the Executive Committee of the Steel Caucus, I want to express in the strongest terms possible my sincere belief that our Government must not turn its back on our own steelmakers who have lived within the law. The cases they have filed are a test of the law and I believe Americans want to see that law enforced.

The world is watching this important trade issue and our future international trade could be affected greatly by the outcome. If the law is not enforced in this area we are sacrificing one of our most important industries.

America has been a good trading partner for the world. We have produced rich harvests, excellent machinery, high technology and rich natural resources which we have shared fairly and openly with the world. We deserve, and we should demand, that our continued fairness be respected and that our trade law be obeyed.●

● Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to reinforce our concerns about our ailing domestic steel industry, whose health is vital to our national economic well-being. Today, America's steel industry faces serious, sustained decline, largely due to unfair and illegal trade practices of some of our European and Japanese trading partners.

The preliminary finding by the Commerce Department that nine nations have been illegally subsidizing steel imports to the United States illustrates the seriousness of the problem. Moreover, our fears have been substantiated recently when the U.S. unit of Mitsui & Co. of Japan pleaded guilty to 21 counts of conspiring to defraud the U.S. Government by attempting to circumvent the trigger price mechanism.

The weakened condition of our domestic steel industry is ominously apparent from current statistics. Not since the hard times of the depression have our steel plants operated at such a low rate. In 1938, our plants operated at 39.8 percent capacity. Today they are operating in the 42.5 percent range.

Because of a low production rate, our steel companies continue to suffer losses. In the last week, National Steel Corp., Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp., Armco Inc., Kaiser Steel Corp., and Inland Steel Corp. all reported second-quarter losses totaling more than $140 million.

A further result of these abysmal operating rates are the high number of unemployed steelworkers. As of July 17, 117,573 steelworkers were unemployed. Buffalo and Lackawanna, N.Y., are particularly hard hit. Republic Steel's plant in Buffalo is on indefinite shutdown with approximately 2,500 employees laid off, and Bethlehem has a work force at Lackawanna reduced to the 4,000 level with 4,000-plus workers on layoff.

What is happening to our steel industry is more than merely the result of competitive foreign marketing.

Though many of us tend to view the Japanese as technical wizards, technological superiority is not the reason that in 1950 imports took only 2.3 persent of the U.S. market, while during the last 5 months of 1981 the percentage shot up to 26 percent. Nor, are these appalling figures due to a lack of effort on the part of either U.S. steel management of labor.

By unfairly subsidizing their steel mills, our trading partners have violated our trade laws and international agreements. While American steel is prohibited from entering foreign markets because of highly protective trade barriers, foreign steel continues to flood the American market in the name of fair trade.

We cannot let this continue unchallenged. Our expressions of protest have worked to no avail; a more forceful measure should be considered.

H.R. 6505 is that measure. Import quotas, covering the entire range of steel products, are our only weapons in combating the steady stream of unfair imports.

Testifying before the House Public Works Subcommittee on Economic Development in 1981, the Reverend William T. Hogan, S.J., professor of economics and director of the Industrial Economic Research Institute at Fordham University urged the establishment of import quotas to assist the U.S. steel industry. He said:

I repeat we don't need 20 million tons of (imported) steel, and we don't need steel coming in at prices that are very much below the list price, so that it fractures the price structure in the American industry * * * I personally feel there is no alternative to quotas if we are going to be successful.

A multiyear program of quotas could provide the safeguards and the breathing room needed to enable our domestic industry to retrench and modernize. As long as foreign firms continue to underprice domestic firms, our operating capacity will remain under 50 percent. Consequently, profits and capital investment necessary for modernization are impossible to achieve.

I hope the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade will convene hearings this summer on the steel industry's problems and need for relief.

As a minimum, such a forum would highlight our concerns about the plight of the industry and I hope also intensify ongoing negotiations with the Common Market nations to achieve a meaningful and effective steel export restraint agreement.

Such a hearing also would underscore our serious concerns that our Nation needs relief from predatory steel imports before more companies, jobs, and communities suffer.●

ACCOKEEK/WALLACE GENETIC FOUNDATION CONFERENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Accokeek/Wallace Genetic Foundation for a recent conference they sponsored concerning agriculture in the Eastern States. Those of us who represent the Eastern region of the United States recognize that although the goal of regional selfsufficiency in agricultural production may be unattainable, a greater measure of independence is both desirable and feasible. At this point in the RECORD I include the following:

A BRIEF REVIEW OF THE ACCOKEEK/WALLACE GENETIC FOUNDATION CONFERENCE ON AGRICULTURE IN THE EASTERN STATES

A distinguished group of Federal, state, local, industrial and foundation specialists met in early June and agreed that despite the overwhelmingly urban and industrial character of the Eastern states region, its agriculture was worth saving. It is more than "an exercise in nostalgia". The group warned, however, that this task would require closer specification of the rural-urban, agriculture-industry mix. This should help insure an often mutually destructive relationship and could realize its mutually strengthening potential.

Farming, to be preserved, must be profitable and meet conservation, environmental and other conditions. Much has to be done, especially at the local and state level, where land use regulation is governmentally lodged, before identifying just what lands should be preserved.

Most Eastern states now have farmland preservation programs already in place. These have demonstrated their effectiveness. Programs are typically designed to purchase development rights from farmers, removing them from competition with urbanization. Too little attention has yet been paid to the specific agricultural uses of such lands which largely determine their profitability.

The vitality of agriculture in the Eastern states region responds fundamentally to the proximity to large and diverse markets, especially rewarding to growers of vegetables and fruits, but also to dairying and other products. Improving marketing was recognized as taking many forms. The public market movement, like New York City's "green markets", or Baltimore's neighborhood markets, is rapidly growing. Thousands of "pick-it-yourself" farms are marketing vegetables, strawberries and other fruits in the field. Roadside stands are probably the most familiar form of direct marketing. All of these allow farmers to sell what they grow at city prices or even at a premium.

The goal of regional self-sufficiency was viewed by the Accokeek Conference as unattainable as well as undesirable in any absolute sense, but a greater measure of independence on foodstuffs imported from other regions was seen as both feasible and desirable. Interruptions to the flow of food to the Eastern states in the past have aroused anxieties that were reflected in conference discussions. The energy costs of transporting food over long distances and of maintaining refrigeration in trucks and warehouses were also cited.

The growth of small farms has been notable in the Eastern states region, many of them family farms, operated by part-time farmers, and involving members of the family with other jobs. This development has contributed to reversing the long decline in the number of farms in the region. Organic farming has also grown in popularity among small farmers who are attracted by its contribution to sustainable and even regenerative agriculture, and by the opportunity to reduce the use of costly fertilizers, and to substitute integrated pest management techniques for environmentally damaging pesticides. The management of small farms was also identified as a critical and highly specialized dimension. Even woodlots, as small as 20 acres, were described as able to support a family.

The desirable mix of small farms and larger conventional farms is paralleled by the opportunities farm families have found in urban and industrial jobs, often seasonal in nature. In the Eastern states region, as well as nationwide, many conventional farms have grown larger—perhaps too large in some cases, as they have encountered today's problems of inflation and high interest rates. In many instances large-scale farming is based on leases or contractual arrangements rather than consolidated ownership. This trend has received further support from tax policies and payments under Federal assistance programs, but here as nationwide the more propulsive forces have been technological and market in nature. The two forms of agriculture—large-scale and small—both struggle with the increasing cost of farmland that reflects development as well as agricultural values.

No regional farm policy can ignore the larger national framework, but it must be recognized that some of the most important legal powers are those related to land use that are explicitly reserved to the states and localities in the American Federal form of government. As planning is invoked to reconcile conflicts and create the balance between large and small farms, rural and urban areas, agricultural and industrial elements, each locality must recognize the large state and regional framework, and look to Federal research and analysis to help identify a better understanding of its own situation. New forms of local planning can also be encouraged and supported by Federal assistance. A large apparatus of Federal land grant colleges and regional experiment stations needs to respond strongly to these new demands. These parts of the agriculture community have also let themselves become too divorced from the realities of farming. Programs that reach to the individual farmer, like agricultural extension and soil conservation, need to re-establish this vital direct relationship. Assistance in farm management is probably the major need.

In the Eastern states many interests other than agriculture have a stake in the countryside. Added to forestry, fishing, wildlife, and other nature-based activities, are recreation, tourism, second homes and retirement communities. Other forms of development are attracted by natural characteristics and wish to live harmoniously with them. State development programs like that in Massachusetts, attract incoming industries by this mixture of economic and environmental advantages. Many states have changed the names of their departments from "agriculture" to "rural development" to embrace this larger constituency. Much remains to be done, however, before this larger array of interests has found its political voice.

The Accokeek Conference, recognizing its continuity with earlier regional meetings, called for continuing conference programs as well as similar meetings in other regions. It stressed the essential mixture of farm and rural-nonfarm interests. It identified the opportunities and initiatives that foundations, educational institutions and public organizations could see in new countryside movements. And it emphasized that while government was not likely to pioneer this new territory, it could be expected to follow those who do.●

STATEMENT ON TUITION TAX CREDIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WEBER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WEBER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of tuition tax credits for elementary and secondary education in order to give some help to parents who choose to have their children educated in private schools. At the same time that they pay private school tuition, these parents have to share the burden of paying for public schools through their tax dollars. This double burden has denied, as a practical matter, the power to choose private education for many American families. The tuition tax credit will help to restore this power of choice for American families.

As a Congressman and also as a parent of three children I recognize the education of children as being one of my greatest concerns. All of us have different ideas about how children should be educated and what they should be taught. The United States has benefited tremendously by a very decentralized individualistic system in which many different ideas about education can be tried. We have a dual system of public education and private schools. It is very important for us to preserve the opportunity for every child to receive a good education in our public schools and also preserve the ability of American parents to exercise their freedom of choice to send their children to private schools as many parents do choose to do.

Parents who choose private schools must pay the constantly increasing cost that these schools have to charge in order to survive. On the other hand these same parents support public education through their taxes and without private schools the burden on public education and therefore the tax burden on all taxpayers would be much higher.

For many years there has been a trend toward increasing governmental support of private education at both the State and Federal level. For quite some time the State of Ohio has provided substantial amounts—next year amounting to about $375 per pupil—in transportation and auxiliary services to private schools. The Federal Government provides title I compensatory education funding for disadvantaged students to both public and private schools. At the college level various forms of construction loans have been available to private colleges and of course student loans guaranteed by the Federal Government are offered to students for both private and public colleges and universities.

The question of tuition tax credits has been considered by Congress going back as long ago as 1967 when the Senate passed such a bill. In 1978 a tuition tax credit passed both House and Senate in different forms, but could not be agreed upon for final passage.

On June 24 of this year, with bipartisan support, a tuition tax credit bill was introduced in the Congress to carry into effect the administration's proposals for tuition tax credits.

Because education is such an important question I have taken a great deal of time to listen to and get input from teachers, school administrators, parents, and also students about the question of tuition tax credits and I have also visited many private and public schools.

I give my full support to tuition tax credits for elementary and secondary education. Under this proposal parents would receive a tax credit for each child in the amount of 50 percent of the tuition paid, up to a maximum credit of $100 in 1983, $300 in 1984, and $500 in 1985. Only families with incomes under $50,000 would be eligible for the full credit. A lesser credit would be available up to $75,000 of family income and no credit if family income was above $75,000. Only schools that are nonprofit and do not discriminate on the basis of race or national origin would qualify.

I believe the tuition tax credit is going to be good for both private and public education. Public education will benefit by holding onto the support of parents who carry the double burden of private tuition and the school levies that pay for public education. Many private schools are on the brink of closing due to financial problems; if this happens the public burden is simply increased.

This tuition tax credit is going to be of greatest benefit to working families having incomes under $25,000 who also make up 60 percent of children enrolled in private schools. For many of these working families the tuition tax credit will make the difference between being able to choose a private school if they so desire or not having that choice. The tuition tax credit is one of the ways that I can demonstrate my concern for families and maximum educational opportunity.

During my first year in Congress if there is one thing that impresses me as I go about visiting with people in the Ninth Congressional District, it is the great diversity that we have. That diversity is one of our great strengths. Nonpublic schools should be recognized for the indispensable role which they play in that diversity. Americans should have the opportunity to choose between public and nonpublic education. Increasing numbers of families are unable to afford school tuition in addition to State and local taxes for public schools. The tuition tax credit that I support is a step in the direction of making that choice available to the working families of America.

CHARLES CONKLIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, Charles Conklin, staff director of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee since 1974, will retire from Government service on July 31. It was with understanding and some envy that I accepted his decision. I am sorry to see him leave.

In 1951, Charles Conklin did something that was rare for his generation. Fresh out of Harvard University law school, he turned his back on more lucrative opportunities to open his own law practice in little Delta, Colo. I recall that because it has always told me something special about Charles Conklin. I think it speaks of a real and a genuine affection for the folks of his native Colorado, a respect for his roots, a real love of the land. He could easily have gone to Wall Street. He went instead to Main Street.

As Charles worked to build his law practice, he became deeply involved in public service, and the people in the Delta area sent him to the Colorado House of Representatives for 8 years. For 4 of those years, he was chosen by his colleagues to serve as speaker.

In Colorado, Charles became friends with former Congressman Wayne Aspinall, a former Interior Committee chairman, and in 1967, Wayne invited Charles to move to Washington as assistant director of the Public Land Law Review Commission.

It is important to remember that even in the 1960's, that decade of so much turbulence and change, the ideas expressed through the Land Law Review Commission represented a real departure from the way the United States, up until then, had viewed its natural resources. What the Commission was charged with doing was to come up with a comprehensive plan that took a whole new look at the way the United States managed its land and its resources.

As it turned out, Charles Conklin wound up in the vauguard of a movement that was really before its time. It was a movement that said that man is a creature of limits—limits ultimately imposed by nature and by a finite planet. The Public Land Law Review Commission was a beginning of a school of thought that today has found almost routine acceptance.

Shortly after the Commission completed its work, Charles joined the staff of the Interior Committee as special counsel on public lands and environmental matters. Here, he began the work of translating certain of the PLLRC recommendations into law. Three years later, he was named the committee's staff director.

Charles Conklin was staff director of the committee during a time when the Congress underwent some very significant reforms, and at a time when the committee itself was involved in a number of landmark pieces of legislation. There was a diffusion of authority from committee chairmen to subcommittee chairmen and in this sometime difficult and chaotic atmosphere, Charles Conklin guided the committee's administration with a calm hand a sense of order.

Charles Conklin is blessed with traits shared by too few administrators. He is at once kind and gentle, but has a knack for detail and thoroughness.

Charles Conklin is a good and a decent man who is my friend. I know I speak for all the members of the committee when I wish he and his wife, Jorie, all the best of what they seek in the years ahead.●

CHICAGO TRIBUNE CALLS REAGAN CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT A GIMMICK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the Chicago Tribune has long been indentified as a "Republican newspaper." It gave a strong endorsement to President Reagan in his election against then-President Jimmy Carter.

Therefore, I think it is of great interest that the Tribune has lashed out in the strongest possible terms against President Reagan's proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. In a July 21 editorial entitled "Stop Me Before I Spend Again, the Tribune said:

President Reagan ought to be ashamed of himself for proposing to rewrite the Constitution to divert attention from the failures of his economic policies. He likes to call himself a conservative, but his deficits and his willingness to tamper with the basic structure of our constitutional system have made him look downright reckless.

Mr. Speaker, those are not the words of a liberal Democrat, nor can they be characterized as partisan name calling designed to heighten election year interests. No, those are the words of a great newspaper which has strong Republican and conservative leanings.

The economic mess faced by this country is the sole property and possession of President Reagan and the Republican Party. It was invented and copyrighted by the Republicans. It was written, edited, produced, directed, and acted out by the Republicans. And now when it is time to hand out the awards for record depression, the Republican administration is trying to divert attention by switching scripts. It will not work, and even President Reagan's backers are beginning to see through the charade.

I am submitting a copy of the Chicago Tribune editorial because I think it quite correctly outlines the charade that is being acted out at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

STOP ME BEFORE I SPEND AGAIN!

It was quite a spectacle, President Reagan up on the Capitol steps rousing the loyal multitudes with his call for a constitutional amendment to force future presidents and congresses to do what this President and Congress quite dramatically have failed to do: balance the federal budget.

The President was at his rhetorical finest when he said that "no more than a thin wall of wavering willpower stands between us and ruin by red ink." But when you realized that his latest budget contemplates the biggest deficit in history, the rhetoric became a bad joke.

Some willpower. The Reagan tax cuts have given us a deficit and interest rates that have sent the economy reeling into the gutter. And the President has the temerity to lecture us on temperance.

The balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is a bad idea for any number of reasons. If it were enforceable, it would bring courts into the politics of revenue and spending, which is about the last area of government that hasn't been taken over by the judges. If it were not enforceable, it would diminish the fundamental document upon which it had been grafted, sitting there like a useless appendix, a mockery of the law.

But the amendment proposal is not a serious idea at all. It is a gimmick, just a gimmick. It is President Reagan's way of pretending that the miserable economy is not his fault, that the record deficit budget is not his budget. It is a political trick designed to give him and Republican candidates something to say during the mid-term congressional elections when anyone has the audacity to complain that Reaganomics has created a mess.

President Reagan ought to be ashamed of himself for proposing to rewrite the Constitution to divert attention from the failures of his economic policies. He likes to call himself a conservative, but his deficits and his willingness to tamper with the basic structure of our constitutional system have made him look downright reckless. You would think that he would realize how transparent his gimmick is, how easily the voters will be able to see through it, how likely they are to put the blame where it belongs. But that wasn't a blush that came over his face on the Capitol steps. It was just the heat. And summer has hardly begun.●

THE EXPORT TRADING COMPANY ACT AND THE BANK EXPORT SERVICES ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the genleman from Florida (Mr. NELSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the two acts that we are considering today to establish an Export Trade Administration in the Department of Commerce for the purpose of helping companies to form export trading companies. These trading companies would be able to compete more effectively with their foreign competitors in many, many fields.

Today, the American companies are finding that to meet foreign competition is a little like selling a house—the ability to offer financing can be as important as tempting the buyer with a low price. We currently have no mechanism available for low-cost financing for the average American company as many of our foreign competitors have.

This legislation—which I have cosponsored—will also enable small and medium sized companies—particularly the high tech companies—to band together into a export trading company to exchange information and to access low-cost financing without fear of antitrust action, which would allow them to broadly expand their markets worldwide.

The United States has traditionally spent less than its trading partners in providing low-cost loans or loan guarantees. In 1980, the United States assisted only 8.2 percent of U.S. exports. Japan assisted 43 percent of its exports.

We cannot afford to hide our heads in the sand to avoid this issue. We are faced with a high level of joblessness and a declining balance of trade. These bills—The Export Trading Company Act and the Bank Export Services Act—would go a long way in increasing our world competitiveness, increase the jobs available, and expand our markets. I commend the committees for their timely action on these important pieces of legislation.●

URBAN ENTERPRISE ZONE PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, as we deliberate on the Reagan administration's enterprise zone proposal I think it is very important that we carefully analyze both the problems of economic and social decline in distressed communities and the substance of this proposal. In the interest of guiding this debate away from the simplistic and flawed rhetoric of this antiurban administration, I request permission to reprint the following analysis. This critical review of enterprise zones, written by Ms. Martha Peyton and Mr. Albert E. DePrince, Jr., of the economics department of the Marine Midland Bank of New York City, first appeared in the June 1982 report from the bank's economic department, and is reprinted with proper authorization.

I strongly urge my colleagues to review the objective analysis in this article which concludes that "the urban enterprise zone program appears to be only a paper knife wielded against a very real tiger." The article follows:

URBAN ENTERPRISE ZONES: A CRITICAL REVIEW

The seemingly endless media debate on the Federal budget and the re-definition of the Federal role in the provision of services has created the impression that the Reagan Administration is perhaps more concerned with dismantling government programs than with developing new ones. The Administration's urban enterprise zone proposal is, in contrast to this perception, an attempt at formulating a new policy approach to the continuing dilemma of inner city redevelopment. As such, it is one of the very few new program initiatives to be undertaken by this Administration. Moreover, the program is intriguing in that it has been designed to stimulate depressed central city labor markets by methods that complement the Administration's free market philosophy.

In light of these considerations, the urban enterprise zone proposal warrants careful review and evaluation. On balance, our evaluation of the proposal points to only limited prospects for success. The tax incentives which comprise the benefit of zone designation seem too weak to offset the high costs of doing business in blighted areas.

OVERVIEW OF THE PROPOSAL

As it is currently formulated, the Administration's urban enterprise zone program calls for an array of tax incentives to encourage the development of businesses and jobs in designated urban areas. Specifically, the Department of Housing and Urban Development would designate up to twenty-five depressed areas per year as "enterprise zones" based primarily upon the local unemployment and poverty rates. The designation, once obtained, is valid for periods of up to twenty years. The creation of new jobs within these zones is to be encouraged by a variety of special tax incentives, including:

A 3 percent or 5 percent investment tax credit for capital investments in personal property and a 10 percent credit for construction or rehabilitation of structures in the zone,

A 10 percent tax credit to employers for wages paid to qualified zone employees, and a special 50 percent credit for wages paid to disadvantaged employees,

A 5 percent tax credit for qualified zone employees on wages earned in the zone,

Elimination of the capital gains tax for qualified property within the zone,

Foreign trade zone designation for suitable enterprise zones, and Extension of the operating loss carry-over period.

In sum, these provisions are designed to eliminate at least 75 percent of the Federal income tax burden in these areas, according to the White House analysis. Indeed, most of the $310 million annual Federal cost of the program is foregone tax revenue, rather than outright Federal expenditures. An additional provision of the proposal allows for these zones to apply for relief from Federal regulations, except those which are imposed by explicit Federal statute, or those which protect against discrimination or insure public safety. In order to encourage similar concessions from state and local governments, zone designation will be based, at least partially, on the magnitude of state and local tax incentives, regulatory relief, and improvements in public services. Localities will, in essence, be asked to compete for designations.

As a whole, the urban enterprise zone concept is intended to encourage economic redevelopment in designated areas by decreasing the cost of doing business within these areas. Moreover, the policy's method of cutting costs is in keeping with the free market philosophy of the Reagan Administration. In this regard, the policy involves no overt government intervention to bring about the desired goal; rather, it involves minimizing regulatory intervention and reducing the tax burden. These incentives, it is hoped, will create sufficient economic advantages within the zones to attract business and create jobs. In evaluating the potential benefits from the program, therefore, it is necessary to ask if these incentives are sufficient to compensate for the well-documented disincentives to business growth in inner city areas.

DISINCENTIVES TO BUSINESS IN BLIGHTED URBAN AREAS

The urban enterprise zone proposal is intended to achieve two goals: the revitalization of zone economies, and the creation of jobs for zone residents. In order to evaluate the proposal's potential for success in these endeavors, it is necessary first to review the conditions that have contributed to the existing paucity of investment and jobs in these areas.

The locational choices of firms are usually based upon a careful evaluation of the costs of production at various locations. The costs of labor, capital, land, transportation, insurance, energy, and taxes are weighed according to their importance in the overall cost structure of the firm. For instance, labor-intensive textile manufacturing will seek a location where labor is readily available at a minimum cost whereas energy-intensive smelting firms are more interested in the cost of fuel and raw materials.

The urban areas eligible for enterprise zone designation are essentially high cost locations. The diseconomies may include high land costs, difficulties in assembling large land tracts, high energy and insurance costs, transportation difficulties, prevalence of crime, difficulty in attracting skilled labor, and poor public services. These problems obviously discourage investment. Beyond these factors, more recent economic research suggests that in may cases, location costs are not the primary consideration but are superceded by "quality of life" consideration. Enterprise zone areas, however, fall short on "quality" characteristics also. Housing, recreation, education, and cultural attractions in these locations are hardly alluring to entrepreneurs.

PROSPECTS FOR SUCCESS OF ENTERPRISE ZONES

On balance, urban enterprise zones will succeed in generating investment and jobs only to the degree that the high location costs and low quality characteristics of these areas are counter-weighed by the program's incentives. The effectiveness of the policy in offsetting these negative locational factors is highly questionable, however, since the program operates primarily through tax reduction. Several factors must be considered in this regard.

First, employment research has demonstrated that job creation is most closely dependent upon the birth of small firms. In a recent MIT study, 60% of all jobs in the U.S. were shown to be generated by firms with 20 or fewer employees. Firms with over 500 employees generate less than 15% of net new jobs. Small firms usually are organized as sole proprietorships. According to Internal Revenue Service data (see Table 5), there were 9.3 million non-farm sole proprietorships in 1979 with $395.7 billion in reported receipts. Less than three-quarters of these firms, 6.8 million, had net income remaining after Federal deductions. Furthermore, net income totaled $67.1 billion, or approximately $9,960 per firm. For 1979, a proprietor with $10,000 in net income would have had a $1,062 Federal tax liability (if married and filing a joint return). It is doubtful that even the total elimination of this liability could compensate for the added costs of doing business in the areas in question.

Despite the association between job creation and the birth of new firms, some analysts expect that enterprise zones will rather become tax havens for branch plants of established firms. Moreover, since the legislation does not prohibit the transfer of tax savings, they further expect that a market for these tax shelters will develop. Although both of these possibilities hold promise, they must be compared with less arduous means of obtaining tax savings such as safe-harbor leasing.

Second, enterprise zone designation will be influenced by the willingness of states and localities to grant concessions. With regard to other than Federal income taxes, non-farm sole proprietorships deducted $7.5 billion in taxes paid in 1979, approximately $800 per firm. Again, a less than startling sum. These taxes include all state and local income, property, excise, and licensing taxes. The degree of tax relief and service enhancement forthcoming from states and localities will be heavily influenced by the fiscal vitality of these jurisdictions. The frail fiscal health of many central cities and all the states in general (see "The U.S. Economic Situation," April 20, 1982) make significant concessions unlikely. The areas most in need of enterprise zone activities can afford these concessions the least.

TABLE 5.—SOLE PROPRIETORSHIP BUSINESSES: RECEIPTS AND SELECTED DEDUCTIONS—1979

	Total businesses	Businesses with net income
Number of nonfarm businesses (millions)	9.34	6.74
Business receipts (dollars in billions)	$395.67	$342.75
Depreciation	12.93	8.87
Taxes paid deduction	7.48	5.96
Interest paid	6.39	3.92
Payroll	38.28	32.24
Net income (less deficit)	56.53	67.08

In sum, the tax incentives provided by the program seem to be weak relative to the diseconomies of enterprise zone location. However, they may be attractive enough to encourage an unintended rearrangement of business within urban areas. Firms with a proven ability to operate profitably in inner city areas may find it marginally worthwhile to relocate to enterprise zone locations. These relocations generate little new investment and few new jobs. Moreover, the end result may simply be a relocation of blight from the enterprise zone to a similar area without zone designation.

Finally, the urban enterprise zone proposal has severely limited prospects for success in the present high interest rate environment. The entrepreneurial spirit which the program hopes to invoke is difficult to muster at current borrowing rates. Moreover, we envision a reluctance on the part of lenders to finance new enterprises in risky locations. While we applaud the Administration's attempt at non-interventionist stimulation of investment and jobs in these problem areas, the urban enterprise zone program appears to be only a paper knife wielded against a very real tiger.●

HON. WILLIAM NICHOLS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, RECEIVES L. MENDEL RIVERS AWARD

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, on July 3, 1982, in San Antonio, the Non Commissioned Officers Association of the USA (NCOA) presented its coveted L. Mendel Rivers Award for Legislative Action to the Honorable BILL NICHOLS of Alabama. Mr. NICHOLS is the 11th recipient of this award and the 6th member of the House Armed Services Committee to be so recognized for outstanding service to the military community.

I am pleased that Mr. NICHOLS was chosen by NCOA to receive this prestigious award. One of my most devoted Armed Services Subcommittee chairmen, BILL NICHOLS is well aware of the need for a viable defense manpower pool. His affinity with the members of the U.S. Armed Forces goes back some 40 years when he, himself, was a combat soldier. Wounded in action and hospitalized for months before retiring with a service-connected combat disability, he knows what it is to sacrifice and serve.

Though BILL NICHOLS laid aside his World War II uniform for the civilian garb of a Congressman, he has continued to serve his country as a leader, an adviser, and a true soldier. His capacity for work, his compassion for the troops, and his love of country rank up there with the best of patriots.

The NCOA, recognizing his support for the men and women in uniform who serve our Nation in war and peace, named him an honorary member some years ago, but believed that proper acknowledgment for his services could be recognized best through its L. Mendel Rivers award, which came this year with the following introduction by NCOA's Executive Director for Government Affairs, C. A. "Mack" McKinney:

We recognize this evening a true patriot, a member of Congress who has not forgotten the sacrifices and services he rendered as a member of the United States Army. His devotion to duty while in uniform earned him recognition from a grateful nation.

* * * * *

He has been a friend, a comrade and, most of all, a Representative who knows what it is to serve in combat and to bear the sacrifice of giving all but his life to the cause for freedom.

He is a soldier in every true sense of the word. He continues to serve our great Nation as a member of Congress. He continues to fight for the beliefs he knows are uppermost in the minds of his comrades-in-arms.

He seeks the best for our well-being. He has fought to see that the quality-of-life for our servicemembers is not traded for the welfare of those who will not serve this great Nation.

He is our kind. He is our spokesman. He is a true supporter of our men and women in uniform.

Ladies and Gentlemen, it gives me great pleasure to name the Association's 1982 recipient of the "L. Mendel Rivers Award for Legislative Action," the chairman of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation, the Honorable Bill Nichols, Captain, U.S. Army, Retired.

BILL received his award from the NCOA's newly elected president, Fleet Master Chief Franklin Lister of the Navy's Atlantic Fleet. More than 800 delegates and their guests at the NCOA 21st Annual International Convention Banquet offered a standing ovation in honor of their selectee.

As a former recipient of the NCOA award, I congraulate BILL and know that all other past recipients of the award would join me in welcoming him to our exclusive club.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. DENARDIS (at the request of Mr. MICHEL), for today, on account of a death in the family.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2706. An act to amend title 28, United States Code, to modify the bar membership requirements for U.S. magistrates.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 28, 1982, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

4446. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Installations, Logistics and Financial Management), transmitting a notice of the decision to convert to contractor performance the motor vehicle operation and maintenance service activities at Fort Campbell, Ky., pursuant to section 502(b) of Public Law 96-342; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4447. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army (Installations, Logistics and Financial Management), transmitting a notice of the decision to convert to contractor performance the audiovisual services activity at Fort Hood, Tex., pursuant to section 502(b) of Public Law 96-342; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4448. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to simplify and improve the need of analysis procedures for Federal student financial assistance, to improve the operation of the Pell grant program, to eliminate or reduce Pell grant program abuse, and to make certain amendments to title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

4449. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting the eighth annual report of the Department on the status of handicapped children in Head Start programs, pursuant to section 640(d) Public Law 97-35; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

4450. A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting a further report to the Department's initial report of July 15, 1982, that a substantial violation of the use of defense articles furnished to Israel under the foreign military sales program may have occurred, pursuant to section 3(c)(2) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4451. A letter from the Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations, Department of State, transmitting a report on political contributions by Ambassador-designate Theodore G. Kronmiller, and by members of his family, pursuant to section 304(b)(2) of Public Law 96-465; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4452. A letter from the Administrator, Panama Canal Commission, transmitting a report of a new record system, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552a(o); to the Committee on Government Operations.

4453. A letter from the Employee Benefits and Risk Manager, Fourth District Farm Credit Institutions, transmitting the annual report on the financial condition of the retirement plan for employees of the Fourth District Farm Credit Institutions, pursuant to section 121(a)(2) of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, as amended; to the Committee on Government Operations.

4454. A letter from the Director, Federal Prison System, Department of Justice, transmitting the annual report of the Board of Directors of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., pursuant to (18 U.S.C. 4127); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4455. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the annual report, covering January 1, 1981, to December 31, 1981, of the Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, on the status of all marine mammal species and population stocks subject to the provisions of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972, pursuant to section 103(f) of Public Law 92-522; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

4456. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting the third annual report on the activities of the Coast Guard, pursuant to section 5(19) of Public Law 95-474; to the Committee on Merchant Marines and Fisheries.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 2643

By Mr. JONES of Oklahoma:

—At page 136,

(a) in line 5 delete "made"; and

(b) in line 6 delete "under" and insert in lieu thereof "pursuant to section 32 of".

—At page 147, add the following after line 21:

SEC. 31. INELIGIBLE AIRPORTS.

For any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1981, any airport that otherwise would be eligible to receive Federal assistance for airport development or airport planning under this Act may elect not to receive such assistance: Provided, That—

(1) such airport shall not be eligible to receive assistance for airport development or airport planning under this Act for that fiscal year or any subsequent fiscal year, and

(2) any airport that elects not to receive such assistance during a fiscal year notifies the Secretary of such election at least 90 days prior to the commencement of that fiscal year."

SEC. 32. PASSENGER FACILITY CHARGE

(a) AUTHORITY TO IMPOSE.—The operator of a commercial service airport that has elected to become ineligible to receive Federal assistance for airport development or airport planning under the provisions of section 31 of this Act may, at its option and notwithstanding any inconsistent provision in any law or contract, impose a limited passenger facility charge on passengers enplaning at such airport if the operator complies with all of the following requirements:

(1) all revenues generated by such charge shall be obligated or expended only for projects of capital airport development or airport planning (including noise compatibility projects) which (A) would have been, in whole or in part, eligible projects under the provisions of this Act but for the airport's election under section 31 and (B) are intended to meet the reasonable needs of revenue passengers using such airport;

(2) all other revenues generated by the airport while such charge is in effect shall be obligated or expended only for the capital or operating cost of the airport, the local airport system, or other facilities that are operated by the operator of the airport and are directly related to the air transportation of persons or property: Provided, however, That if covenants or assurances in debt obligations previously issued by the operator of the airport, or provisions in governing statutes controlling the operator's financing, provide for the use of the revenues from any of the airport operator's facilities including the airport to support not only the airport but also the airport operator's general debt obligations or other facilities, then this limitation on the use of all other revenues generated by the airport shall not apply; and

(3) capital airport development projects financed in whole or in part by such charge shall be undertaken only after consultation with the air carriers and foreign air carriers serving such airport.

(b) COLLECTION OF CHARGE.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Civil Aeronautics Board shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to establish procedures for the imposition and collection of passenger facility charges under this section. Among other things, such regulations shall provide that—

(1) the charge shall be imposed only on revenue passengers enplaning at such airport on air carriers or foreign air carriers engaging in the carriage of passengers by air for compensation or hire;

(2) the charge at each airport shall be imposed upon all such revenue passengers in a nondiscriminatory manner and with the minimum possible inconvenience to air travelers and to those persons charged with collecting and remitting such charge; and

(3) all air carriers or foreign air carriers shall be required to collect such charge but they shall be reimbursed for all necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in the collection and handling of such charge.

(c) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF CHARGE.—No ineligible airport may impose a passenger facility charge exceeding two per centum of the amount paid by the passenger for taxable transportation as defined in section 4262 of the Internal Revenue Code, plus collection expenses specified in subsection (b) above; and

(d) TRANSFER OF AUTHORITY.—On January 1, 1985, the authority of the Civil Aeronautics Board under this section shall be transferred to the Department of Transportation.

By Mr. PETRI:

—Page 113, line 18, insert after "1958," the following: and each approved motor common carrier of persons,

Page 113, line 23, insert after "carriers" the following: "and all such motor carriers, respectively,".

Page 113, line 24, insert after "subject" the following: ", in the case of such air carriers,".

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "approved motor common carrier" means a motor common carrier which has been authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, a State or local government, or a local public body to provide transportation between an airport and another point; and

(2) the term "motor common carrier" has the same meaning such term has in section 10102(12) of title 49, United States Code, except that such term does not include a motor vehicle providing taxicab service and having a capacity of not more than 6 passengers and not operated on a regular route or between specified places.

By Mr. ROSENTHAL:

Page 41, line 12, strike out "and" and insert in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) striking out '(ii) a request for a hearing is made by a person adversely affected by the notice.' and inserting in lieu thereof '(ii) a request for a hearing is made by any interested person, including any person adversely affected by the Administrator's failure to propose action providing for greater restrictions on the use of the pesticide involved, for a more rapid phasing out of its registration, or for a change in its classification.'; and".

Page 41, line 13, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

Page 42, after line 2, insert the following new subsection:

(b) The first sentence of section 6(e)(2) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act is amended by striking out "a person adversely affected by the notice." and inserting in lieu thereof "any interested person, including any person adversely affected by the Administrator's determination with respect to the disposition of existing stocks.".

H.R. 5320

By Mr. HILLIS:

—Page 142, after line 21, insert the following part (and conform the table of contents accordingly):

PART F—YOUTH CAREER INTERN PROGRAM

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 481. It is the purpose of this part to assist in providing financial assistance to prime sponsors to establish and operate programs conducted by local educational agencies and community-based organizations designed to improve educational and employment opportunities for youths in areas of high unemployment.

DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE YOUTHS

SEC. 482. For the purpose of this part, the term "eligible youth" means a youth aged 16 through 21, inclusive, or if authorized under regulations of the Secretary, aged 14 or 15, who is (1) either unemployed, underemployed, or in school, and (2) the income of his family is at or below the lower living standard income level.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AUTHORIZED

SEC. 483. The Secretary and local educational agencies shall provide equal financial assistance to prime sponsors for programs to be conducted jointly by local educational agencies and community-based organizations to improve educational and employment opportunities for youths in areas of high unemployment and served by the prime sponsor.

APPLICATION

SEC. 484. Each prime sponsor desiring to participate in the program authorized by this part shall submit an application to the Secretary on behalf of local educational agencies and community-based organizations within the area served by the prime sponsor at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(1) describe the program to be conducted jointly by the local educational agency and the community-based organization for the improvement of educational and employment opportunities for youths in areas served by the prime sponsor;

(2) contain assurances that the unemployment rate for youth in the area served by the prime sponsor was equal to or in excess of two times the level of adult unemployment; and

(3) describe the manner in which eligible youth will be selected to participate in the program, the number of youth to be so served, the educational services and other training to be provided under the program, and the placement goals of the program.

By Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota:

—Page 94, following line 3, add an additional subsection which should read:

"(7) No funds allocated under this section shall be provided to any labor organization."

H.R. 6030

By Mr. BEARD:

—At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

OVERSIGHT OF DEFENSE EXPENDITURES

SEC. 902. (a) Concurrent with the submission of the budget to Congress for fiscal year 1984, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report concerning the strength requested in such budget for civilian personnel for the Defense Contract Audit Agency, Defense Audit Service and the Defense Criminal Investigative Service. Such report shall state the number of such personnel at the end of fiscal year 1982, the number at the time the report is submitted, and the number requested in that budget and shall include a justification for the number requested. The report shall also include the opinion of the Secretary of Defense as to whether the number requested is sufficient for those agencies to accomplish their functions with respect to the reduction of waste, fraud, and abuse in defense expenditures during the next fiscal year, particularly in light of any increases (in real terms) in the levels of appropriations requested in that budget for operations, procurement of new equipment, and for research, development, test, and evaluation.

(b) The Secretary shall include in the report under subsection (a) information concerning the savings in defense expenditures achieved by the Defense Contract Audit Agency, Defense Audit Service and Defense Criminal Investigative Service during fiscal year 1982, including a statement for each agency of the amount of such cost savings achieved as a percentage of the number of dollars spent by such agency during such year.

By Mr. HERTEL:

—At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

DESIGNATION OF ESTONIA, LATVIA, AND LITHUANIA ON DEFENSE MAPS

SEC. 902. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization of appropriations in this Act may be used to prepare, produce or purchase any map showing the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that does not—

(1) show the geographic boundaries of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania and designate those areas by those names;

(2) include the designation "Soviet Occupied" in parentheses under each of those names; and

(3) include in close proximity to the area of the Baltic countries the following statement: "The United States Government does not recognize the incorporation of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania into the Soviet Union".

By Mr. NICHOLS:

(To the amendment offered by Mrs. SCHROEDER)

—Strike out everything after section 901 in the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

PAYMENTS OF RETIRED AND RETAINER PAY

SEC. 902. (a) Chapter 71 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1408. Payment of retired or retainer pay in compliance with court orders

"(a) In this section:

"(1) 'Court' means—

"(A) any court of competent jurisdiction of any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

"(B) any court of the United States (as defined in section 451 of title 28) having competent jurisdiction; and

"(C) any court of competent jurisdiction of any foreign country with which the United States has an agreement requiring the United States to honor any court order of such country.

"(2) 'Court order' means a court's final decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such a decree (including a final decree modifying the terms of a previously issued decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such previously issued decree), which—

"(A) is issued in accordance with the laws of the jurisdiction of that court;

"(B) provides for—

"(i) payment of child support (as defined in section 462(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 662 (B)));

"(ii) payment of alimony (as defined in section 462(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 662(c))); or

"(iii) division of property (including a division of community property); and

"(C) specifically provides for the payment of an amount, expressed in dollars or as a percentage of disposable retired or retainer pay, from the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member to the spouse or former spouse of that member.

For purposes of this definition, 'final decree' means a decree from which no appeal may be taken or from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed for taking such appeals under the laws applicable to such appeals, or a decree from which timely appeal has been taken and such appeal has been finally decided under the laws applicable to such appeals.

"(3) 'disposable retired or retainer pay' means the total monthly retired or retainer pay to which a member is entitled under the provisions of this title (other than chapter 61 of this title), title 14, section 3(a) of the Act of August 10, 1956 (70A Stat. 619; 33 U.S.C. 857a(a)), or section 221(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 213a(a)) less amounts which—

"(A) are owed by such member to the United States;

"(B) are required by law to be, and are deducted from the retired or retainer pay of such member, including fines and forfeitures ordered by courts-martial, Federal employment taxes, and amounts waived in order to receive compensation under title 5 or title 38;

"(C) are properly withheld for Federal, State, or local income tax purposes, if the withholding of such amounts is authorized or required by law and to the extent such amounts withheld are not greater than would be authorized if such member claimed all dependents to which he was entitled;

"(D) are withheld under section 3402(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 3402(i)) if such member presents evidence of a tax obligation which supports such withholding;

"(E) are deducted as Government life insurance premiums (not including amounts deducted for supplemental coverage); or

"(F) are deducted because of an election under chapter 73 of this title to provide an annuity to a spouse or former spouse to whom payment of a portion of such member's retired or retainer pay is being made pursuant to a court order under this section.

"(4) 'Member' means a person who is or was appointed or enlisted in, or conscripted into, any of the uniformed services, and includes a former member.

"(5) 'Secretary concerned' has the meaning given that term by section 101(5) of title 37.

"(6) 'Spouse or former spouse' means the husband or wife, or former husband or wife, respectively, of a member who, on or before the date of a court order, was married to that member.

"(7) 'Uniformed services' has the meaning given to that term by section 101(3) of title 37.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) service of a court order is effective if—

"(A) an appropriate agent of the Secretary concerned designated for receipt of service of court orders under regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h) or, if no agent has been so designated, the Secretary concerned, is personally served or is served by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested;

"(B) the court order is regular on its face;

"(C) the court order or other documents served with the court order identify the member concerned and include the social security number of such member; and

"(D) the court order or other documents served with the court order certify that the rights of the member under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 were observed; and

"(2) a court order is regular on its face when the order—

"(A) is from a court of competent jurisdiction;

"(B) is legal in form; and

"(C) includes nothing on its face that provides reasonable notice that it is issued without authority of law.

"(C)(1) Subject to the limitations of this section, a court may treat disposable retired or retainer pay payable to a member for pay periods beginning on or after June 26, 1981, either as property solely of the member or as property of the member and his spouse in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction of such court if the spouse was married to the member for a period of not less than 10 years during which the member performed at least 10 years of service which is creditable in determining the member's eligibility for retired or retainer pay, or equivalent pay, as a result of his service in any of the uniformed services.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section does not create any right title, or interest which can be sold, assigned, transferred, or otherwise disposed of (including by inheritance) by a spouse or former spouse.

"(3) This section does not authorize any court to order a member to apply for retirement or retire from the uniformed services at a particular time in order to effectuate any payment under this section.

"(4) A court may not treat the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member in the manner described in paragraph (1) unless the court has jurisdiction over the member by reason of (A) his residence, other than because of military assignment, in the territorial jurisdiction of the court, (B) his domicile in the territorial jurisdiction of the court, or (C) his consent to the jurisdiction of the court or unless the marriage was performed in the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

"(D)(1) Not later than 90 days after the effective service of a court order with respect to a member who is entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, or, in the case of a member who, on the date of the effective service of a court order with respect to such member, is not entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, not later than 90 days after such member first becomes entitled to receive retired or retainer pay, the Secretary concerned shall, subject to the limitations of this section, pay to the spouse or former spouse of the member the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay specifically provided for in the court order.

"(2) Payments under this section shall not be made more frequently than once each month, and the Secretary concerned shall not be required to vary normal pay and disbursement cycles for retired or retainer pay in order to comply with any court order.

"(3) Payments from the disposable retired or retainer pay of any member pursuant to this section shall terminate in accordance with the terms of the applicable court order, but not later than the date of the death of the member or the date of the death of the spouse or former spouse to whom payments are being made, whichever occurs first, and in the case of a former spouse, shall terminate with respect to alimony or a division of property (including a division of community property) upon the remarriage of the former spouse before the age of 60.

"(4) If a court order described in paragraph (1) provides for a division of property (including a division of community property) in addition to an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay, the Secretary concerned shall, subject to the limitations of this section, pay to the spouse or former spouse of the member, from the disposable retired or retainer pay of the member, any part of the amount payable to the spouse or former spouse under the division of property upon effective service of a final court order of garnishment of such amount from such retired or retainer pay.

"(e)(1) The total amount of the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member payable under subsection (d) shall not exceed 50 percent of such disposable retired or retainer pay.

"(2) In the event of effective service of more than one court order which provide for payment to a spouse and one or more former spouses or to more than one former spouse from the disposable retired or retainer pay of one member, such pay shall be used to satisfy, subject to the limitations of paragraph (1), such court orders on a first-come, first-served basis. Such court orders shall be satisfied (subject to the limitations of paragraph (1)) out of that amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains after the satisfaction of all court orders which have been previously served.

"(3)(A) In the event of effective service of conflicting court orders under this section which assert to direct that different amounts be paid during a month to the same spouse of former spouse from the disposable retired or retainer pay of the same member, the Secretary concerned shall—

"(i) pay to that spouse the least amount of disposable retired or retainer pay directed to be paid during that month by any such conflicting court order, but not more than the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains available for payment of such court orders based on when such court orders were effectively served and the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4);

"(ii) retain an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay that is equal to the lesser of—

"(I) the difference between the largest amount of retired or retainer pay required by any conflicting court order to be paid to the spouse or former spouse and the amount payable to the spouse or former spouse under clause (i); and

"(II) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which remains available for payment of any conflicting court order based on when such court order was effectively served and the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4); and

"(iii) pay to that member the amount which is equal to the amount of that member's disposable retired or retainer pay (less any amounts paid during such month pursuant to legal process served under section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659) and any amounts paid during such month pursuant to court orders effectively served under this section, other than such conflicting court orders) minus—

"(I) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay paid under clause (i); and

"(II) the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay retained under clause (ii).

"(B) The Secretary concerned shall hold the amount retained under clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) until such time as that Secretary is provided with a court order which has been certified by the member and the spouse or former spouse to be valid and applicable to the retained amount. Upon being provided with such an order the Secretary shall pay the retained amount in accordance with the order.

"(4)(A) In the event of effective service of a court order under this section and the service of legal process pursuant to section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659), both of which provide for payments during a month from the retired or retainer pay of the same member, such court orders and legal process shall be satisfied on a first-come, first-served basis. Such court orders and legal process shall be satisfied out of moneys which are subject to such orders and legal process and which remain available in accordance with the limitations of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of this paragraph during such month after the satisfaction of all court orders or legal process which have been previously served.

"(B) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the total amount of the disposable retired or retainer pay of a member payable by the Secretary concerned under all court orders pursuant to this section and all legal processes pursuant to section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659) with respect to any member may not exceed 65 percent of the disposable retired or retainer pay payable to such member.

"(5) A court order which itself or because of previously served court orders provides for the payment of an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which exceeds the amount of such pay available for payment because of the limit set forth in paragraph (1), or which, because of previously served court orders or legal process previously served under section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659), provides for payment of an amount of disposable retired or retainer pay which exceeds that amount available for payment in accordance with the limits of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (b) of paragraph (4), shall not be deemed to be irregular on its face solely for that reason. However, such order shall be deemed to be fully satisfied for purposes of this section by the payment to the spouse or former spouse of the amount of disposable retired or retainer pay available for such payment in accordance with the limits of paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4).

"(f)(1) The United States and any officer or employee thereof shall not be liable with respect to any payment made from retired or retainer pay to any member, spouse, or former spouse pursuant to a court order that is regular on its face if such payment is made in accordance with this section and the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h).

"(2) No officer or employee of the United States who, under regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (h), has the duty to respond to interrogatories shall be subject under any law to any disciplinary action or civil or criminal liability or penalty for, or because of, any disclosure of information made by him in carrying out any of his duties which directly or indirectly pertain to answering such interrogatories.

"(g) Any person receiving effective service of any court order under this section shall, as soon as possible, but not later than 30 days after the date on which effective service is made, send a written notice of such court order (together with a copy thereof) to the member affected by such court order at his last known address.

"(h) The Secretaries concerned shall prescribe uniform regulations to administer this section within the uniformed services.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1408. Payment of retired or retainer pay in compliance with court orders.".

SURVIVOR ANNUITIES

SEC. 903. (a) Section 1447 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) 'Former spouse' means the surviving former husband or wife of a person who is eligible to participate in the Plan.

"(7) 'Court' has the meaning given that term by section 1408(a)(1) of this title.

"(8) 'Court order' means a court's final decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement incident to such a decree (including a final decree modifying the terms of a previously issued decree of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, or of a court ordered, ratified, or approved property settlement agreement incident to such previously issued decree).

"(9) 'Final decree' means a decree from which no appeal may be taken or from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed for the taking of such appeals under the laws applicable to such appeals, or a decree from which timely appeal has been taken and such appeal has been finally decided under the laws applicable to such appeals.

"(10) 'Regular on its face' has the meaning given to that term by section 1408(b)(2) of this title.".

(b)(1) Section 1448(a) of such title is amended—

(A) in paragraph (3)(A) by inserting "or elects to provide an annuity under subsection (b)(2) of this section," after "for his spouse,"; and

(B) in paragraph (3)(B) by inserting "or elects to provide an annuity under subsection (b)(2) of this section," after "for his spouse,".

(2) Section 1448(b) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) A person who is not married and does not have a dependent child when he becomes eligible to participate in the Plan may elect to provide an annuity to a natural person with an insurable interest in that person or to provide an annuity to a former spouse.

"(2) A person who is married or has a dependent child may elect to provide an annuity to a former spouse instead of providing an annuity to a spouse or dependent child if the election is made in order to carry out the terms of a voluntary written agreement entered into with a former spouse (without regard to whether such agreement is included in or approved by a court order).

"(3) In the case of a person electing to provide an annuity under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection by virtue of eligibility under subsection (a)(1)(B), the election shall include a designation under subsection (e).

"(4) Any person who elects under paragraph (1) or (2) to provide an annuity to a former spouse shall, at the time of making such election, provide the Secretary concerned with a written statement, in a form to be prescribed by that Secretary, signed by such person and the former spouse setting forth whether such election is being made pursuant to a voluntary written agreement previously entered into by such person as a part of or incident to a proceeding of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, and if so, whether such voluntary written agreement has been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order.".

(c) Section 1450(a)(4) of such title is amended—

(1) by inserting "former spouse or other" before "natural person"; and

(2) by striking out "if there is no eligible beneficiary under clause (1) or clause (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "unless the election to provide an annuity to the former spouse or other natural person has been changed as provided in subsection (f)".

(d) Section 1450(f) of such title is amended to read as follows:

(f)(1) A person who elects to provide an annuity to a person designated by him under section 1448(b) of this title may, subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, change that election and provide an annuity to his spouse or dependent child. The Secretary of Defense shall notify the former spouse or other natural person previously designated under section 1448(b) of this title of any change of election under the first sentence of this paragraph. Any such change of election is subject to the same rules with respect to execution, revocation, and effectiveness set forth in section 1448(a)(5) of this title.

"(2) Any person who, incident to a proceeding of divorce, dissolution, annulment, or legal separation, enters into a voluntary written agreement to elect under section 1448(b) of this title to provide an annuity to a former spouse and who makes an election pursuant to such agreement may not change such election under paragraph (1) unless—

"(A) in any case in which such agreement has been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order, the person—

"(i) furnishes to the Secretary concerned a certified copy of a court order which is regular on its face and modifies the provisions of all previous court orders relating to the agreement to make such election so as to permit the person to change the election; and

"(ii) certifies to the Secretary concerned that the court order is valid and in effect; or

"(B) in any case in which such agreement has not been incorporated in or ratified or approved by a court order, the person—

"(i) furnishes to the Secretary concerned a statement, in such form as the Secretary concerned may prescribe, signed by the former spouse and evidencing the former spouse's agreement to a change in the selection under paragraph (1); and

"(ii) certifies to the Secretary concerned that the statement is current and in effect.

"(3) Nothing in this chapter authorizes any court to order any person to elect under section 1448(b) of this title to provide an annuity to a former spouse unless such person has voluntarily agreed in writing to make such election.".

MEDICAL BENEFITS

SEC. 904. (a) Section 1072(2) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) the unremarried former spouse of a member or former member if, on the date of the final decree of divorce, dissolution, or annulment, that former spouse had been married to the member or former member for a period of at least 20 years during which period the member or former member performed at least 20 years of service which is creditable in determining that member's or former member's eligibility for retired or retainer pay, or equivalent pay, as a result of his service in any of the uniformed services and if that former spouse does not have medical coverage under an employer-sponsored health plan.".

(b) Section 1076(b) of such title is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "A dependent described in section 1072(2)(F) of this title may be given medical and dental care pursuant to clause (2) without regard to subclause (B) of such clause.".

(c) Section 1086(c) of such title is amended by inserting after clause (2) the following new clause:

"(3) A dependent covered by section 1072(2)(F) of this title.".

COMMISSARY AND EXCHANGE PRIVILEGES

SEC. 905. The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to provide that any unremarried former spouse described in subparagraph (F) of section 1072(2) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 904), is entitled to commissary and post exchange privileges to the same extent and on the same basis as the surviving spouse of a retired member of the uniformed services.

EFFECTIVE DATE AND TRANSITION

SEC. 906. (a) The amendments made by this title shall take effect on the first day of the first month which begins more than 120 days after the date of enactment.

(b) Subsection (d) of section 1408 of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 902(a), shall apply only with respect to payments of retired or retainer pay for periods beginning on or after the effective date of such amendments, but without regard to the date of any court order. However, in the case of a court order that became final before June 26, 1981, payments under such subsection may only be made in accordance with such order as in effect on such date and without regard to any subsequent modifications.

(c) The amendments made by section 903 of this title shall apply to persons who become eligible to participate in the Survivor Benefit Plan before, on, or after the effective date of such amendments.

(d) The amendments made by section 904 of this title and the provisions of section 905 of this title shall apply in the case of any former spouse of a member or former member of the uniformed services only if the final decree of divorce, dissolution, or annulment of the marriage of the former spouse and such member or former member is dated on or after the effective date of such amendments.

(e) For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "court order" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(a)(2) of title 10, United States Code (as added by section 902 of this title);

(2) the term "former spouse" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(a)(6) of such title (as added by section 902 of this title); and

(3) the term "uniformed services" has the same meaning as provided in section 1408(a)(7) of such title (as added by section 902 of this title).

By Mr. GRAMM:

—Page 4, strike out lines 22 and all that follows down through line 5 on page 6 and substitute: The Administrator shall, not later than three years after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, complete a study and submit a report to the Congress concerning whether the provisions of regulations promulgated under this Act respecting hazardous waste generated by small generators in quantities of 1,000 kilograms or less per calendar month should be modified with respect to any class or category of hazardous waste.

"(2) The study required under this section shall include—

"(A) a profile of the generators, hazardous wastes, and waste management practices subject to such provisions;

"(B) an assessment of the hazards associated with such wastes and practices; and

"(C) an analysis of the regulatory alternatives to the exemption of such wastes from the standards under this subtitle, including an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of such alternatives.

"(3) At intervals of not more than one year, and not more than two years, after the date of the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Reauthorization Act of 1982, the Administrator shall submit an interim report to the Congress setting forth detailed statements of the status and of the study required under this subsection."

H.R. 6785

By Mrs. SCHROEDER:

—After section 3, insert the following new section:

SALARY OF FORMER MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES TO BE REDUCED BY AMOUNT OF RETIRED PAY

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Section 5532 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 5532. Employment of retired members of the uniformed services; reduction in pay

"(a) In the case of any member or former member of a uniformed service who is receiving retired or retainer pay and who holds a position, an amount equal to the retired or retainer pay and who holds a position, an amount equal to the retired or retainer pay which is allocable to the period of actual employment shall be deducted from the individual's pay for that position, except for lump-sum leave payment purposes under section 5551 of this title. The amounts so deducted shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, except that no such deposit shall be required of deductions from the pay of individuals employed by the United States Postal Service.

"(b) The reduction in pay required by this section does not apply to a member or former member of a uniformed service receiving retired or retainer pay whose retired or retainer pay is computed, in whole or in part, based on disability—

"(1) resulting from injury or disease received in line of duty as a direct result of armed conflict; or

"(2) caused by an instrumentality of war and incurred in line of duty during a period of war as defined by sections 101 and 301 of title 38.

"(c) The Office of Personnel Management may authorize exceptions to subsection (a) of this section only when necessary to meet special or emergency employment needs which result from a severe shortage of well qualified candidates for positions which otherwise cannot be readily filled. An exception granted by the Office with respect to any individual shall terminate upon a break in service of 3 days or more.

"(d) This section shall not apply to reduce the salary of any person whose compensation may not, under section 1 of article III of the Constitution of the United States, be diminished during such individual's continuance in office. However, in any such case, the provisions of this section as in effect July 1, 1982, and the provisions of section 308(g) of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, shall apply to the same extent and in the same manner as if the amendments made by section 4 of H.R. 6785, Ninety-seventh Congress, had not been enacted.

"(e) The Office of Personnel Management may prescribe regulations necessary for the administration of this section insofar as this section applies to positions in the executive branch.".

(2) Section 8116(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following "(as in effect July 1, 1982)".

(3) The table of sections for chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 5532 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"5532. Employment of retired members of the uniformed services; reduction in pay.".

(b)(1) The Comptroller General shall conduct a review to identify instances in which individuals concurrently receive—

(A) annuities or other retired pay under retirement systems for civilian employees of the Government, or the government of the District of Columbia, or any territory or possession of the United States; and

(B) pay for positions (as defined in section 5531 of title 5, United States Code).

(2) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall complete the review required under paragraph (1) and prepare and submit a report on the results of such review to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate.

(c)(1) The amendments made by this section shall take effect with respect to pay periods beginning on or after October 1, 1982, and shall apply to any member or former member of a uniformed service, whether appointed or elected to a position (as defined in section 5531 of title 5, United States Code) before, on, or after October 1, 1982.

(2) Nothing in this section (or section 410 of title 39, United States Code) shall be construed to exempt the United States Postal Service or its employees or officers from the amendments made by this section.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

OUR RESPONSIBILITIES: CHURCH AND STATE

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Leroy Hodapp, bishop of the United Methodist Church for central and southern Illinois, recently spoke to the Methodist ministers of his jurisdiction, and put into perspective some of the truths with which we deal daily.

Without mentioning the "prayer in public schools" amendment by name, he said this:

Fourth, under no circumstances may the state expect any church or individual constituent to violate their religious conscience to support the state; nor may any church expect the state to support their particular religious beliefs as a matter of public policy. Unfortunately, there are religious groups in our society today who supported the election of the present national administration for the very purpose of violating this principle. Let us hope that as American citizens we understand our roots well enough to resist any such proposals.

Bishop Hodapp speaks both wisdom and commonsense, and I urge my colleagues to read his remarks which I am inserting in the RECORD at this point.

MINISTRY AS A CITIZEN OF THE UNITED STATES

All forms of ministry—as all forms of life itself—exist within a specific context of time and space, and in relationship to other persons and factors.

Recently, I received a letter from Douglas Rettig (a clergy member of the Central Illinois Conference) who is serving on the staff of the Institute of Cultural Affairs in Indonesia. While explaining how his ministry is lived out in a culture where Christians are an extreme minority, and such an alien faith is highly provocative, he described the arrival of a visiting Australian clergyman in their small village. The man was wearing a large cross suspended from a chain around his neck. "He might as well have gotten out of the taxi carrying a fully loaded M-60 automatic rifle," Doug wrote. "It would have aroused no more fear and suspicion than the cross did."

All forms of ministry exist within some specific context of time and space, and in relationship to other persons and factors.

One of the most fascinating movements in Christian ministry today is happening in China. After many years of underground existence—and ten years of extreme persecution from 1966-1976—the church in China has emerged with new vitality and activity. When Nanking Theological Seminary announced its reopening in 1981, over 1000 potential students applied. The seminary has accepted 50 of these (20 of whom are women) as resident students, but also is providing resource materials and training for another 30,000 local church workers and lay persons, most of whom work in house churches all across the country. The church in New China has taken seriously the so-called "three self movement" of 19th century missionary outreach—that—indigenous churches become self-governing, self-supporting and self-propagating. Therefore, Western influence has no place in the current renewal of faith. The form of the church which is being fashioned will be Chinese—and quite possibly different from any previously experienced in the history of our faith.

All forms of ministry exist within a specific context of time and space, and in relationship to other persons and factors.

Our scripture lesson makes it clear that the apostle Paul engaged in ministry as a citizen of the Roman Empire. Such citizenship provided him with security and status under very crucial circumstances. Those of you being ordained this evening will carry out your ministry as citizens of the United States. This, unless you choose to move elsewhere, will be the context of your life. It is a unique setting, defined by a particular time and place. The United States has an understanding of the relationship between church and state unlike any other nation on the earth. We still are debating among ourselves exactly what the relationship implies, and the current issue of voluntary school prayer only will serve to heighten that debate. However, it is not my intention to delve into the intricacies of that discussion tonight.

The basis of our principle of separation of church and state, of course, is the First Amendment to the Constitution: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Some implications of this statement may be found in the Virginia Statute of Religious Liberty, written by Thomas Jefferson and considered by him (together with the Declaration of Independence and the founding of the University of Virginia) as one of his three greatest contributions to our common heritage.

In this Statute, Jefferson wrote, "To compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propogation of opinions which he disbelieves is sinful and tyrannical," and "the prescribing any citizen as unworthy of public confidence by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to offices of trust and emolument, unless he profess or renounce this or that religious opinion, is depriving him injuriously of those privileges and advantages to which in common with his fellow citizens he has a natural right." In brief, our heritage does not permit a religious test for public office. There is a certain citizen of Virginia today who would do well to listen carefully to these words.

As I hear them, together with other basic documents from our national roots, certain clarification of ministry as a citizen of the United States becomes evident.

First, the United States government should not be in the business of promoting religious faith. We are not a Christian nation; any more than we are a Buddhist nation, or a Jewish nation, or a Mormon nation, or an atheistic nation. We are a nation in which persons freely may profess any given religious faith—or no religious faith—and still be as qualified and as acceptable a United States citizen as any other. That freedom has provided a fertile ground in which the Christian faith has grown to become the dominant faith in the nation.

Second, it is the function of our government to protect the right of any religious faith in the United States to worship, to teach, and to evangelize—so long as it does not illegally violate the individual and corporate rights of others in the process. As the dominant faith, it becomes the responsibility of Christians to insist upon the rights of minority faiths. Within our national understanding, the exercise and propagation of faith is a function of the individual, the family and the church—not the state. The state's role is to protect these rights, which is an extremely vital function—absent in most areas of our world today.

Third, inherent in this religious freedom is the right and the responsibility of the church and the individual Christian to interact with the state. The so-called "wall of separation of church and state" does not imply that these two entities ignore one another, or live in isolation from one another. The state has a right to demand legal responsibility by the church; and the church has a right to demand moral and ethical responsibility by the state. Their organic separation provides for this mutual accountability; so that neither individually nor jointly can then oppress or harass members or citizens.

Fifth, what the church can and must expect of our government is that its policies and practices live up to the highest moral and ethical ideals expressed in our national tradition and our official national documents. As these traditions and documents were framed, Thomas Jefferson referred to them in his First Inaugural Address as "the world's best hope." Rarely in national documents does one come upon words like: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

The traditional and historic ideals of the United States surpass any moral and ethical ideals found anywhere else among the world's nations.

The Declaration of Independence then proceeds to state that, if a government does not maintain and protect these rights, its people have a "right and duty" to alter or abolish it. If it is a foreign government which oppresses them, they have the right to self-determination; if it is their own government, they possess the right to revolution.

Increasingly, oppressed and disinherited peoples everywhere agree with Jefferson that United States independence documents express "the world's best hope." Therefore, they are determined to alter or replace unjust governments, and cannot understand why we do not support such efforts, given our own historical context. For millions of such people, Emma Lazarus' words on the Statue of Liberty have offered not only hope, but a new beginning—"Give me your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free." But not all victims of oppression can emigrate to the United States. Their plight must be resolved in their own lands.

Especially since World War II, the image of the United States toward these poor and dispossessed people has undergone a significant transformation. Economic exploitation of already poor nations, immigration quotas established for political purposes, foreign aid programs which enrich United States business interests rather than serve poor and hungry people, regular military and para-military intervention in the affairs of other nations, the threat of military might as the solution to international disagreements, economic and military support for governments which oppress their own people, increasing indifference to the poor in our own nation—all of these types of behaviour have challenged positive perceptions of the United States around the world. Some may ask, "Who cares what others think of us?" We do live in one world, and if it is to be a peaceful world, we must care about others and their feelings.

A recent issue of U.S. News and World Report contained the results of a world-wide survey conducted by their overseas bureaus on attitudes toward the United States. To the surprise of the editors, the survey revealed a great reservoir of good will toward the United States, especially when compared to the Soviet Union, which has lost respect everywhere due to human rights abuses and military adventurism in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

From Western Europe came data showing that people preferred the U.S. to Russia as an ally by 56 to 1. One poll in Italy revealed that Italians favored the United States even to their own government. But Western Europeans demonstrated great fear of nuclear irresponsibility by the United States, and also were bothered by our high domestic crime rate, especially in light of our reluctance to enact any gun control legislation. They see us as a nation too easily prone toward violence as an easy solution to complicated problems.

In Asia there was true appreciation for our refugee and disaster concerns, and for our willingness to share technology with developing nations. The Japanese considered us the most trustworthy nation in the world. But reports from all across Asia spoke of newspaper editorials which consistently spoke of "the studied neglect of the poor" both in our domestic and in our foreign policy.

African people appreciate the fact the colonialism on their continent did not involve the United States; but they fear current support for the apartheid regime in South Africa, while at the same time we attempt to destabilize some of the newly independent black African states. Our clearly stated ideals appear to work in reverse when it comes to African policy.

In our own Western Hemisphere, Latin American people are far more apt to blame their own corrupt governments for their poverty and lack of human rights than they are to blame traditional "Yankee imperialism," but they fear our support of unjust ruling elites and our continued threat to intervene militarily when things do not go as we desire.

In summary, our dislike around the world almost invariably is created by our failure to maintain our own ethical ideals. Just as consistently, this moral failure occurs because we structure our foreign policy primarily upon a narrowly perceived anticommunism, and short-term U.S. economic interests. Human rights and concern for the poor too often run a distant second to these two concerns.

A broader and longer-range perspective, however, would reverse these priorities. Living up to our traditional ideals of concern for human rights and the needs of the poor not only would reveal the obvious inadequacies of the communist system, but also would be in our own enlightened economic self-interest as the quality of life, including economic purchasing power, would rise everywhere in the world market.

As President of the General Board of Church and Society, I receive questions rather regularly about the church being critical of our government and its policies. My answer is that, as one committed to Biblical faith, I must criticize ethical and moral failure everywhere, but especially within the systems and structures of which I am a part. If I truly believe in the United States, then I must believe it is good enough to become what its own ideals profess. The Kingdom of God stands in judgment of all human systems. Therefore, I must be constructively critical of my own nation, just as I am of my own church and any other institution of which I am a part. To do so not only is a clear response to the gospel, but it also is the highest form of patriotism. I do not strengthen or love my country by blindly praising her faults. I love her best by demanding that she always maintain her commitment to justice, freedom, peace and those human rights so clearly defined in the Declaration of Independence.

That it seems to me, is the essence of ministry as a citizen of the United States. It is "the world's best hope." It may be the world's only hope. It is the key to survival for my children, and my children's children, and the children of the world.

Biblically, such a commitment to shalom is the essence of my mission and my ministry. It is the word of the prophets, and it is the mind of Christ. Therefore, it is the key to salvation, in this world and the next. All forms of ministry exist within a specific context of time and space, and in relationship to other persons and factors. Thanks be to God who calls us to ministry today as citizens of the United States.●

WHERE THERE'S SMOKE—THERE'S MYRON

HON. CLAIR W. BURGENER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Speaker, this week, the Federal Government's "Red Adair" of firefighting, Myron K. Lee, will retire from his post as Cleveland National Forest's Fire Management Officer.

In a firefighting career which began in 1944 with the California Department of Forestry, Myron Lee has reached the highest pinnacle of his profession in one of the most dangerous occupations in the Federal Government.

While Myron spent the majority of his career serving the Cleveland National Forest, he was also assigned to the Lassen and Mendocino National Forests, both as a Fire Control Officer and Job Corps Center Director.

In 1976, the Chief of the U.S. Forest Service honored Myron for his outstanding leadership in the field of fire management, and he was recently recognized for pioneering the cooperative programs involving Mexican and U.S. Wildland firefighters.

In 1982, Myron Lee received the Federal Employees Distinguished Service Award from the San Diego Federal Executive Association in tribute to his outstanding work.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who know the rage and brutality of Southern California's frequent summer fires recognize it takes an extraordinarily devoted person to face such danger, and Myron Lee has been just that.

Myron Lee will be dearly missed by his many friends and colleagues in the Forest Service and by those of us who so deeply appreciate his work.●

THE PLIGHT OF THE FARMER

HON. LARRY WINN, JR.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening, June 16, 1982, I attended a farm meeting sponsored by the Miami County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Paola, Kans.

Prior to hearing from Frank Naylor, Under Secretary for Small Business and Rural Development and Merritt Sprague, Manager, Federal Crop Insurance Program, who were attending the meeting as my invited guests, Sue Hiatt, acting county extension director of the Miami County ASCS office presented the following opening remarks:

REMARKS OF SUE HIATT

The economic conditions of Miami County have caused a very disastrous situation for Miami County farmers and businessmen. Many farmers cannot "hang on" for another year. Excessive rains, low grain prices, increased production cost and high interest rates have caused an economic hardship to Miami County.

A big impact on our economy in 1979, was the grain embargo and low grain prices.

In 1980, Miami County was hit with a severe drought with low wheat yields and 98 percent of the corn crop disaster affected. In many cases the corn had to be cut for silage and some was not fit for silage. Such of the milo and soybeans were affected also. Hay and pastures were affected to the point that the Emergency Feed Program was implemented.

Last year, 1981, was very similar to this year, except not quite as extreme. Hail, wind and heavy rains began in May and continued thru June 30. A freeze, May 11, along with excessive rains caused hundred of acres of wheat to go unharvested and thousand of acres to have poor wheat yields.

Replanting of corn and milo caused additional expense to the farmers. Low yields on corn, milo and soybeans was experienced in the county. Many crops planted after June 30 were not harvested and those that were harvested, yielded poorly.

Last year, we all said, "Next year can't be as bad as this year." But it's worse.

Since May 1, 1982, Miami County has had 20 to 28 inches of rain. High winds, hail, flooding including tornado activity have accompanied the continuous rains. These continuous rains have prevented Miami County farmers to plant milo and soybeans.

The wheat crop has deteriorated because of the rain and wet fields, to the point the ASCS county committee estimates at least 70 percent of it is disaster affected. The test weight is running in the low 50s, close to sample grade.

By the end of the normal planting date, June 30, 1982, only about 5 percent of the milo was planted. This leaves 95 percent of unplanted milo that falls into prevented planting category.

Also, only 5 to 10 percent of the soybeans has been planted by June 30, 1982.

Hay loss is estimated at 50 percent.

Soil loss is staggering.

We understand that Secretary Block has the authority to implement prevented planting payments in areas where economic conditions warrant such action. This along with other assistance is needed desperately to assist the farmers.

I take this opportunity to point out to my colleagues in the House and Senate the problems facing many of our farmers today and urge your consideration of constructive programs which might help the farmer's plight.●

REDUCED PERSONNEL IN REVENUE GENERATING AGENCIES

HON. GERALDINE A. FERRARO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, during the past 2 years I have questioned a number of administration-sponsored or supported actions to indiscriminately reduce Federal employment. Although I have been disturbed by cutbacks in many agencies whose programs are vital to our country, I have been the most perplexed by repeated administration attempts to reduce personnel in revenue generating agencies.

Agencies like the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Customs Service generate more income for the U.S. Treasury than they cost the taxpayers to operate. Yet, in a penny-wise pound-foolish approach to Federal Employment, resources for these and similar agencies have been severely restricted.

A July 26, Washington Post editorial provides insight into the task faced by U.S. revenue agents. I commend it to colleagues who may have missed it.

The editorial follows:

DAVID (IRS) VS. GOLIATH, INC.

The Senate tax bill will not help with one nagging problem of tax enforcement: the mismatch between the IRS and behemoth corporate taxpayers with their unfathomably complex returns. The mismatch may cost billions in lost revenues.

Imagine you are a very senior revenue agent, with a college degree in accounting, many years of experience and specialized training in some particular area of taxpayer chicanery, like depreciation or pension plans. You and 20 or so colleagues are assigned to the IRS's leased office space at the headquarters of a multinational corporation with 82 subsidiaries and $15 billion in assets (as near as they can tell, anyway). All of you will spend the next two years playing with computers and examining selected issues in, say, tax years 1979-81. You are confident of finding tens of millions of dollars in deficiencies. But who trembles? You, the GS-13, or they, the field marshals ahead of batallions of accountants and lawyers?

IRS assigns live-in revenue agents to the extremely large corporations, and we do not doubt that they earn their pay many times over. Using sophisticated teams to audit just 1,500 large corporations, most with assets over $250 million, the IRS found $4.33 billion in deficiencies last year—a bit more than Interior's budget; much more than that of Commerce, State or Justice. And IRS expects to collect about half of these corporate underpayments through agreements, not litigation.

But there is a lot more gold in them thar hills. Yes, we have over 17,000 IRS auditors and agents already. Still, there are apparently billions of dollars sitting around in corporate coffers available for the asking. It takes more resources to be able to ask the questions, because these companies don't know themselves what their "true" tax liabilities are. They have been so successful at lobbying for assorted intricacies in the tax code that filing and auditing their returns have become a multibillion dollar guessing game.

True, no one wants a tax collector's police state; what is wanted (and needed) is voluntary compliance. But the 90 percent compliance rates for large corporate taxpayers, while higher than for individuals, are still worse than the welfare error rates.

In recent years, the IRS has become much more sophisticated and professional. Congress should give them more than slingshots to go after the Goliaths.●

A TRIBUTE TO NATHANIEL GOLE

HON. GREGORY W. CARMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. CARMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor and pleasure to call to the attention of the Congress and the Nation the public service record of Mr. Nathaniel Gole as town attorney for Oyster Bay, N.Y. Nat has recently retired after 21 years of contribution to the town attorney's office where he started as assistant attorney and rose to the position of town attorney.

During his tenure in the town attorney's office, Nat was responsible for acquiring much of the parkland that Long Islanders enjoy today including the Majorie R. Post Community Park in Massapequa and for the town of Oyster Bay park facility and greenhouse complex in Oyster Bay where flowers are grown to decorate the town of Oyster Bay. He also was instrumental in the widening of Jerusalem Avenue in Massapequa and Miller Place in Syosset.

A contributor to his community, Nat has served as president of the Plainview Jewish Center, president of the Plainview Republican Club, and is an active member of the Kiwanis Club. His efforts have bought lasting benefits to the entire community.

Throughout his career, Nathaniel Gole has served the cause of justice in behalf of all town residents with commonsense and wisdom tempered with a generous helping of good humor and concern for others. After a long and fruitful career of public service, I extend my gratitude and best wishes for a happy retirement to Nathaniel and his wife, Fanny Gole.●

H.R. 1799 and H.R. 6016, EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, the House today is taking an important step to aid American business by acting on H.R. 1799 and H.R. 6016, bills to encourage increased export of American goods to other countries. H.R. 1799 would establish a new office in the U.S. Department of Commerce to promote the formation of export trading associations and companies; H.R. 6016 would allow bank holding companies and bankers' banks to invest in export trading companies. Together, these two bills should eliminate several obstacles to exporting and pave the way for many small- and medium-sized businesses to increase their export trade.

EXPORTS LOW

According to the House Export Task Force, only 10 percent of 250,000 American manufacturing firms export today. Less than 1 percent of these firms account for 80 percent of our exports. However, it estimated that up to 20,000 U.S. manufacturers and agricultural producers offer goods and services which would be highly competitive abroad. During the last 20 years, the U.S. share of world exports dropped from 18 percent in 1960 to 15.4 percent in 1970; last year our share fell to 12 percent. Export of goods accounts for 8.2 percent of our GNP, the lowest percentage of any industrialized nation in the world.

89-059 O-86-38 (Pt.13)

AMERICA LAGS

Why do we find ourselves in this position? The House Foreign Affairs Committee found, "Lack of operating capital and financing is the major obstacle to expanded sales faced by American trading companies." Many American businesses, particularly small businesses, simply do not have the resources to export. Many business people lack expertise in conducting foreign sales. Government has been slow to help, too. Our antitrust laws have been vague, and many companies, fearing antitrust action, have been reluctant to form export associations. Many American business people perceive Government regulations as impediments to international trade—Government redtape that is ambiguous, confusing, and usually costly. Former Export-Import Bank Director Donald E. Stingel, put it quite clearly in testimony earlier this year:

Never have I seen more foreign competition than today, or the need for closer cooperation between the U.S. Government and U.S. industry rather than the generally existing adversary relationship which is diametrically opposite to that enjoyed by our foreign competitors.

OTHER COUNTRIES AHEAD

Many other countries are far ahead of us in this area. The Japanese established trading companies over 300 years ago. Numbering several thousand, these companies provide a full range of services, including economic feasibility and marketing studies, transportation and insurance, customs documentation and clearances, warehousing, packaging, distribution, marketing, and after-sales servicing. They maintain a worldwide communications and commerical network. Many European companies have longstanding export companies as well.

MORE JOBS IN UNITED STATES

Enhancing American exports will have several significant advantages. More exports means more economic activity in this country. A 1981 report by Chase Econometrics estimates that export trading companies could increase employment in the United States by 320,000 to 640,000 workers by 1985. This would be welcome news to many, as our Nation's unemployment continues to reach record highs since the Depression. In Pennsylvania, almost 300,000 jobs are now dependent on exports and the Commerce Department has estimated that between 14,000 and 19,600 new jobs could be created by enacting an export trading company bill.

We should heed the warning of the House Banking Committee:

The historically rapid growth in post World War II demand which accompanies the maturation of those individuals in the so-called "baby boom," has now slowed dramatically. New markets are needed by many U.S. producers if they are to maintain their present employment levels.

In short to maintain jobs and create new ones, we need to explore foreign markets.

Currently it is estimated that 1 out of 8 U.S. jobs depends on exports, particularly in New England. The New England Congressional Institute has stated:

In 1980, the six New England states generated over $10 billion in export sales. An estimated 135,000 jobs in New England are a direct result of export sales. When asked to predict the effect of passage of ETC legislation on their companies' receipts in the New England Congressional Institute survey conducted in April, 57 percent of the export trading company respondents estimated an increase of over 25 percent. All of the respondents indicated increases of at least 5 percent. Applying the lowest of those estimates to current export data suggests that the potential effect of ETC legislation in New England means 500 million dollars earned in export sales, and over 10,000 jobs. (Emphasis in original.)

With unemployment at its highest level in 30 years, western Pennsylvania businesses would welcome more export trade to say the least.

We should do all we can to develop export markets. The health and viability of American industry will depend to a great degree on our ability to compete abroad. If we do not, we may find ourselves no longer the leading industrialized nation in the world, but one sorely lagging behind.

I hope my colleagues will join me in enacting these two important bills.●

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES ACT (PACA)

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to amend the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act in order to address some concerns expressed to me by the fresh fruit and vegetable industry.

The Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, commonly referred to as "PACA," has served the fruit and vegetable industry well since its enactment in 1930. However, the fruit and vegetable industry has pointed out to me two problems that are of concern. The first is the possibility of making inadvertent or unintentional errors in marking, stenciling, or labeling due to modern, speedy methods of packaging. It is possible that some larger firms with multiple operations may accumulate many minor but sanctionable violations, all of them unwitting, in a relatively short period of time because of the sheer volume of shipments. The amending language helps to cover those instances where misbranding violations are accidental, unintended, or unwillful.

Section 1 would require the Secretary of Agriculture in cases of informal disposition of misrepresentation violations of the act involving mark, stencil, or label to judge each case on its own merit. The regulations prescribe what constitutes a serious, a very serious, or a flagrant misrepresentation/misbranding violation. The Secretary would have the authority to issue sanctions in an informal proceeding after he determines, on a case-by-case basis, that the violations or series of violations are serious enough to warrant action.

The amending language, however, continues to afford the offending party, in cases of unintentional or inadvertent error, the opportunity to informally settle a misrepresentation violation by mark, stencil, or label by paying a monetary penalty as provided for in the current act, section 2(5).

Consumer protection will be reinforced with the penalty provisions of the amending language. The monetary penalty for violations noted above is sufficient to encourage good packing and marketing practices, thereby assuring that the consumer will receive the produce which appropriately qualifies for the mark, label, or stencil its shipping container bears. At the same time, desirable protection is afforded licensees within the industry.

The second concern of the produce industry is that the law requiring a foreign claimant to post a bond is being circumvented by assigning the claim to a U.S. resident. Section 2 would close that loophole by also requiring the U.S. resident, to whom the claim has been assigned, to post a bond. This provides equity for Americans who have no similar recourse in other countries. In those cases where a claimant is a resident of a country that has reciprocity, the Secretary is authorized, by the act, to waive the bonding requirements.

The two amendments contained in this bill will bring the act into accordance with current trading practices of the produce industry, eliminate inequities, and perfect the administration of the act.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this legislation to your attention.●

WEST VIRGINIA BANKER URGES LOAN PROGRAM STABILITY

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, our colleague from West Virginia, Cleve Benedict, sent me a letter from one of his constituents, Lu Ann Hussell, student loan officer of the Citizens National Bank of Point Pleasant, W. Va.

The point that she makes that there are too frequent changes in the student loan program is a valid criticism.

Banks and students and parents and universities and colleges all face the same problem.

Beyond any question we are discouraging some people from going to college because of the constant changes that we are making.

I urge my colleagues to read her letter.

And I hope that within the next 2 years when the Higher Education Act is reauthorized that we can arrive at a formula that we will stick to so that the days of uncertainty will diminish in number.

The letter referred to follows:

CITIZENS NATIONAL BANK OF POINT PLEASANT,
Point Pleasant, W. Va., May 17, 1982.

Hon. GLEVE BENEDICT,
U.S. Congressman, Longworth Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BENEDICT: As a participant in the Higher Education Assistance Foundation Student Loan Program we have heard thru our state office that there is a chance we will be given more changes regarding the student loan program. We would like to take this opportunity to express our discontentment with the legislative changes, which seem to be continuosly changing, to the extent that it is impossible for us to interpret one new rule or regulation until another is sent to us for another change.

With all of the rules and regulations, which we must abide by, it is becoming more and more difficult to keep current with constant changes on the program.

In view of this situation we have seriously considered eliminating all new student loan participants from our program and only continue lending to students who we have already lent money to toward their education. We have been restricting our lending policy for the past two (2) years, however, if constant changes are to keep reoccurring we will more than likely terminate our entire student loan program, which we have been in since 1965.

We have had denials of payment on our Default Claims, which we feel have been unjust. We may be at fault for not filing the claim within the guidelines of the "timely filing" of the program. However, we feel we need to work with our customers on a student loan delinquency. There have been several incidents, where we should have filed a default claim, but did not do so because we knew the student would be curing the delinquency within another month or two. Therefore, by working the default out with the student we saved the government the expense of paying back a loan to us. I am sorry the government, however, does not feel the same way. As long as the lender is following the guidelines on a delinquency and shows proper documentation, as to why they have delayed the filing of the default claim and have not imposed any extra expense to the government, we see no need for the claim not to be paid. By losing money on two or three student loans we are having considerable problems justifying keeping the student loan program in our bank to our Board of Directors.

If you or your committee should need any questions answered, which we could assist you with, we will be more than glad to reply to this matter. The student loan program is a good program and is needed by many, however, let us all keep in mind that we should be working together on the program and not against each other.

Very truly yours,

LU ANN HUSSELL,
Student Loan Officer.●

AN ALTERNATIVE BALANCED BUDGET PROPOSAL

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. HEFTEL. Mr. Speaker, in the coming days, the House of Representatives may be called upon to consider one of the most important legislative initiatives of the 97th Congress—the resolution calling for a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The momentum on this issue, which has developed in the House over the past several weeks, has made a House vote on the amendment seemingly inevitable in the remaining days of this Congress. Before the House moves to consider the pending resolutions, I hope that our colleagues will keep in mind several points which I feel are relevant to the question at hand.

First, the balanced budget proposals before us do not place the same degree of fiscal responsibility on the President as they do on the Congress. And yet it is clear that the unbalanced budgets that have plagued us for so many years are a result of both congressional and Presidential actions. Hence, any constitutional amendment dealing with the subject should most certainly involve the President at the outset as well as the Congress.

Additionally, the current budget debate fails to acknowledge that one of the major reasons for our inability to balance the Federal budget may be traced to the misleading "economic assumptions" which have framed our budget resolutions. I feel that it is imperative that the Congress develop and formalize a better means of arriving at valid economic assumptions which will guide our future budget deliberations.

With these concerns serving as background, I have developed two initiatives which I feel can contribute significantly to the upcoming budget debate. I hope that our colleagues will give these initiatives careful consideration.

I have introduced a balanced budget resolution, House Joint Resolution 549, which would require the President to submit in January of each year a balanced Federal budget. The Congress would also be required to approve a budget resolution which projected a balanced budget for the upcoming fiscal year.

I have also introduced legislation which would give the Congress a more formal role in approving the economic assumptions upon which our budget resolution is based each year. The economic assumptions upon which we have been framing our budget have been found to be seriously flawed over the past two budget cycles. Under my legislation, which is intended to implement the balanced budget amendment, a separate body, to be known as the Council on Economic Indicators would be formed. The Council, made up of the Federal Reserve Chairman, Office of Management and Budget Director, Secretary of the Treasury, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and the chairmen of the House and Senate Budget Committees, would be empowered to draw up a set of economic assumptions which would be presented to the Congress in January of each year. The House and Senate would be required to vote on these assumptions or other alternatives which that budget committees might offer prior to their consideration of the budget resolution. Approval of valid economic assumptions by the Congress would be a key step in the budget process, and would provide Congress with essential indicators upon which it could frame a budget.

Mr. Speaker, Congress and the President are faced with an enormous task as each branch seeks to direct the fortunes of our economy. Successive Presidents have tried and failed to deliver on promises made to the American people to bring a sense of moderation to Federal spending. This failure has shaken the confidence of the financial community and the money markets. The Congress has been no more successful in translating Presidential budget recommendations into concise efficient programs. As Government has grown, Congress has become less and less able to deal with the root causes of burgeoning spending from an institutional perspective, and more and more reluctant to curtail particular programs from a constituent perspective.

The balanced budget amendment is not offered as a panacea which will cure all economic ills. However, it is offered as an option which could discipline the President and the Congress in their consideration of Federal spending proposals. Within the parameters set forth in the budget blueprint, there can and must be room for compassion. However, the budget must be as efficient as it is compassionate. Only a budget based on sound economic principles can truly serve the needs of people, for such a budget will recognize the limits of Government and the inherent weakness of unchecked public policy

Mr. Speaker, I offer these proposals for your consideration and the consideration of our colleagues, and hope that we may work together in resolving this issue in a way which will command the confidence of the American people.●

TRIBUTE TO VIVIAN BRANSFIELD

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, Vivian Bransfield, the sister of one of my friends, Rod O'Neil, recently passed away after a long illness. Mrs. Bransfield was a resident of Miami Beach for over 50 years and was part of a wonderful and well-known family with many, many friends. I would like to share some excerpts from the eulogy delivered by Rod at her funeral. Rod eloquently speaks of characteristics and a philosophy of life of a most unusual person. I am sure we can all benefit from his loving remarks:

EULOGY DELIVERED AT THE FUNERAL OF VIVIAN O'NEIL BRANSFIELD BY RODERICK J. O'NEIL, HER BROTHER

Don't cry. Be strong. I'll pray for you. Chapter 58 verses 1 through 3 from the book of Vivian O'Neil Bransfield.

These words constituted the marching orders issued last Friday by a mother to her children. The words were also a measure of the woman who spoke them. She didn't cry. She was a tower of strength. She always prayed for those she loved and she even prayed for those she didn't care for all that much. Vivian Bransfield was a private person who has left a public image of immense dimension. She will in death, be larger than life. We will never forget her. She will be easy to remember. We will remember that she was extraordinarily beautiful. We will remember she was quietly and unostentatiously courageous. We will remember that she was loving and as I look now at her husband and 10 children I appreciate the meaning of that word. She has bequeathed to all of you a legacy of loving. She was keenly analytical rather than supposedly intuitive (although she was that as well). While people talked around the perimeters of a problem she had already solved it with almost frightening logical clarity.

When she knew something was right no excuses were acceptable and Vivian may not have always been right but Vivian was never wrong. She may have invented humor. She laughed a lot and she laughed hardest at herself. In her memory let us all promise to never take ourselves too seriously. Father Michael has dealt beautifully with Vivian's deep faith and exquisitely simple spirituality. I affirm those sentiments.

And so now she will shed her light upon us for the rest of our lives. So to Chuck her husband and to her children Marguerite, Barry, Joan, Mary Frances, Vivian, Charles, Danny, Michael, Thomas and Mark I give you my solemn promise—Like the song says—The sun will come out tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. DAN MARRIOTT

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present on the floor of the House of Representatives, Friday, July 23, 1982, for rollcall Nos. 212 and 213. Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on House Resolution 529, provides for the consideration of H.R. 5427, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act; and "yea" on the motion that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of H.R. 5427, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act.●

NURSING HOMES PROTECTIONS IN JEOPARDY

HON. BENJAMIN S. ROSENTHAL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to an editorial which appeared in the New York Times on July 15, 1982. The editorial concerns the critical problems posed by the new nursing home regulations proposed this past May by the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, Richard Schweiker. These proposals include: Biannual, rather than annual facility inspections; inspections performed over the phone, rather than in person at the facility site; the termination of mandatory 90-day resurveys for facilities in which violations have been discovered; and the elimination of a mandatory cancellation clause when facility violations have not been corrected quickly enough.

Secretary Schweiker claims these proposals would reduce waste in the nursing home bureaucracy. This position is one of the most disingenuous claims I have yet heard from the present administration. No one can really believe that nursing home care will remain what it is today if inspections of homes are made less frequent and less public, as these new proposals would effectively provide.

Mr. Schweiker's plan would affect the most vulnerable segment of our population: the elderly and the disabled. A nursing facility is often the last home its residents know; what is more, the average stay of a resident is approximately 2 years. The "deregulation" that Secretary Schweiker proposes must be seen for what it really is: A euphemism for destroying the protection of nursing home residents.

No one supports waste in government; no one endorses inefficiency. Secretary Schweiker claims his intention is to wipe out waste and inefficiency in the nursing home industry. These are laudable objectives. But I am hard pressed to see how these goals are furthered by this new "deregulation scheme." Rather, this plan is a remarkably ill-conceived one because it concerns an industry whose history has been plagued by numerous and severe violations of law and of ethical conduct. Deregulation will return the nursing home industry to the spotty, exploitive, and wholly inadequate conditions which were all too prevalent before proper regulation took hold.

The Times editorial points out the need for support of legislation which would demand the immediate withdrawal of Mr. Schweiker's proposals. Several of my congressional colleagues, including Representative PEPPER and Representative RATCHFORD, are sponsoring bills calling for just this. In addition, numerous citizens coalitions have demanded the retraction of these proposals. Finally, many letters have been sent to the Secretary questioning his policies, and he has, in many cases, yet to respond. I join with those who hold these sentiments.

The full text of the New York Times editorial follows:

NURSING HOMES NEED WATCHING

The Department of Health and Human Services says the new regulations it proposes for nursing home inspection are a technical adjustment to promote efficiency. They look more like an attempt to poke holes in a bureaucratic shield that protects 1.3 million nursing home residents.

The controversy began last winter when Secretary Schweiker tried to loosen standards for nursing homes that admit Medicare and Medicaid patients. Foiled by a flurry of Congressional protest and unpleasant headlines, he promised to leave the standards alone. In May, however, Mr. Schweiker announced new rules, supposedly to focus enforcement on serious violators. But the relaxed regulations could also serve the original purpose of releasing the industry from standards.

Washington pays state agencies to perform annual inspections and to verify that violations are eliminated within 90 days. The proposed rules, subject to public comment this month, would let homes with good records go without inspection for two years and eliminate the mandatory follow-up for all. They would entrust much inspection to the private Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

Critics argue passionately against a more flexible approach; if there are now a lot of homes with good records, they say, it is because of the rigid inspection schedules. The Joint Commission arouses more worry. Unlike state agencies, it does not publicize inspection reports; the draft rules require only that they be posted in nursing homes.

Critics also fear that the private group might fall under industry influence. They note that relaxation would come at a time when state inspections have already suffered deep cuts in Federal funding.

The nursing home industry that Mr. Schweiker seems so eager to deregulate has only recently overcome a sordid record of exploitation. One effect of the heavy flow of unsupervised Federal money in recent years was its attraction of a core of operators whose greed overcome any commitment to decent care. Only strong state and Federal regulations curbed the abuses. With many such operators still interested in exploiting the aged and their families, there is no good reason to believe supervision could now be safely relaxed.●

TRIBUTE TO PATRICIA WALLY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, Patricia B. Wally is the role model for women and other volunteers as the supreme professional volunteer in San Mateo County.

On the occasion of her birthday and her recent retirement from the unpaid office of executive vice president of the San Mateo Community Theater, I want to join her many friends and admirers in paying tribute to a remarkable woman.

Whether working in politics or in the theater, Pat has always been a dominant force in San Mateo County. She has worked tirelessly, hour upon hour, in both fields.

Her interest in the theater came with her heritage. Her family, living in Olathe, Kans., at the time of her birth, was involved in the Keith-Orpheum circuit. As a little girl, Pat filled the famous role of Baby Patsy in the 1920 silent movies, later to be known as the "Our Gang" series.

She left the theater and, with the advent of World War II, joined the U.S. Army.

At the end of the war she married Attorney Barry M. Wally. They soon became parents. Eventually, the family grew to six with the addition of two sons and two daughters, David, Paul, Lisa, and Sally. It was during these years that Pat became the reliable campaign worker and director. She soon became known for her depth of knowledge of politics in San Mateo County. Her mind and her files were the ongoing source of information and wisdom for aspiring candidates. In 1972 she was chosen the Volunteer of the Year, the zenith of recognition from her particular party. Her work continued.

The theater beckoned and she soon returned to her early love. She has put in 12 to 14 hours a day, including weekends, to establish the San Mateo Community Theater on a firm footing. The goal of the group has been to bring quality theater at affordable prices to the peninsula. This goal has been achieved through the hard work and organizational abilities of Pat Wally, professional volunteer.●

TUITION SUBSIDIES ARE NOT BENIGN

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times recently had an excellent editorial: "Tuition Subsidies Are Not Benign."

I urge my colleagues in the House and Senate to read it.

Perhaps equally important, I urge those within the administration who are calling the shots to read it.

TUITION SUBSIDIES ARE NOT BENIGN

President Reagan is perplexed at the opposition to his proposed tax subsidy of up to $500 for private and parochial school tuition. "People . . . say in some way this would hurt the public school system—how? We're not taking anything away from the public school system. What would hurt the public school system is if all of the independent schools closed and those thousands and thousands of youngsters were dumped on the public school. . . ."

If the subsidy has any value at all, it will indeed take something important from the public schools: some more of their better students and more of their crucial political support. Thus to force public schools to compete for students is not a fair contest; they cannot admit, reject or suspend whom they please and are clearly disadvantaged in maintaining order and educational standards.

An added financial incentive would only encourage the departure of more middle-class families, stripping the public schools of motivated students and parents most concerned about the quality of public education. Although Government should not hold children hostage, that hardly argues for subsidizing their flight.

Transfers spurred by tax credits would also further erode the constituency for adequate funding of public education. A clear example of the danger is already apparent in Congress. Tax cutting is obviously more popular than social spending, even for the poorest Americans. And Federal aid for remedial education in poor urban and rural school systems is being rapidly reduced.

Subsidizing private suppliers of essential public services also offends an important principle. The private marketplace cannot distribute such services equitably, though all have equal need for them. As Albert Shanker of the American Federation of Teachers has put it, "If I don't like the drinking water, I can't ask you to pay for my Perrier." It is no argument for subsidy to say that Perrier drinkers save the money by drinking less from the common reservoir.

The unspoken and truly dangerous doctrine in this debate is that private schools are inevitably better than public schools. Despite the handicaps under which they work, public schools perform at least as well in many places. Whether public or private, education is effective when endowed with strong administration and held to exacting standards.

Subsidizing private schools is an unwarranted resignation to the inadequacies of public schools. But precisely because many are inadequate, they urgently need help. If Government has more money to spend on education, it is simply wrong to give it to private schools instead. A proper commitment of Federal resources to the improvement of public education would let many desperate parents shed their tuition burden entirely.●

ADDRESSING THE PROBLEM OF THE DISPLACED WORKER

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, as a July 19, 1982, Business Week article indicates, job displacement has evolved into an extremely pervasive and pernicious problem. Displacement threatens "hundreds of thousands" of laborers in a wide variety of industries and occupations ranging from auto manufacturers to office clerical workers. While adverse economic trends and imminent technological advances further imperil job security, there has been no comprehensive plan to address this development and only a few scattered attempts to provide retraining and skills assistance to those most affected by displacement.

Recently unions such as the UAW have sought and gained contractual agreements from Ford and GM which insure the introduction of intensified retraining programs. In addition, a handful of private corporations have initiated smaller scale services to retrain or upgrade the skills of their employees. Nevertheless, currently there is no adequate Federal program to ease the effects of job displacement and to retrain individuals whose skills have proven obsolete. And yet, shrinkage of the labor force portends the potential eradication of up to 4 million factory jobs to automation and robotics by the year 2000.

Realizing the severity of job displacement which has occurred in recent years and the even bleaker prospects for the near future, on April 27, 1982, the House Education and Labor Committee unanimously reported H.R. 5320, the Job Training Partnership Act. This vital legislation, which I introduced and has been cosponsored by 85 colleagues, seeks to commence a new attack on unemployment by providing funds for the retraining of displaced individuals in localities across the Nation. H.R. 5320 will come before the full House for its consideration in the next week or two. I strongly urge my colleagues' support for this attempt to offset the destructive impacts of technological change so that in good conscience we may reap its numerous benefits. The text of that Business Week article entitled, "Retraining Displaced Workers: Too Little, Too Late?" follows:

RETRAINING DISPLACED WORKERS: TOO LITTLE, TOO LATE?

Most workers in the U.S. traditionally have been left to fend for themselves when new technology or shifts in the economy have affected or eliminated their jobs, but this is beginning to change. Unions in shrinking industries are starting to win provisions requiring companies to retrain displaced workers. And this summer Congress is likely to approve legislation that will commit increasing amounts of federal money to new retraining programs. And manpower experts fear that they may be too little to prepare millions of other workers for the continued shrinkage of basic industries and the rapid introduction of new technology over the next 20 years.

The push for more retraining intensified this spring, when the United Auto Workers won promises from General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. to commit $120 million and $25 million respectively to set up retraining programs. Then on July 1 the Senate passed a jobs bill, originally opposed by the Administration, that includes $100 million a year for retraining displaced workers through private industry councils—federally financed groups whose primary purpose is to help minority workers find jobs.

AN ENDEMIC PROBLEM

But few unions or employers are following the lead of the auto industry. The Senate bill, which is likely to become law, is less ambitious than several more expensive bills introduced in the House. And both approaches constitute only a small step toward solving what many experts believe is an endemic problem in the U.S. economy. "Our refusal to spend money on investing in a skilled work force shows up in large numbers of people who are unemployable," says Herbert E. Striner, an advocate of retraining and University Professor in the College of Business at American University in Washington.

Whether retraining spreads will have a significant impact on workers, employers, and the economy. A recent House Education & Labor Committee report predicts that, in contrast to past recessions, "hundreds of thousands" of skilled workers will remain jobless during the recovery because of structural changes in the economy. Harvard University economist James L. Medoff believes that a lack of retraining has contributed to a growing imbalance between the skills employers need and the skills workers have. He says this adds to inflation and impedes productivity growth. Adds Robert L. Craig, vice-president of the American Society for Training & Development (ASTD): "If our work force isn't competent at producing new products, we won't sell them and we'll lose more markets."

The Manpower Development & Training Act (MDTA) of 1963 set up a federal program to upgrade the skills of workers, particularly in depressed areas of the country, and Pat Choate, a senior policy analyst for TRW Inc., says this helped start the migration of industry to the South. But when the Comprehensive Employment & Training Act superseded the MDTA in the early 1970s, training took a backseat to creating temporary jobs for minority workers. At the same time, public education began providing fewer of the skills employers needed. The educational system is moving slowly to solve this poblem. And business has done little so far to help.

Medoff points to Commerce Dept. figures showing that the percentage of workers aged 25 to 49 for whom employers provided job-related training rose only to 6 percent from 5.2 percent between 1969 and 1978. He says this helps explain a "dramatic increase in the labor market imbalance since 1969." A study he is completing shows that prior to 1969 an increase in unemployment among men aged 25 to 54 resulted in a decline in help-wanted advertising as employers hired the highest-skilled unemployed workers. Since 1969, however, help-wanted advertising has stayed high even when unemployment among these workers rises, indicating a decreasing demand for the skills held by laid-off workers.

LAGGING RESEARCH

No one knows how much employees spend on retraining, although the ASTD puts the figure at $30 billion a year for all training. But Medoff's theory is buttressed by the experience in basic industries. Using formulas developed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the United Auto Workers estimates that the shrinkage of the U.S. auto industry has eliminated about 1 million jobs directly related to auto production, or 25 percent of the pre-1979 total. Some of these people have found jobs, but many are not working or have jobs for which they are undertrained or overqualified. Because the UAW's new retraining provisions were negotiated after these layoffs occurred, these workers are fending for themselves.

New technology also will increase the need for retraining. Although no one has been laid off because of robots yet, a study done last year at Carnegie-Mellon University identifies 4 million factory jobs that robots may perform by the year 2000. The study identified 3 million additional jobs that robots may assume early in the 21st century. Office automation may have an even greater impact. Serge P. Beauregard, group vice-president of Deltak Inc., which trains data processing professionals, estimates that 10 years from now some 35 million office workers will use some sort of electronic equipment, up from 5 million now. Because this equipment will keep evolving. TRW's Choate thinks that employers may have to retrain workers five to eight times during their careers. "Retraining is going to become an increasingly important part of every business activity," he adds. But so far, says Harvey L. Poppel, senior vice-president in charge of office automation at Booz, Allen & Hamilton Inc., "no company has a rigorous, encompassing program of developing the computer literacy of its workers."

One solution is for the federal government to fund and administer a formal program. American University's Striner advocates a system such as West Germany's. Workers can get grants and loans for tuition and living expenses for up to two years while they go back to school. Moreover, the government tries to channel people into fields where there are shortages. Last year, West Germany spent $1.3 billion on education and living expenses for 171,000 of the country's 24 million workers. Striner calculates that retraining 1% to 2% of the U.S. work force would cost about $6 billion in tuition a year, which would be partly offset by reduced payouts of employment benefits to these workers.

THE CLOUT TO KILL

But President Reagan is philosophically opposed to centrally directed programs, and in the near term the Administration has the clout to kill a number of plans that are far less ambitious than Germany's program. These include a proposal by Representative Augustus Hawkins of California, to spend up to $1 billion annually "to aid the transition from low-demand skills or industries to stable or growing occupations." Instead, the Labor Dept. has made a $300,000 grant to the UAW, which with Rockwell International is looking for ways to train former auto workers for jobs in the aerospace industry. The Administration is belatedly supporting the $100 million retraining plan proposed by Senators Dan Quayle of Indiana, and Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts. But its hope, says Albert Angrisanni, Assistant Secretary of Labor for employment and training, is that industry and unions will largely solve the problem themselves.

Vendors already are a major source of training for a new technology. Unimation Inc., a leading robot maker, trained more than 1,500 workers at 440 locations last year, typically in a 36-hour course that teaches robot programming and repair. But experts say that relying on such basic instruction is not enough, and they point to programs such as American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s that may become models for business. AT&T has a 10,000-member staff and a $1.25 billion annual budget to "take the existing employee group forward," says James Walker, director of education for the company's Business Services Div. AT&T's training staff participates in new product planning so it knows what types of workers and how many will be needed and can design training six to nine months before the equipment goes into use. For instance, Bell is retraining workers for deregulation of its businesses. Foremen used to supervise union employees closely in Walker's division, giving them perhaps 10 work assignments a day to repair a customer's equipment. But new equipment can diagnose its own problems, and now these workers are being retrained to market Bell's services with less supervision.

BACK TO SCHOOL

Similarly, Xerox, which spends about $125 million a year to train or retrain 40% of its 120,000 employees, sends technicians who can service desktop copiers to its Leesburg (Va.) training center for up to seven weeks to learn to service high-speed printers, the 2% to 3% of workers who cannot adjust are either sent back to their old product line or given training in basic skills. With fewer workers entering the work force every year because of low birth rates, "I'm conviced that retraining will be a major need for American industry over the next 10 years," says Robert R. Sohl, director of the company's International Center for Training & Management Development.

To meet an urgent need for programmers, International Business Machines Corp., which has a no-layoff policy, puts secretaries, computer operators, production workers, and new employees through nine weeks of training. Over the past five years, Monsanto Co. has sent 100 middle-aged chemical engineers to a one-year course at Washington University in St. Louis to bring them up to date on technology. The program costs more than $1 million a year in tuition and living expenses, but "it's a way for us to get people with the skills we want that are not attainable anywhere else," says Gerald T. Kennedy, the company's personnel development manager.

Booz Allen's Poppel says a major problem for the future will be training office workers to use their new equipment to its fullest efficiency, for instance by persuading managers to do work themselves that they delegate now. Continental Illinois Bank in Chicago has 10 to 15 employees who do such training. And Aetna Life & Casualty Co., which expects that by 1990 all of its employees will use computer terminals, up from 25% now, is training managers to avoid "segmenting and depersonalizing" jobs and thus alienating their subordinates.

Other companies are trying to answer the question posed by George T. Rehfeldt, a group vice-president at Cincinnati Milacron Inc.: If it only takes two workers to maintain a robot that replaced 10 production workers, "what do I do with the other eight?" Regis College, near Boston, with help from Honeywell Inc. and a Massachusetts state agency, is teaching computer programming to teachers and other public employees idled by state budget cuts. Of 20 people trained last summer, Honeywell hired eight.

MATCHING SKILLS

The UAW's contracts with Ford and GM call for a much more ambitious effort in this direction. Ford and the union, for example, hope to set up a joint training center by fall with an executive director and at least six full-time employees to retrain workers for new auto jobs—or for jobs outside the industry. Donald F. Ephlin, director of the UAW's Ford Dept., says the retraining may be done through community colleges. The center will have a placement service. It will also try to match the skills of Ford employees more closely with Ford's needs to improve product quality and make for more efficient use of manpower, including more internal promotions. Similarly, a contract agreed to by 13 unions and General Electric Co. on June 28 requires the company to spend up to $1,800 in tuition for retraining workers displaced by GE's increasing use of robots.

Despite such initiatives, most experts believe that more must be done to stimulate retraining TRW's Choate favors government incentives, such as tax credits of perhaps 25% of retraining costs. The Carnegie-Mellon study on robots notes that Washington is still funding vocational education in occupations that robots may make obsolete, such as certain kinds of welding and machine tool work. It also suggests that employers give workers much earlier notice of changes in technology to ease the transition. Perhaps the most serious problem is that no Administration has tried enlisting employers to help predict systematically how many jobs in specific fields will disappear or be created during what promises to be a period of rapid automation. Until these problems are solved, says American University's Striner, "we'll have an increasing number of people in our labor force who are dead weight."●

THE DEATH OF LEO O'BRIEN

HON. BALTASAR CORRADA

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, on May 4 former Congressman Leo O'Brien of New York died in Albany, N.Y., at the age of 81. Congressman O'Brien, who served in Congress for seven terms was a good friend of Puerto Rico and took special interest and became very knowledgeable about our island.

He advocated and supported statehood for Puerto Rico and in 1966 introduced a bill to that effect.

As a Member of Congress during the years of debate on the admission of Alaska and Hawaii into the Union, and particularly as a member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Congressman O'Brien was a recognized expert in the area of the procedures for statehood. He became chairman of the Territories Subcommittee of Interior and in 1959 traveled to Puerto Rico where he conducted hearings on the status question. Congressman O'Brien was also a member of the bipartisan United States—Puerto Rico Status Commission which reaffirmed the status of self-determination for the residents of Puerto Rico and which endorsed statehood for Puerto Rico, should the residents freely choose that status.

Congressman O'Brien retired from the Congress in 1967. He will always be remembered by all Puerto Ricans as their friend and a Member of Congress who took the time to learn of the concerns and aspirations of his fellow U.S. citizens on the island. I hope the date is growing near when Puerto Ricans will make the decision to join the other 50 States as a full-fledged responsible partner of the Union. When that date comes it is our hope that, like Congressman O'Brien, before then, the Members of Congress will welcome us as the 51st State of the United States.

On behalf of all Puerto Ricans, I want to express my sympathy to Congressman O'Brien's family and our prayers for his eternal rest.●

OHIO'S FARMERS NEED HELP

HON. BOB SHAMANSKY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. SHAMANSKY. Mr. Speaker, on March 18, I urged the Secretary of Agriculture to implement as soon as possible the economic emergency loan program for the 1982 crop year. High interest rates and depressed prices have placed America's farmers in serious financial difficulties. How long must they wait for the USDA to act responsibly?

To show what USDA's reluctance or unwillingness to act means to the farmers of my home State, I urge my colleagues to read the June 29, 1982, Washington Post article that I am inserting at this time.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 29, 1982]

THE HEYDAY HAS ENDED FOR OHIO FARMERS

(By Ward Sinclair)

CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO, June 28.—Things were at such a pass, with ruinous weather in 1980 and 1981 and depressed grain prices this year, that farmer Larry Sheets decided he was worth more dead than alive.

Sheets, a bearded man in his early 40s, took out his gun and contemplated suicide last spring as he felt the financial walls close in on him. He figured his family might find an easier way out of the morass if he were gone.

He didn't complete the deed, but the money problem on his 1,500-acre farm hasn't gone away.

"I owe about $1 million," he said recently. "I figure I'm worth $1 million dead and I knew the wife and three kids could pay out. . . . It's just that tense. A very tense situation."

Publicly, at least, most farmers in Central Ohio's Pickaway County don't bare their souls with such candor. But there is no mistaking their unease and rancor. It is as though a great agricultural sleigh ride, typified by the easy money and farm expansion of recent years, has come to an abrupt end with few prepared to cope.

Ohio's farm economy is in precarious condition, as it is in virtually every other state, but farmers and businessmen fear the worst is yet to come—massive farm foreclosures, small-business collapses, paper millionaires wiped out.

Even Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block, while echoing the administration line of better times, has been conceding recently that some of today's financially strapped farmers won't be around in 1983.

"What you're seeing here is the tip of the iceberg," said Paul Corson, head of the local Farmers Home Administration office. "The loan delinquency rate probably has quadrupled over the last couple years in the three counties we serve. . . . If we have a good year, if prices bump up a little bit, I could see delinquencies getting to a manageable level."

National farm organizations routinely describe the current situation as a depression. Implement dealers and farm suppliers have shut down, or edged closer to it, in many areas. The Reagan White House pleads for time and forebearance. A badly divided Congress is unable to offer much more hope to farmers.

How deep the hurt will run is the imponderable in this bleak panorama. The prelude to today's distress is three straight years of declining farm prices, high inflation and interest rates. Net farm income last year hit its lowest point in 49 years, and farm experts see it dropping even more this year as the economy remains sluggish.

That would be bad enough in any U.S. farm county, but it's disastrous in a place like Pickaway, coming on the heels of the weather-stricken 1980 and 1981 crops. This is one of Ohio's premier farm counties, with about 250,000 acres in corn, soybeans and wheat. When the farm economy sags, everyone feels it.

The Department of Agriculture in 1980 spent $1.2 million in hail-damage disaster payments here; last year, they paid $1.5 million in disaster aid because crop yields were low. Through May 31, the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) had made 97 emergency loans for $3.3 million.

Ray Noecker, who farms 600 acres and raises cattle and hogs near here, is nervous about the situation, but he is better off than most of his fellow farmers who rely entirely on grain production for their income.

"The bad weather we've had the last two years can wipe out 10 years of savings in a hurry," he said. "People knew the wheel was squeaking, but they didn't know the bearing was dry."

But saving has little real meaning to a young farmer like Bob Minshall, 24. Like most other farmers his age, he has none. And he has little prospect of having any, given the current economic situation.

"I began in 1976 with hogs," he said. "Then I bought a tractor and things went pretty good, to where I now own 130 acres out of the 800 I'm farming. But then we had the grain embargo on the Soviet Union in 1980, and then the hail, and the drought and I am right behind the eight ball. I owe about $500,000 now."

After dickering with FmHA all winter, Minshall got a 1982 operating loan in return for a second mortgage on his farm. "I got the approval on April 23 and I was planting on April 24. That's how close to the edge I am," he said.

Minshall knows that unless prices turn up sharply or he produces a mammoth crop, or both, he may not be farming next year. "What are the young farmers going to do?" He asked rhetorically.

For every Larry Sheets or Bob Minshall who is strapped, the pinch becomes a little more acute for the community's agribusiness: less equipment sold and serviced, less fuel and fertilizer and pesticide sold.

Dick Gaib was one who couldn't roll with the punches. He had management problems, he acknowledged, but the general economy was so rocky that he closed his Case implement dealership in March and filed for bankruptcy.

"I think all of this goes back to Jimmy Carter's embargo. Profits and incentives were there in 1980, but it's been downhill ever since," Gaib said. "We saw [supply] prices increasing between 2 to 6 percent every few months, with everyone passing it on to the farmer. The farmer has no way of passing it on."

In the last year, at least a dozen implement dealers have closed their doors in Ohio. Don Hill, Circleville's third-generation International Harvester dealer, remains in business but things are shaky.

His parent company is flirting with bankruptcy and his implement sales are almost nonexistent. He lost money for the first time in 1980 and expects to be in the red again this year, but Hill somehow remains philosophical.

"This didn't happen overnight," he said, "and those who are prepared are going to survive. . . . I personally feel it's good that we go through some times like this. . . . In the early 1970s, we sold equipment as fast as we could get it—and we spent as fast as we could. A good dealership can survive on parts and service . . . if we cut expenses, we'll survive."

That provides little succor to area farmers who are under the figurative gun, heavily burdened with land and equipment debt acquired during the booming 1970s, when it appeared to many that grain prices and demand would stay high forever and every dirt farmer could own a top-of-the-line John Deere tractor.

As in other parts of the country, credit here is tight, interest rates remain high and land values are falling. Commodity prices continue at depressed levels (a bushel of corn, for example, brings about a dollar less now than it did a year ago) and exports have slumped.

To meet their rising costs and offset falling prices, farmers are producing more. Whopper wheat, corn and soybean crops are in view, even though the Department of Agriculture is running a much criticized voluntary program to get cropland out of production.

Theoretically, less production would draw down the granary and boost prices. But here in Pickaway County, less than a tenth of the acreage base has been signed into the program, making the vicious circle complete.

Continuing high levels of production mean continuing high stocks of grains, which mean continuing low prices and the potential for huge federal subsidy payments to farmers.

Problems here are exacerbated by sharply tightened lending policies of the farm credit system and loan-processing delays and puzzling rejections by FmHA, all of which have created deep resentment among farmers accustomed to getting loans with few questions asked.

John D. Adkins, an attorney who handles financial matters for farmers, is as perturbed as his clients. "You simply can't figure out the philosophy of these lending institutions. . . . If the farm credit system is going to drive out all the young, heavily leveraged farmers—and I think it is happening—we'll end up with corporate farms and there will be an entirely new power structure in the country."

Men like Don Humphrey, the biggest fertilizer dealer in Pickaway and a dozen surrounding counties, find their businesses, in effect, have become lending institutions.

Humphrey estimated that 15 percent of its firm's 5,500 regular customers this year have given him a mortgage on their 1982 grain crop in return for the fertilizer and chemicals they needed to get the crop in the ground.

"We now extend terms or help them find credit or we just don't sell to them," Humphrey said.

"We take a mortgage on the crop with the inputs we have provided if the banks or Production Credit Association or FmHA won't handle them. We charge interest, but then, we have to borrow at the prime rate, plus."

One of Humphrey's old-line customers, Eugene Patrick, head of the local chapter of the National Farmers Union, is still battling with FmHA over a loan application to finance his operations this year. Meanwhile, with Humphrey's help, he got this crop in the ground and mortgaged it back to Humphrey.

Patrick is moderately optimistic—he has to be to stay sane, he said—but he worries about his neighbors and friends like Larry Sheets, who walk the narrow edge of desperation almost every day.

"The highly leveraged farmers are carrying high insurance on themselves," Patrick said. "You hate to think you'd have to kill yourself to save the family farm."●

SUPPORT HISTORIC PRESERVATION

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, since the Congress first created the National Trust for Historic Preservation in 1949, Americans have been able to feel secure in the fact that our historical structures—rich with American culture and beauty—were being protected and preserved for future generations. For a relatively low Federal expense, the historic preservation program yields significant returns by creating jobs, saving energy and generating public revenues. Most importantly, this program gives communities the opportunity to revitalize those structures which, although neglected and in disrepair, still offer unique and efficient benefits to businesses and individuals alike.

Since the historic preservation program places decisionmaking on the State and local levels—a concept strongly endorsed by the administration—one would expect that the President would recommend continuing Federal funds for this program. Unfortunately, however, President Reagan's fiscal 1983 budget totally eliminates historic preservation funding. I am sure other Members share my concern over this matter, and agree that any program which provides as many benefits, both financially and culturally, as the historic preservation program is certainly worthy of our support. As we continue our deliberations on the budget, therefore, I would like to urge our colleagues to join me in supporting proposals which will insure that this extremely valuable program continues to be funded in the coming year.●

"PORK BARREL" WASTES BILLIONS, ADDS TO BUDGET WOES

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, as Congress grapples with measures to scale back Federal spending and sharply reduce a projected budget deficit of more than $100 billion for fiscal 1983, it becomes increasingly imperative for us to determine spending priorities.

The guaranteed student loan program in my judgment, is essential to insure all college students, including graduate and professional students, access to higher education. It is a valuable investment in our country's future, and, with proper safeguards, can become cost-effective.

On the other hand, there are many programs that are unworthy of continued funding and should be eliminated entirely from the budget.

Among these are three very large-scale, unnecessary public works projects: The Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway—a canal connecting the Tennessee River to the Gulf of Mexico; the Clinch River nuclear breeder reactor in Tennessee; and SRC I, a solvent refined coal demonstration plant in Kentucky.

All three are special-interest pork barrel projects of dubious worth. All three are way behind schedule and have incurred immense cost overruns. All three are extremely expensive—estimated to cost between $3 billion and $4.5 billion each by completion. And all three are potentially hazardous to the environment.

The Tenn-Tom was first authorized by Congress in 1946, but funds were not appropriated until 25 years later. Estimated to cost $300 million in 1971, the canal's cost have ballooned to $3 billion.

So far, we have sunk $1 billion into this colossal 232-mile ditch designed to connect the Tennessee River with the existing Black Warrior Tombigbee Waterway in Alabama. The canal—the largest project ever undertaken by the Army Corps of Engineers is intended to provide a shorter, alternate barge route to the gulf, parallel to the Mississippi River, in an area already well-served by railroads. Its transportation benefits, however, will never outweight its costs.

Furthermore, completion of the waterway would destroy 100,000 arces of land along the Tombigbee River without providing any reciprocal benefits to anyone.

In 1982 Congress appropriated $189 million for this project. The 1983 request is for another $186 million. By scrapping this project now, we could save taxpayers nearly $92 billion.

Clinch River is another Government project I believe should be abandoned. The project was begun in 1979 in anticipation of a sharply increased demand for nuclear power and a corresponding shortage of uranium. But in the last few years projected nuclear demand has plummeted, estimates or uranium reserves have doubled, and the price of uranium has dropped sharply.

Meanwhile, the cost of the Clinch River reactor has risen to $3.2 billion from the $700 million originally projected. More than $1 billion has already been spent, yet construction has not even begun. And, although utilities have lobbied heavily for the breeder reactor, private investment totals only about 9 percent.

While there may be some merit to the project, it is hard to see why tax moneys should be used for its construction. If there is any economic value to the project, private industry should build it and derive the profit.

SRC I, the youngest of the three projects, is also the most expensive. The estimated cost of the demonstration plant, designed to convert coal into solid coke and liquid boiler fuel is $4.5 billion, seven times the original estimate. To cover its cost, SRC I fuel would have to sell for $76 a barrel, more than twice the cost of oil on the world market today.

SRC I would release toxic chemicals into the air and water and could expose on-site workers to high cancer risks. The product also generates more carbon dioxide then coal and heavy usage might affect the Earth's climate.

While no funds have been requested for this project for fiscal 1983, last year $135 million was appropriated despite the fact that there was no budget request. We can well expect this to happen again.

Added to these three large-scale boondoggles are some smaller worthless pork barrel projects like the Garrison diversion water project in North Dakota and the Stonewall Jackson Dam in West Virginia.

None of these projects will yield benefits commensurate to the Government's investment. In fact, their perpetuation could be harmful in human as well as economic terms. In the best of times they should be terminated. But when valuable programs are being cut, continuation of these projects is unconscionable.●

REGAIN CONTROL OF THE FEDERAL BUDGET

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, as the various House and Senate committees continue working with the fiscal year 1983 budget, and as momentum gathers to balance the Federal budget, a constituent of mine, George D. Carnahan, of Providence, Ky., has written to me expressing his suggestions for balancing the Federal budget and putting a stop to excessive spending policies. I believe Mr. Carnahan's letter is one which should be shared with my colleagues and I wish to do so at this time. The letter follows:

CARNAHAN ENGINEERING AND SURVEYING,
Providence, Ky., June 11, 1982.

Congressman CARROLL HUBBARD,
Rayburn House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. HUBBARD: I am writing again concerning my proposal to get the federal budget under control. There must be an incentive for every person in the House and in the Senate to control expenditures. I repeat my former proposal.

Congress must pass a law which states that "whenever there is a deficit in the federal budget expenditures compared to revenues, that the pay of every person on the federal payroll will be reduced the following year by the same percentage that the expenditures were out of balance with receipts".

When I say all, I mean every federal department, federal commissions, members of Congress and their staffs, the executive branch, foreign aid programs, grants to university people, the judiciary branch, Social Security payments, USDA subsidy payments, and on and on. . . . Every person's pay and every program should be reduced by the percentage that expenditures exceed receipts.

What changes would you make in your own offices if you knew that next year your salary and the salaries of all your staffs was going to be reduced by 15 per cent? Such a law would strike at the jugular vein of the entrenched federal bureaucracies whose main goal is to grow in size and to spend more money and meddle more into the lives of the taxpayers. I think it is imperative to provide a monetary incentive to every person getting money from the federal government to operate efficiently; hitting someone in the pocketbook is a quick way to get his attention. The choice is clear in such a law; either get the budget under control, or cut everyone's pay the next year by the percent the expenditures exceed revenues. I guarantee you that we will have a balanced budget by 1984!

Lacking such a law, I would support a constitutional amendment to limit spending and taxation; however, I think a monetary incentive to be more efficient is the best way to do the job.

Sincerely,

GEORGE D. CARNAHAN,
Providence, Ky.●

THE NATION'S DETERIORATING INFRASTRUCTURE

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, warnings have a way of coming too late to stave off disaster. With this in mind I commend to my colleagues' attention the following article from Newsweek, August 2, 1982, which warns of impending catastrophe within our tunnels, sewers, bridges, highway and rail systems if we continue our outrageous pattern of neglect. But this warning need not be too late. The Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition and Institute have been supplying Members with information for years depicting our Nation's deteriorating infrastructure. This article simply underscores the worsening problem and will prompt the House, I trust, to legislate to forestall possible tragedy.

The article follows:

[From Newsweek, Aug. 2, 1982]

THE DECAYING OF AMERICA

(No one noticed the spidery crack inching its way along the concrete casing of New York City's 65-year-old water tunnel No. 1. But one weekday morning 600 feet below the Bronx, the steady torrent of water loosened one chunk of concrete, then another, then another, until an underground landslide closed the tunnel off. Manhattan's water trickled to a stop. Within minutes pumps in high-rise buildings, trying to compensate for the loss of pressure, caused a widespread blackout. Elevators stopped at mid-floor. Subways rolled dead, their antiquated electrical backup systems unable to handle the sudden load. Sewers backed up. Fires raged. Before rescue workers could come to their aid, thousands of panic-stricken New Yorkers headed for the only means of escape—the city's dilapidated bridges. Overloaded with humanity and cars, the 73-year-old Queensboro Bridge cracked, groaned and toppled into the East River.)

That vision of urban apocalypse isn't far-fetched. America's infrastructure—the vast, vital network of roads, bridges, sewers, rails and mass-transit systems—is heading toward collapse. The decay is most acute in older industrial cities, but clogged highways and strained water systems also threaten to strangle booming Sun Belt towns, and even in dusty rural communities, potholes batter chassis and jangle motorists' nerves. Two weeks ago, in one 24-hour period, an 80-year-old earthen dam burst in Colorado, sending a wall of water through the town of Estes Park, and a major aqueduct broke in Jersey City, N.J., leaving nearly 300,000 residents without drinkable water for six days. Says Robert Harpster, executive director of the Iowa League of Municipalities, "Our sewers leak like sieves, our mass transit is in bad shape and our roads look like the Ho Chi Minh trail."

Ever since the canal boom of the 1800s, public works have shaped the nation's character and accommodated its growth. But today one-quarter of the interstate-highway system is worn out and needs resurfacing. One-half of Conrail's rails and roadbeds are seriously decayed. Half of all American communities cannot expand because their water-treatment systems are at or near capacity. One-fifth of the nation's bridges are so dangerously deficient they are either restricted or closed. "We're living on our laurels of the 1950s and 1960s," says Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis. Agrees Pat Choate, co-author of "America in Ruins," a study of the crisis for the Council of State Planning Agencies: "We've been squandering a major part of our national wealth."

All told, the cost of needed repairs around the country could run as high as $3 trillion. But the bills are coming due at a time when there is little money to spare. The Reagan Administration favors cutting Federal aid for highways, bridges and pollution-control projects and plans to phase out mass-transit operating subsidies by 1985, leaving state and local governments to pick up the slack. For their own part, many states and cities are already in fiscal extremis and will be forced to spend more and more scarce funds for simple operating costs as Federal aid to other programs diminishes. Money is even tighter where strict local tax-cut measures are in effect. Under Proposition 2½, for example, Massachusetts is devoting only .5 percent of its budget this year to maintenance and repair—a policy one expert on the state's budget, Mark Ferber, calls "pennywise and pothole foolish."

At the same time, record interest rates have driven the cost of issuing municipal bonds—the traditional means of raising capital funds—prohibitively high. And other recent Federal policies have hardly helped. All Savers certificates, Individual Retirement Accounts, accelerated depreciation and "safe harbor" leasing laws have all reduced the incentives for individuals and corporations alike to invest in tax-exempt municipal bonds. "The U.S. Treasury is slowly choking the ability of states to raise money," charges Massachusetts bond counsel Francis X. Meany. Some economists warn that Reagan's plan to stimulate the growth of the private sector through tax cuts could backfire if the roads, bridges, rails and water systems that businesses depend on are allowed to collapse from too little government support.

Human Toll: Already the nation's decaying physical plant is costing Americans dearly. In Houston, for example, city planners estimate that motorists pay a "traffic congestion tax" of $800 a year in time and gasoline wasted on the city's snarled expressways. U.S. Steel spends an extra $1 million a year detouring its trucks around a closed bridge in Pittsburgh. TRIP (The Road Information Program), a highway-industry group, estimates that the aggregate cost to the private sector of bad roads and bridges is $30 billion a year—for everything from broken axles to lost business. Even worse, the infrastructure crisis is exacting a heavy human toll. A recent Federal Highway Administration study found that spending an extra $4.3 billion to fix dilapidated bridges and roads could save 480,000 injuries and 17,200 lives over fifteen years.

There are nearly as many reasons for infrastructure decay as there are potholes. Some of it stems simply from old age. Built largely in the 1950s, the interstate-highway system, for example, was designed to last only 25 years. Many roads, bridges and water systems are also bearing far greater burdens than they were ever expected to accommodate. Boston's six-lane Southeast Expressway, built in 1959 for 75,000 cars a day, is now an axle-crunching obstacle course that carries 150,000 cars daily. And everywhere, age and abuse have been compounded by neglect. Investment in public works by all levels of government has dropped by more than 25 percent since 1972 (chart, page 18). As the fiscal crises of the 1970s hit, many local officials balanced budgets by canceling preventive maintenance and deferring needed repairs. "In the choice between laying off police or maintaining sewers," says Lincoln, Neb., Mayor Helen Boosalis, "the sewers always lose."

Although billions of dollars have been spent on public works in recent years, the vast bulk of expenditures has gone not to maintain old facilities but to build ambitious new pork-barrel projects, often determined more by politics than actual need (page 18). Says E. S. Savas, Assistant Secretary for Housing and Urban Development, "Have you ever seen a politician presiding over a ribbon-cutting for an old sewer line that was repaired?" All too often the cost of such projects is wildly inflated by corruption on the part of construction firms, labor unions, public officials and organized crime—all at the taxpayers' expense (page 17). Meanwhile, the longer the repairs are put off, the costlier they become. "Deferred maintenance becomes reconstruction," says Choate's co-author, Susan Walter.

One big obstacle to good infrastructure maintenance is the very system that controls it. Responsibility for maintaining public facilities rests with more than 100 Federal agencies, as well as the 50 states, more than 3,000 counties and thousands of local agencies. In Cleveland four separate municipal departments share authority over hundreds of dilapidated bridges. In Eaton Rapids, Mich., city manager Dennis Craun has compiled a 120-page booklet of all the Federal regulations that pertain to a 90-year-old one-land bridge that is not strong enough to carry trucks or buses—but is nevertheless listed in the National Register of Historic Places, and therefore cannot be destroyed. "I'm about at the point where I'd consider driving an 80,000-pound tanker over it," he says. "That would do the trick."

Citizen opposition has also stood in the way of preventive maintenance, since road, bridge and water-main work can be inconvenient as well as costly. But as the decay worsens, some citizens are taking the lead—and some deteriorating facilities have become key political issues. Last March women in Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich., got so fed up with the potholes on Detroit's Lakeshore Road that they donned hard hats and hockey helmets and fixed them. U.S Representative Barney Frank and Margaret Heckler are fighting a re-election battle over a 76-year-old bridge in redistricted Fall River, Mass. Frank recently brought the chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee to visit the bridge; Heckler brought Drew Lewis. "If this is what is takes to get action, I'll take it," says bemused Fall River Mayor Carlton Viveiros.

Bumpy Rug: Aware of the growing potency of pothole politics and the genuine dangers of serious breakdown, many city officials are belatedly fighting to save their public facilities—at no small cost to city coffers. Chicago's Mayor Jane Byrne has announced a two-phase, $187.5 million plan to rebuild 22 bridges and viaducts, 90 intersections and 46 railroad crossings. New York City has embarked on a ten-year, $34.7 billion program to renovate streets, bridges and mass transit and work has begun on a third water tunnel. In Pittsburgh Mayor Richard Caliguiri is devoting $60 million of his city's $225 million budget this year to maintenance projects—deferring work on recreation programs. "We can no longer sweep these problems under the rug," says Cleveland's director of public utilities, Edward R. Richard. "The rug is getting too bumpy."

A sampling of the nation's worst infrastructive problems:

Highways. Still 1,500 miles short of completion, the once proud 40,500-mile interstate-highway system will need $33 billion worth of repairs in the next decade. But the Federal Highway Trust Fund, which supported the system throughout the 1960s on ever-burgeoning revenues from the 4-cent-a-gallon Federal gasoline tax, has been sorely depleted with the advent of smaller, more fuel-efficient cars. Conditions are even worse on the larger network of primary and secondary roads. The U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) estimates that the work needed to keep nonurban highways at current levels will cost more than $500 billion over the next ten years—more than Federal, state and local governments combined spent on all public works in the 1970s.

City Streets. It takes 100 pounds of asphalt to fill the average pothole, and the record-cold winter of 1982 left a plague of them—1 million, by some counts, in Chicago alone. But city officials are finding that it can also be costly to leave them unrepaired. Two years ago, after paying $20 million in negligence claims, New York City enacted a pothole "prior notice" law, exempting it from responsibility for accidents caused by any street defect not reported at least fifteen days earlier. Not to be thwarted, a citizens group called Big Apple Pothole and Sidewalk Protection Corp. sent an army of workers out to document every crack and rut in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx.

Bridges. Nationwide, 248,500 bridges—45 percent of the total—are structurally deficient or functionally obsolete. But DOT estimates that needed repairs could cost as much as $47.6 billion. Meanwhile, two Federal programs are supposed to provide for periodic inspections and aid to the most dangerous bridges, but a 1981 General Accounting Office report found that many national safety standards were not being met. Heavy trucks continue to barrel over the Mountain Avenue Bridge in Malden, Mass., for example, even though it was "posted" at a maximum of 6 tons in 1977.

Mass Transit. Believe it or not, conditions on subways and buses are actually improving in many cities. Since 1979, when two Philadelphia buses caught fire on the road and only 26 of 108 subway cars were operating on the Broad Street line one night, the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) has raised capital spending from $17 million to $110 million and even brought aged repairmen out of retirement to teach a new generation of mechanics how to fix its 1920s car motors. New York City's Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA) has embarked on a five-year, $5.8 billion renovation program, though frequent glitches with its new buses and subway cars have actually compounded maintenance problems in the vintage repair shops. Meanwhile, critics remain leery of the rescue plan, since the financing includes $1.6 billion in bonds to be paid off by farebox revenues. MTA Chairman Richard Ravitch "may be known in the future for two things," says Gene Russianoff of the watchdog group Straphangers Campaign, "rebuilding the system and the $3 fare."

Railroads. Tempers have been rising along with fares on U.S. commuter rails. In 1980 half the ridership of the Long Island Rail Road joined in a one-day strike, refusing to show their tickets. "We pay ransom for the privilege of being hermetically sealed in dirty, smelly cars," says Lorraine Pirro, a citizen adviser to New York's commuter rails, which will spend $1.3 billion on capital improvements over the next five years. Many systems are saddled with ancient equipment never designed for stop-and-go commuter service. "Edison Cars," dating back to 1923 when Thomas A. Edison threw the first switch, still make up 10 percent of the New Jersey Transit Corp.'s fleet.

Commuter headaches will be compounded later this year when Conrail gets out of the commuter-rail business, leaving local transit agencies completely responsible for 210,000 riders daily. SEPTA officials warn that unless contracts and work rules are renegotiated (the average Conrail worker earns $40,000 a year), they may have to close down the area's thirteen commuter lines. The precedents set by public takeover of bankrupt freight lines are not encouraging. In Michigan, for instance, half of the 931 miles of freight track run by the state lies dormant in disputes over subsidies.

Water and Sewage Systems. Every day more than 1 million gallons of tap water disappear through leaks beneath the streets of Berwyn, Ill. In Milwaukee there were 170 water-main breaks in January alone. And in New York City, though the complete failure of one of the two giant water tunnels is unlikely, neither has ever been inspected. Experts say a breakdown of some kind is all but certain within the next twenty years. Sometimes made of brick, wood or cast iron and often more than 100 years old, America's sewer and water systems are subterranean time bombs. Choate estimates that 756 major urban areas will have to spend $75 billion to $110 billion to maintain their water systems over the next twenty years, and just meeting pollution-control standards will cost $25 billion over the next five years.

Dams. Like the earthen dam that burst in Colorado earlier this month, many U.S. dams are tiny, aged and privately owned—yet their collapse would jeopardize hundreds of lives and homes. State and Federal officials didn't even know where many of the dams were until the 1977 collapse of a dam in Toccoa, Ga., spurred Jimmy Carter to send the Army Corps of Engineers out to survey them. In a four-year study the Corps counted 68,000 non-Federal dams. The Corps inspected nearly 9,000 in highly populated areas and found roughly one-third to be unsafe, with 130 in danger of imminent collapse. But even where repairs were ordered, they have often not been carried out, because the dams' owners either couldn't afford them or couldn't be found.

Public Buildings. "Hardly a week goes by that we don't have some kind of roof problem at one of our 29 fire stations," says St. Louis budget director Jack Webber, whose city-hall roof nearly fell in on him last year. In New York City nearly half of the 1,087 public schools are at least 50 years old and many suffer rotted windows and outdated plumbing and electrical systems. Worse still are the nation's 3,500 prisons, as many as 3,000 of which need substantial renovation or expansion. In Texas 3,800 inmates of the state penal system sleep in tents for lack of space. In some states prisoners are being paroled early to ease overcrowding.

Growing Pains. Public works in Sun Belt cities have not kept up with population growth. In sprawling Phoenix a scant 36 miles of freeway now serve a population of 1.5 million, 97 percent of whom travel by car. Every day between 1970 and 1980, roughly 250 more cars joined Houston's expressways, and traffic there has become so chronically awful—with "rush periods" lasting twelve hours a day—that some executives now commute by helicopter (page 53). Texas planners figure it will take 300 miles of new freeway and 1,400 miles of streets, costing $16.2 billion, to bring traffic conditions back to what they were in 1975.

Water is also a serious problem in the West and Sun Belt, where overtapping of ground resources causes more and more giant fissures and sinkholes. Meanwhile, the nation's ports have not kept up with the increasing demand for coal exports. At one point, 15 percent of the world's bulk coal was sitting useless at the port in Hampton Roads, Va., due to congestion in unloading.

Solutions: How will the staggering infrastructure needs be met? Proposed solutions range from a gigantic New Deal-style public-works program to increased user fees, but none will be easy. One of the most sensible ways of raising highway revenues, for example, would be to boost the Federal gas tax, which has been 4 cents a gallon since 1959. Transportation Secretary Lewis has proposed doubling the gas tax and raising levies on heavy trucks, to generate $5 billion annually. But the powerful automobile and trucking lobbies oppose Lewis's plan to use $1 billion of that revenue for mass transit, and President Reagan has vetoed the idea for now.

On their own, 31 states have raised state gas taxes and other fees in recent years and several are considering more road tolls. By charging an average of 2.4 cents per mile, for example, the 40-year-old Pennsylvania Turnpike pays for resurfacing 30 to 50 miles a year. Many communities are also raising rates for water and sewer services—systems experts say should be self-supporting. Often that requires creating a separate local agency, such as Boston's acclaimed five-year-old Water and Sewer Commission. The danger, critics warn, is that the proliferation of local agencies will diffuse accountability and multiply administrative costs.

Private businesses are also assuming a greater share of the burden—voluntarily or not. At the Sycamore housing development in Danville, Calif., where Proposition 13 prohibits raising taxes to pay for basic services, a local approval board is asking the developer to provide two new water tanks, a freeway interchange, a new elementary school and a new fire engine. The cost of course, ultimately gets passed on to consumers: the town's decree is raising the cost of each new home there by $15,000. Private donors are helping to renovate the crumbling Statue of Liberty and restore San Francisco's 107-year-old cable cars, which will shut down this September for twenty months of repairs. And in some cities business leaders are donating management expertise. "If Cleveland goes to hell, we all go to hell with it," says attorney Carlton Schnell, chairman of a coalition advising the city on its infrastructure needs.

Dabbling: In desperation, local officials are experimenting with a wide variety of other revenue-raising schemes, including selling off public buildings. The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey is considering leasing vacant office space to raise funds for a "bank for regional development" that would lend money to local governments for infrastructure needs. Others are dabbling in "leveraged leasing." New York's MTA sold 620 buses and ten commuter-rail cars to Metromedia, Inc., at $15.5 million over the cost. Metromedia will take the tax depreciation on the equipment and lease it back to the MTA, which will use the net gain for operating costs. Atlanta officials are considering an even more complicated plan. A local Lockheed plant would build a plane for a Japanese trading company, take payment in Japanese-made subway cars, then sell the cars to the transit agency for less than their usual cost.

On a larger scale, New York investment banker Felix Rohatyn has suggested a revival of the Reconstruction Finance Corp., which would issue $25 billion in federally backed loans to cities to help maintain their facilities. Aware that the infrastructure crisis coexists with record-high unemployment, the House Education and Labor Committee has proposed a massive five year, $11 billion public-works program to provide jobs ranging from painting bridges to patching potholes. And a growing number of economists and lawmakers are calling for creation of a "national capital budget" that would fund infrastructure projects outside the Federal budget, where they are currently vulnerable to spending cuts.

Whatever the mechanism—higher taxes, higher user fees or higher consumer prices—the cost of repairing the nation's physical plant will inevitably come out of citizens pockets. Already, the problems of decay and growth have pitted East against West, rural residents against city dwellers, truckers against straphangers and almost everyone against the Federal government.

Canoes? Federal allocation formulas currently favor building urban, not rural, highways—even though the expense of clearing city land can push the cost per mile as high as $500 million. Allocation formulas also favor "multiple use" waterways, rather than city water and sewer systems. "If I could figure out a way to put canoeists down there, maybe our problems would be solved," jokes New York Mayor Ed Koch. Reagan's plan to phase out mass-transit operating subsidies while continuing to fund transit capital needs has angered people on both sides of the issue. And because of opposition, the Administration is likely to table its New Federalism plan for roads that would have returned to the states their share of Federal gas taxes—along with the responsibility for maintaining highways. "Based on the amount of money it generates in gas taxes, Montana would barely pay for the signs on its highways, let alone the highways," says Lewis. "You can say fine, don't build any interstates in Montana, but what do you do when you get to the Montana border—get a horse and wagon?"

In general, the Reagan Administration believes that state and local governments rely far too heavily on the Federal government for their infrastructure needs. "The fact that there are potholes all over America doesn't mean that it's time for the Federal government to pay for filling them," says HUD's Savas. Historically, the pattern has been for the Federal government to build major public works, but leave them to states and cities to repair—and some local officials are beginning to decide that they can't afford the Federal largesse. Cincinnati, for example, has adopted a policy of "planned shrinkage" of its physical plant where possible—even turning down Federal grants to concentrate its own funds on maintaining what it has.

Scaling Back: As the national budget debate increasingly becomes one of guns vs. butter vs. asphalt, planned shrinkage may become the public-works policy of the future. Already, officials doubt that the interstate-highway system, as originally conceived, will ever be completed. The Federal government has indefinitely postponed building the once planned $3 billion rail and road system for the congested Houston area and the proposed $2.1 billion "people mover" in Los Angeles. Not a single road links Juneau to the rest of Alaska, but the cost of building one may be too high even for that oil-rich state.

What will such decisions mean for the boom towns of the future? And if older cities are allowed to decay and contract, can citizens who "vote with their feet," as Reagan has suggested, hope to find better conditions anywhere else? In past decades public works made America a nation of highways, of automobiles, of vital cities and water systems that are the envy of the world. Today's hard choices will determine the shape of America in the decades to come.●

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, over the years the Great Lakes have provided, not only Michigan, but many other States with an abundant and tasty source of fresh water fish. It has provided the State of Michigan with resource which has proven invaluable not only from a recreational standpoint but also as an economic boost to out State's economy.

It is my pleasure to have the opportunity to give recognition to the town of Bay Port, Mich., which on August 1 is once again holding its annual Bay Port Fish Sandwich Day. Bay Port's fish sandwich not only is well known in the Michigan area but it has also developed an international following, rumored to have been personally requested by Queen Elizabeth. This event has become bigger and better every year and this year should prove no exception.●

CARMAN PRAISES CONGRESSIONAL STAFF

HON. GREGORY W. CARMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. CARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion in praise of my Washington and district office staff. In my time here, I have come to know a number of congressional staff persons. I have found them all to be competent, dedicated, talented, hard-working individuals. Yet, I know of no Congressman as fortunate as I am when it comes to the first rate group of men and women who serve on my staff.

I have come to know each individual, both professionally and personally. Each has shown exemplary dedication both to the House of Representatives and to me. They have worked long, hard hours in support of my public and legislative activities, and I have come to value highly their depth of knowledge and useful counsel. They deserve a great deal of credit for the work I have been able to do well in this Chamber. I rise today to extend public recognition and my own deep personal gratitude to these individuals.

I have developed a deep respect for my Washington staff. Jeff Craven, Lee Ann Frank, Steve Heminger, Jonathan Hill, Len Johnson, Andre LeTendre, Gene Meyer, Lois McKenna, John Palafoutas, and Felice Pelosi have accomplished every task I have given them with admirable diligence and dedication. They have displayed a true professionalism in their dealings with the offices of this House, with the interests and problems of my constituents, and the numerous governmental agencies both in and out of Washington with which I have worked.

Joan Camisa, Ethel Contogine, Larry Cregan, Anthony Fabrizio, Robert Mazze, Barbara Sposato, and Nancy Wohlsen on my district office staff have served ably and well. During the past 2 years, they have developed an excellent relationship with my constituents in the Third District of New York. As I am sure every Congressman ideally desires, my district office staff has served as a highly effective liaison between me, in my congressional work in Washington, and the good people of Long Island whom I represent.

I also have learned to respect and appreciate the contributions made by the interns in my office. Ginna Calcagnini, Paul Fishbin, Lori Harmon, Maria Humeres, Lois Mary McKenna, Patricia Roberts, and Robert Shea have performed consistently well in their service to the Congress and to my staff.

When I leave this Congress, my deepest and most lasting memories will be those of my staff. We have worked hard together; we have accomplished a great deal together; we have enjoyed the thrills and shared the sorrows of public life together; we are professional associates and dear friends.

As you and I have heard sung often, "It has been good to know you," and "May the good Lord bless and keep you until we meet again."●

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR 1992

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the 500th year anniversary of the discovery of North America is approaching. The year 1992 will mark 500 years after Columbus sailed to this continent in 1492. Chicago, one of the largest cities in our Nation, recently received an initial approval in June 1982, by the Bureau of International Expositions in Paris (BIE) to be the sight of a 1992 World's Fair entitled the "Age of Discovery." The fair has been described in the Chicago Tribune as an "eye-popping, damn-the-recession masterplan" to create employment, revenue, and business incentives for the city, the Midwest, and the Nation.

The Chicago World's Fair 1992 Corp., a not-for-profit group of private and civic leaders, created a plan to present to the BIE in Paris. Thoroughly displaying American preparedness and professionalism the Fair Corp., made a gala presentation in December 1981, to convince the bureau's members that Chicago's lakefront would be the most attractive area for a world's fair to close the 20th century in glory, optimism, and creativity. Chicago's plan included pictures of the site, charts, over 700 pages of documents, and a multimedia show using 16 slide projectors and a 16-millimeter movie projector. The New York Times described Chicago's approach to the review bureau in Paris as a grand effort "to extol the Windy City's virtues with fire and thunder."

Public initiative aided the private sector's blitz to make the 1992 fair a reality. The Fair Corp. and Mayor

Jane Byrne of Chicago hosted a four-person inspection team from Paris in May 1982, immediately before the provisional approval was given by the BIE. They acted as a welcoming committee in order to dazzle the delegates from Paris during their visit to Chicago; a "whirlwind of briefing sessions and dining" entertained the visitors. Chicago had previously been designated in Washington, D.C. as the U.S. candidate for a 1990's world's fair; the hosts wanted to assure initial approval by the Paris council in June 1982. The final go ahead will be granted at the BIE's general assembly meeting in November or December 1982.

Gloriously drawn maps describe a 500-acre lakefront site, 200 acres of which will be landfill in Lake Michigan. More specifically, the area is delimited by Balbo Drive on the north end of the city to 31st Street to the south, the Illinois Central Gulf Railroad tracks to the west, and the lake/landfill area on the east. Seventeen sites were proposed by major architectural firms in the city, including Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, builders of the world famous skyscraper, the John Hancock Building. Major monuments already standing on the site grounds include Chicago's Shedd Aquarium, the Adler Planetarium, the Field Museum, Soldier Field, and Meigs Field. The people of Illinois and Chicago are excited by the many ideas for this global celebration.

Fair Corp's outline includes great expectations for the fair. Various boards of the city, the bureau of street traffic, bureau of transportation planning, Chicago Urban Transportation District, Chicago Transit Authority, Chicago Area Transportation Study, Illinois Department of Transportation, and the traffic consulting and urban planning firm of Barton-Aschman Associates, have made predictions of the fair's success. The planners foresee: 65 million visitors between April and October; exhibits from 70 countries; new jobs, parks, transportation lines, hotels, beaches, and harbors; millions of dollars in revenue from enhanced trade and commerce; finally, a once-in-a-lifetime education available to fairgoers of all ages. These ideas are just samplings of the shining outcome of the Age of Discovery.

In anticipation of the fair the corporation hopes to accomplish city improvements to aid crowd control as well as visitors' access to the fair grounds. The Dan Ryan Expressway will be widened from 8 to 10 lanes between the Eisenhower and Stevenson Expressway interchanges in the downtown-lakefront area. A south loop connector expressway will run north from the present Stevenson Expressway to a large remote parking lot at 18th Street north of Chicago's Chinatown area. The South Loop New Town is a rapidly self-improving area.

Further positive mutations are planned: Shifting the northbound lanes of Lake Shore Drive to allow motoring along the lakefront, as well as a new interchange to serve Soldier Field. East-west pedestrian walkways and bridges at three points west of the fairgrounds will help fairgoers cross the Illinois Central Gulf Railroad tracks. The festival planners are appropriately seizing the opportunity and spirit of the world's fair to benefit the city and enhance transportation along the sparkling freshwater shores of Lake Michigan.

Of major concern to the planners is daily crowd management, 700,000 visitors are expected each day where 34,000 parking spaces are available. The city will prepare itself to receive the overflow. Parking lots to facilitate the accommodation of thousands of cars will replace where the Amtrak railroad stands at present. Cost allocations shared by private and public sectors will be established to fund the ambitious, inspiring projects. Projected cost of the improvements runs near $200 million, a sum, incidentally, substantially less than the cost of the Senate Office Building extension.

A healthy exchange of ideas is occurring each day concerning daily fair management. A giant fleet of buses—about 455—will shuttle visitors to and from the Loop area. Two hundred of the 2,400 buses of the CTA's line will be used. A rail shuttle bordering the Chicago riverbank, as well as passenger boats floating through Lake Michigan and the Chicago River are speculations and considerations to aid tourist mobility.

A prominent transportation project includes a rapid transit line running between Chicago's Midway Airport and the Downtown Loop. The motivation for this transportation project is a product of much of the success from work already in progress: The rapid transit extension to the Nation's busiest airport, O'Hare International; the facelift of the "L", the Downtown Loop's elevated metro; and the connection of the Dan Ryan and Howard rapid transit lines. It is evident that lively enthusiasm characterizes the attitudes of the mappers of this future world celebration.

Transportation considerations accompany practical considerations such as sewer and water connections, and construction on the sanitary district's deep tunnel below the Chicago River. These renovations have practical future implications. The sewer and waterlines will be needed as the Near South side changes from an unpopulated railyard area to a residential neighborhood. Success will be assured for the world's fair group because of their attempt to consider the needs of a variety of sections of the city as well as the future impact of their actions and improvements for these areas.

Chicago hosted two world's fairs previously, The 1893 Columbian Exposition realized profits of $500,000 as well as the 1933-34 Chicago World's Fair "Century of Progress" which also realized $500,000 in profits. The 1992 Fair's $700 million price is expected to be covered and to produce a profit as well.

The year 1992 seems a far jump in time, yet many are looking beyond that year to the city's future. Futuristic communication and transit systems are being considered: A monorail linking McCormick Place, a major national convention center on the lakefront, to the heart of the city further west; or, perhaps, a weather-free tunnel to Soldier Field. These sophisticated systems would remain once the fair is dismantled. The planners' ideas are imaginative and provocative, guaranteed to create a jubilant, significant world's fair.

Environmentalists are voicing their interest and concerns for the "Age of Discovery" fair. A manmade island along Chicago's lakefront could impact on lake currents, shoreline erosion, fish and wildlife, navigation, as well as recreation and water quality. Three sources of landfill are being considered: Sand dunes from the State of Michigan, industrial slag, or rock from Chicago's deep tunnel project for water pollution and flood control. The new island's landmass is expected to cost $120 million. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency, and the Illinois Transportation Department are agencies involved in the assessment of costs and planning.

Some of the environmentalists appear to want to place blockades in the path of success on which the fair is riding. Thomas G. Ayers, president of Fair Corp., comments that doomsayers like to "point out that these are recessionary times * * * that this is not a prudent time to be planning such a large undertaking." Certainly, negative voices are vocalized often when inspiring forward-reaching ideas are set forth. Rather, the fair is medicine at a crucial point in our economic period. Thirty thousand temporary jobs will be created, tax revenues produced, and an enduring cultural educational experience. Despite ever present pessimism, the significance of a world's fair in Chicago is dawning, injecting excitement and spirit in all who come into contact with the plans for the festivities.

Stunning architectural introductions have marked world fairs since 1851. The Crystal Palace designed by Joseph Paxton in London was a landmark of the 1851 London World Fair. The Crystal Palace was 1,848 feet long and 108 feet tall; prefabricated glass, iron, and wood were assembled in less than 5 months. Paris' famous Eiffel Tower was erected in 1889 at the Paris Exposition Universelle. Renowned architects such as Louis Sullivan, Charles Atwood, and Frank Lloyd Wright have all constructed innovative buildings in the city and surrounding suburbs.

Louis Sullivan designed white neoclassical buildings along the South Side lakefront in the 1893 Columbian Exposition. Charles Atwood designed the Museum of Science and Industry, as well as an early skyscraper in the Loop, the Reliance Building, well ahead of his time. The Prairie School design by Frank Lloyd Wright, and the Holabird & Roche style in Chicago both contrasted the neoclassic trend introduced in Chicago at that time. Daniel Burnham devised a lakefront park system for Chicago in 1909. Burnham drew many ideas directly from the 1893 Columbian Exposition.

The Art Nouveau style in 1900 predominated the Paris Fair at the turn of the century. Art Deco made a great impact 25 years later in 1925 at the Exposition International des Arts Decoratifs et Industriels Modernes. Art Deco made a profound statement in the United States, especially in New York City at Rockefeller Center. Four years later, in 1929, at the Barcelona International Exposition Mies Van der Rohe installed an elegant marble and glass pavilion, for which he also designed a chair covered in white leather, the celebrated Barcelona Chair.

Recent world fair architectural experiments have included, in 1960, Alfred Caldwell's 2,000 feet square, 18 stories high cable-suspended roof building which could hold 1 million persons. The University of Illinois Chicago Circle campus produced a plan for an inflatable exhibition structure 1 mile long and 500 feet wide. Bigness, beauty, and computer-assisted structure engineering will all aid architectural modern thinking at Chicago's 1992 World's Fair.

The history of world's fairs is long and impressive. The first recorded fairs mentioned in the Bible were held in Asia and Africa before the birth of Christ. Often, fairs were religious celebrations. Merchants and people throughout the Middle Ages traveled hundreds of miles to attend fairs. Their lives were much more lonely than our lives today, and the week of a fair was an exciting time when they could meet and be merry and gay with many other people.

In 1851 in London the "Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of All Nations" was set in Hyde Park. At this fair Antoine Sax displayed his new invention, the saxophone. The United States displayed the Colt revolver, McCormick's reaper for harvesting farmers' fields, chewing tobacco, and false teeth.

In 1853-54 America held its first world's fair in New York. China, glass, artificial flowers, hats, wigs, modern transportation including horse-drawn carriages, and fire engines were displayed. Farm machinery, Taylor's printing press, House's telegraph, and cannons showed the progress of industry and invention.

In 1876, the Centennial Exhibition was held in Philadelphia. New inventions at this fair included a refrigerator car for use in trains, the latest printing press, Thomas Edison's automatic telegraph, and the typewriter. Alexander Graham Bell brought his new talking instrument to the exhibition; 167 buildings were constructed, and the new Corliss steam engine powered all the fair machinery. An enormous elevator could house 40 people and carried fairgoers to the top of an observatory.

Chicago hosted the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition to commemorate the 400th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America in 1492. George Washington Gale Ferris, an engineer, constructed the Ferris Wheel which held 36 cars each large enough to hold 36 people in one car. Over 1,000 men, women, and children revolved each time the wheel turned. This fair was described as the "White City" because the buildings shone marble white. The Palace of Electricity was a special attraction. The question was raised about electricity similar to the questions being raised today about nuclear energy: would it be a dangerous toy, or a new power to serve man? George Westinghouse developed a new electric light bulb to light the fair. The first electric railway in the world indicated the progress being made in transportation.

St. Louis hosted the 1904 Universal Exposition to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Louisiana Purchase. By 1904 cars and airplanes were modern wonders. Iced tea was a clever innovation at this fair which refreshed hundreds of visitors. A crafty concessionaire dreamed up the ice cream cone, so one could hold the creamy cold substance while walking. Nearly every State had a building, and the St. Louis fair provided the stadium for the first Olympic Games ever held in America.

Two California world's fairs, San Francisco in 1915, and San Diego in 1915-16, celebrated the completion of the Panama Canal. The San Francisco fair was called the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Thomas Edison attended this fair, also called the Light Fair. A transcontinental telephone line connected California and New Jersey. The Panama-California International Exposition in San Diego was a grand showplace. Farming and car exhibits adorned the fair. One could park his car on one of the first and, then, largest parking lots for 25 cents.

Chicago held the world's fair in 1933-34 and called it the Century of Progress. The 1933 fair celebrated science and industry as well as Chicago's 100th anniversary. In 1833, 100 years earlier, Fort Dearborn was a swampy outpost hardly resembling the magnificent city that Chicago had become by 1933. An elevator lifted crowds to a rocket platform where a car would then transport passengers from one tall tower to another. The Drama of Transportation exhibit revealed Henry Ford's lifework and the future of transportation.

San Francisco hosted the Golden Gate International Exposition in 1939-40. The completion of two new bridges, the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge and the Golden Gate Bridge, was celebrated. In the same years, 1939-40, New York City projected the world of tomorrow. New York City celebrated the 150th anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States. New York's Building the World of Tomorrow fair introduced nylon, home air-conditioning, and television. A time capsule was encased and erected to tell the story of our civilization as it was in 1939.

The start of the atomic age marked the Brussels World Fair in 1958. Atomic powerplants, an atomic powered clock, and space satellites were the U.S. exhibits. "Man in the Space Age" was the theme of the Seattle World's Fair 4 years following the Brussels' Fair, in 1962. A 600-foot space needle was constructed in Seattle with a revolving top. A 4,600 gallon pool of perfume and a 25,000 pound cake added flamboyance to Seattle's Fair.

In New York between 1964 and 1965 an enormous unisphere towered 135 feet in the air. Flushing Meadow Park held this world's fair, "Man's Achievements on a Shrinking Globe in an Expanding Universe." During the same decade the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York City opened. Shea Stadium remains a permanent reminder of this fair. Most recently, the Knoxville World's Fair, "Energy Turns the World," is in progress, and by the end of the summer of 1982 11 million people will have visited Knoxville to view 1980's energy development and deployment capabilities.

The history of world's fairs has been active and spectacular. Chicago's "Age of Discovery" in 1992 will prove to be just as spectacular, probably more so. Hundreds of national and international exhibits, concerts, theater productions, business, science and industry shows, as well as an amusement park will entertain crowds daily.

Cries of support for the fair have surfaced in all parts of the city. Chicago is a tough, enduring city of the future. The Chicago Tribune portrays that "Chicago always has been a city of vitality and growth—rising from the ashes of a devastating fire to become an international mecca of business and commerce." The fair will benefit the entire city because visitors will want to explore all corners of the city, ethnic neighborhoods, and restaurants. A world's fair in 1992 could be to Chicago like a family having friends to dinner, the entire city, like a house, will be spruced up to make the best impression possible. Chicago is not waiting for the economy to turn around, yet through action it is causing a turn around. This positive spirit has made the city great. "Chicago has built its reputation on transforming dreams into realities, and as such, has always been the master of its destiny." Chicago is setting the example on how to close the 20th century in pomp and pageantry.

The citizens of the city and Illinois welcome the world to the Chicago World's Fair in 1992 the "Age of Discovery" will be an age of discovery of the city of Chicago by millions from every nation. The "Age of Discovery" will also exhibit the genious of freedom and democracy as well as the infinite capabilities of every man and woman where a spirit of peace and cooperation abounds. When discovery occurs progress is made which reaffirms man's intuitive commitment to the enrichment of life of Earth.

CZECHOSLOVAK-AMERICAN FESTIVAL

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, well over a century ago, many of the proud industrious people of Central and Eastern Europe—Czechs, Moravians, Slovaks, and Carpatho-Ruthenians—came across the ocean to our young and proud Nation. Several of these new Americans traveled out from our eastern shores to finally settle in Michigan.

These Czechoslovak-Americans have been a great asset to our Nation and to my home State. That is why I am very honored to be able to call attention to the Fifth Annual Czechoslovak-American Festival which will be held this August 13, 14, and 15 in the Benjamin F. Yack Arena in Wyandotte, Mich. This grand event will be preceded by the Second Annual Sokol Detroit Heritage Run on August 7 on Belle Isle in Detroit.

Sokol Detroit is a Czechoslovak nonprofit athletic and cultural organization that was created over 100 years ago in Detroit. Sokol is dedicated to instilling in its members a "sound mind and a sound body through gymnastics." Sokol has a cultural center and works to promote Czechoslovak culture in the southeast Michigan area.

The Sokol Heritage Run is actually two runs, a 10,000 meter and a 5,000 meter. These runs are a multiethnic event that affords the many Americans of different ethnic origins an opportunity to show their cultural pride in a healthy, exhilarating way.

The Czechoslovak-American Festival will be a terrific event for all peoples of all backgrounds and origins—a wonderful opportunity to enjoy the sights, sounds, tastes, and smells of Czechoslovakia. The best of the rich culture from all the four major regions of Czechoslovakia will be represented: Bohemia, Moravia, Slovakia, and Carpatho-Ruthernia. There will be bands and dancing, gymnastic demonstrations, and many, many palatable delights.

The Second Annual Sokol Detroit Heritage Run and the Fifth Annual Czechoslovak-American Festival will both be enjoyable and culturally rich occasions. I am happy and honored to be able to call attention to them.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE LINKS OF NASHVILLE

HON. WILLIAM HILL BONER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the work of the Music City Chapter of the Links, Inc., in Nashville, Tenn., for their contributions to the arts in Tennessee. During this time in cutbacks of Federal funds going to arts projects, I would especially like to mention the "Link-Arts" project of the organization. "Link-Arts" refers to the process of linking artists with business, government, church, and community leaders to develop ongoing professional relationships.

The Links also sponsors an annual "Showcase of Young Artists." It is conceived as an avenue for promoting greater community support and awareness of Tennessee artists, especially those who are working to make a name for themselves. It is a way of giving a helping hand to talented persons who may not have received the level of recognition they deserve.

I commend the Links of Nashville for their desire to promote the philosophy that practicing artists in the community "speak the language of the community" and can best articulate artistically the life of that community.●

GUN CONTROL EFFORT CONTINUES

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, murders and other crimes with handguns continue at a shockingly high rate in our Nation. Every week more than 400 Americans are killed with handguns and more than 5,000 are wounded in crimes involving handguns. This is why most Americans favor handgun control. They do not want to stop hunting or target shooting. What people want are laws that keep handguns out of the hands of criminals and heavy sentences for those who are convicted of crimes committed with guns. I have introduced legislation to do this, as have other Members of Congress.

An article appeared in the New York Times on July 22 which addresses the issue of gun control. The author, Thomas A. Reppetto, president of the Citizens Crime Commission of New York, has written a well-documented piece on this subject which I urge all Members of Congress to read. He points out that, in 1980, New York State tightened its laws against illegal guns and my State is now witnessing a reduction in the number of gun murders. Other States and communities are adopting stronger gun legislation. I hope that the Congress realizes that this is what the American people want. It is one very positive step the Federal Government can take against crime.

[From the New York Times, July 22, 1982]

RED LIGHT FOR GUNS

(By Thomas A. Reppetto)

Recently in New York City two men were shot dead during a robbery in a bathroom of a Wall Street area skyscraper; a biker was gunned to death riding through Central Park on the way to work, and a young girl was shot and killed in a West Side boutique after telling a customer the store did not carry men's clothing. In 1980, the F.B.I. reported 23,044 murders in the United States, approximately 62 percent of them with guns. In less than 20 years the number of gun murders has tripled.

Can anything be done to stem the tide? Of course: stop the traffic in weapons. There are some sensible suggestions on the table. The question is whether Congress and the White House will enact them into law.

The Population Studies Center of the University of Michigan tried to determine why homicides, particularly gun murders, were increasing when deaths from many other causes were declining. Their report, published in 1980, postulated that the reason was the greater availability of guns. In the 1950's about 400,000 handguns were available annually while in the 1970's the number was approximately 2,000,000.

The statistics are even more alarming when viewed beyond the perspective of a single year. In 1974 a group of researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology calculated that, at homocide levels then current, lower than today's, a male who was born and continued to live in one of American's 50 most populous cities had one chance in 33 of dying by murder. The magnitude of this finding can be assessed by noting that a United States serviceman in World War II had one chance in 50 of dying from combat.

New York City illustrates the problem in urban areas. Between 1960 and 1980, murders without guns increased about 150 percent, to 754 from 293, while gun murders rose about 1,000 percent, to 1,060 from 97. If this trend continues, by the end of the century New York City will record over 10,000 gun murders a year.

Are we to sit passively while murder increases or will we do something about it? The usual long-term answers such as "remake society" or "alter individual psyches," even if they could be accomplished, would take decades during which thousands would die needlessly. The only realistic short-term answer is action against illegal firearms, a category not to be confused with legal weapons used by hunters, target shooters, security personnel or for protection of a home or business.

In 1980, New York State tightened its laws against illegal guns. As a result more people are being sentenced to a minimum year in jail if they are convicted of carrying an unlicensed firearm away from their home or place of business. This law may be having some effect. In 1981 the number of gun murders remained at the 1980 level, and in the first four months of 1982 it was down 11 percent. The problem, however, transcends the enforcement capacity of local government.

In 1968, Congress enacted a gun control statute and assigned its enforcement to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms of the United States Treasury. Among other provisions, it prohibited the sale of guns to minors, felons or nonresidents of the state of purchase.

The 1968 statute did not stop the interstate traffic in illegal guns. For example, in 1978 the New York County District Attorney's Office and the Treasury's bureau traced the source of 588 illegal guns seized in the New York City. All but 97 came from outside the city, most from other states. Of those from the city, most were stolen.

Last year, the United States Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime reviewed the problem. It found that the old law amounted largely to an honor system for criminals. It urged instead a waiting period for the purchase of a handgun to allow a mandatory records check to insure that the purchaser was not proscribed by law from possessing such a weapon. It also urged that gun owners be required to report the theft of loss of their weapons and that the Federal Government prosecute previously convicted felons arrested by local authorities for illegal gun possession in cases covered by more stringent Federal statutes.

The task force recommendations have not been adopted. Meanwhile, Congress and the White House are engaged in a depressing debate over whether Federal law enforcement should be weakened or strengthened and which agency, if any, should carry it out. But strong Federal law enforcement is needed now. The alternative is not just a continuation of the current intolerable situation but, most likely, continued astronomical increases in murder by guns, particularly in cities such as New York. When people must fear being shot to death when going to the bathroom, we are very near the saturation point of violence., Further increases would spell the end of any hope for a civilized existence in our urban centers.●

PLO PROPAGANDA GAME

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, the delegation of House Members who met with Yasir Arafat this past weekend in Beirut created an appalling spectacle by allowing themselves to be used as pawns in a PLO propaganda game.

As should have been immediately clear to any informed observer, the Arafat document pertaining to U.N. resolutions was a worthless ambiguity. It was crafted to create the appearance of movement in a PLO policy that, in fact, remains unchanged and implacably hostile to the State of Israel. Once again, the PLO refused to recognize the right of the State of Israel to exist, and to renounce terrorism as an instrument for the conduct of their foreign policy.

I am shocked that Members of Congress would perform as props in a PLO media stunt when the lives of tens of thousands human beings hang in the balance. This is a time for the Congress and the American people to give full support to the diplomatic effort to get the 6,000 PLO guerillas and their Syrian supporters out of Lebanon. Were these goals reached, the Israelis too would leave Lebanon giving that beleaguered nation its first chance in nearly a decade for true independence and peace.

The type of freelance meddling in the Lebanese crisis undertaken by our colleagues can only undermine the current peace effort, and deserves to be soundly condemned. As should have been picked up by the press analysis of this visit, but was not, this group was not representative of the views of the Members of the House, but consisted overwhelmingly of Members who have long expressed pro-PLO sentiments and have been consistently hostile to the interests of Israel. Long before the present Lebanese crisis came into being, those same Members were claiming for Arafat a moderation that he has been unwilling by word or deed to express for himself or his terrorist organization.●

THE NATIONAL VOTER PARTICIPATION ACT OF 1982

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to permit privately sponsored contests to promote voting and voter registration, similar to a sweepstakes that was held in connection with the June 8 California primary election. It is my view that this legislation, the National Voter Participation Act of 1982, represents an innovative means to address the steady decline in the number of Americans who vote.

Prior to the California primary, a dedicated individual named Ed Shaw conceived an original idea which he hoped would encourage Californians to vote. He sponsored a sweepstakes for primary election voters and offered over $5 million in privately donated prizes as an incentive for these voters to cast their ballots. Any person who mailed a ballot stub to Mr. Shaw was eligible to participate in this contest and over 700,000 voters responded.

Mr. Shaw initially had received confirmation from California Secretary of State March Fong Eu that the proposed sweepstakes did not violate either Federal or State law as long as voters were not rewarded for voting in a certain way or for not voting. The U.S. Justice Department overruled Secretary Eu's decision last week, however, and held that such a sweepstakes did not conform to Federal statues despite its stated purpose of encouraging citizen participation in the electoral process and its nonpartisan nature.

Given that the number of Americans who are eligible to vote and actually do vote has dropped by 17 percent over the past 20 years, we need to discuss all the possible ways in which to reverse this disturbing trend. My legislation will allow private individuals, like Mr. Shaw, to organize nonprofit, nonpartisan voter lotteries which are conducted without participant cost thereby encouraging individuals to register to vote and/or vote. This bill does not create any mechanism for setting up a voter lottery but rather amends Federal law so as to permit private individuals or groups to establish these contests.

While I believe that the best inducements to voting are good candidates and a substantial discussion of the issues, I also believe that there are many citizens who have not voted and never will vote unless they are motivated to do so in some creative way. A voters' sweepstakes could stimulate first-time voters to develop an interest in the electoral process and to continue going to the polls and participating in elections in future years.●

WE SHOULD NOT RELAX THE CORPORATE ANTIBRIBERY LAW

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the July 15 Wall Street Journal editorial on the efforts to weaken the 1977 antibribery laws. As the article notes, the problems that led to the formulation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act have not been mitigated and the need for the act has not been obviated.

There is a feisty campaign, backed by the Reagan administration, to weaken several provisions in the 1977 antibribery laws. Rather than pushing for a quick fix, the House Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance Subcommittee has held numerous oversight hearings to assess the need for and the impact of the act. I concur with this editorial that we must not rush to change a law for which there remains a demonstrated need. I urge my colleagues to review this editorial.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 15, 1982]

WE SHOULD NOT RELAX THE CORPORATE ANTI-BRIBERY LAW

(By Norman C. Miller)

WASHINGTON.—Repercussions still are being felt from the disgraceful scandal of the mid-1970s when over 450 U.S. corporations were found to have bribed influential foreigners to promote sales abroad.

Just the other day, Boeing Co. was fined $400,000 after it pleaded guilty to concealing questionable payments to foreign agents on overseas aircraft sales between 1971 and 1977. And in Japan last month, two former Japanese government officials were convicted of taking bribes in connection with sales of Lockheed Corp. planes during the 1970s.

Nonetheless, there is a determined campaign to seriously weaken an anti-bribery law passed in 1977, even before all the criminal cases spawned by the foreign-bribery scandal are completed. With the Reagan administration' backing, the Senate has passed a bill that would loosen accounting rules designed to prevent creation of off-books slush funds. The bill also would make it tougher to prove bribery charges against top corporate officials. Business lobbyists are pressuring a House subcommittee to pass a companion bill soon.

Amid pious assurances that no one wants to go back to the bad old bribery days, business spokesmen argue that the 1977 Foreign Corrupt Practices Act imposes too much expensive red tape on companies and inhibits exports. It is un unconvincing argument, not least because U.S. exports in fact have increased substantially since enactment of the law.

Moreover, a mountain of evidence developed in foreign-bribery cases demonstrates that strict accounting rules are vital to guard against illegal payoffs via labyrinthine routes. It is essential, too, for top managers to bear responsibility for the prevention of bribes, as the current law induces them to do.

The need to keep the strict 1977 law is underscored by a recent report of a panel of outside directors of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. The ITT directors, as a result of a court order, conducted exhaustive investigations into bribery practices by units of the world-wide corporation and internal efforts to end bribery. Their report isn't altogether reassuring, despite an apparently sincere effort by top ITT management to prevent bribery.

To begin with, the scale of past bribery by ITT units was bigger than corporation officials thought. In 1976, the directors' panel first estimated that payments of bribes to win contracts totaled $3.8 million during 1971-75. In 1978, another investigation increased the estimate to $8.7 million. This year the directors reported discovering several new cases of bribery, raising the total estimate of questionable payments to $14 million.

And, in what was termed an "extremely disturbing" finding, the ITT directors disclosed that bribery had continued in some ITT units as recently as last year—well after passage of the U.S. anti-bribery law and the establishment by ITT of seemingly strict controls.

One case involved payments of $830,000 to an Austrian official during 1976-79 for helping an ITT subsidiary win a construction contract for the Vienna general hospital. The incident involved ITT in a nasty scandal in Austria, as four officials of an ITT unit were convicted by Austrian courts.

A second and more mysterious case involved questionable payments apparently totaling millions of dollars to an agent for ITT Europe in an unidentified country. Between 1975 and 1979 the agent requested commissions on sales about seven times above his normal fee, explaining that the payments were needed for a "third party" or to meet "local commitments." Despite the indications that the huge commissions might be for bribery, ITT officials approved the payments readily. Ironically, according to the directors' reports, the agent pocketed the big commissions himself.

The ITT directors' panel placed the blame for continued incidents of bribery squarely on top management. "The highest levels of the corporation were aware of the reluctance of foreign managers to accept what many of them viewed as exported American morality," the directors' report said. "We have found no evidence that prior senior management had knowledge of any questionable payments, but their efforts were insufficient to impress upon foreign managers the importance of complying with the (anti-bribery) policies."

The ITT directors expressed confidence that the company's antibribery efforts will be successful now that "clear and firm" directives have been established by current top managers, who assumed office in 1980. But the panel also stressed the need for "consistent vigor" in enforcing the policies, noting that some company comptrollers and lawyers had been lax in enforcing "clearly established" accounting controls.

The ITT directors didn't address themselves to the effects of the 1977 U.S. antibribery law. But obviously, if enforcement of corporate anti-bribery policies is difficult under the current law, it would be much more difficult should Congress relax the law. Easing of the law might well be taken as a signal from Washington that bribery to promote sales abroad won't be investigated vigorously. Without a strong federal legal deterrent, self-policing efforts by U.S. corporations likely would erode and bribery abroad would flourish again.

There is a barely disguised argument that only naive moral Puritans care whether U.S. corporations bribe foreigners in strange lands. Payoffs are a necessary way of doing business in many countries, the argument runs, so U.S. companies shouldn't be put at a competitive disadvantage.

This argument ignores evidence that many U.S. companies have succeeded in selling abroad without ever resorting to bribery. It ignores the steady rise of U.S. exports since the anti-bribery law was passed. And it ignores the dangers to U.S. foreign policy interests of bribery by U.S. companies; in the mid-1970s the bribery scandal destabilized governments in Japan, South Korea, the Netherlands and other nations.

The 1977 anti-bribery law is an effective deterrent. There is no good reason to relax it.●

VOTING RECORD

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DORGAN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, July 23, due to a previous commitment in North Dakota, I was unable to cast my vote on four occasions. I would like the record to show that had I been present, I would have cast my vote as follows:

House Resolution 489: Ordering the previous question on the rule on the Airport and Airway Improvement Act (defeated 135-178). Dorgan—nay. Because I am opposed to increased taxation of the aviation industry, I would have voted against the proposed rule which prevented any amendments to that section of the bill.

House Resolution 528: Agreeing to the rule on Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (passed 301-2). Dorgan—yea.

House Resolution 529: Agreeing to the rule on Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act (passed 254-22). Dorgan—yea.

House Resolution 5427: Resolving into Committee to debate Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act (passed 238-8). Dorgan—yea.●

A SHORTER WORKWEEK IN THE 1980'S

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, the idea of a shorter workweek and worksharing, historically, has functioned to curb unemployment and spread employment in a more efficient manner among a larger number of workers. The shorter workweek idea should be considered today as an alternative means to alleviate the recession and reduce the massive unemployment. H.R. 1784 is legislation I have introduced to reduce the workweek to 35 hours, raise the premium rate of pay for overtime, and eliminate compulsory overtime.

William McGaughey, Jr., author of a book on the shorter workweek, "A Shorter Workweek in the 1980's," recently wrote an article in defense of a reduced workweek and work-sharing. Published in the Los Angeles Times on June 25, 1982, I commend to my colleagues the article, which follows.

IT'S TIME TO SHARE THE WORK AND THE PIE

When the Great Depression hit, one of the earliest proposals to fight unemployment was the idea of reducing the workweek and weekly pay so that more workers could stay on the payroll. At President Herbert Hoover's urging, the president of Standard Oil of New Jersey (now Exxon) went on a national tour to urge worktime reductions. In 1933, the U.S. Senate overwhelmingly passed a 30-hour workweek bill, supported by organized labor. Although President Franklin D. Roosevelt opposed that particular measure, he incorporated the work-sharing approach in his Administration's program for national recovery. The two most important pieces of federal work-hours legislation, the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act, date from the late Depression years.

Historically, proposals to reduce the workweek have been associated with hard times. It has seemed natural that, in periods of sorest need, the humane impulse to share income and work with the unemployed should find strong expression. As an unfortunate consequence, though, the shorter-workweek proposal has come to be regarded in a negative light—as a temporary "quick fix"—rather than as a solid advancement in workers' living standards. Indeed, in the current recession some employers appear to be using shortened hours to "ratchet down" wages to a permanently lower level.

Critics of shorter-workweek legislation frequently point out that the Fair Labor Standards Act did not create many new jobs, because the average workweek was already under 40 hours (thanks to the Depression) when it went into effect. What they ignore, however, is that such legal incentives to cap hours of work may have set the stage for broad-based prosperity in the late 1940's and 1950's. Because weekly hours did not revert to their pre-Depression level, it became possible for more Americans to find employment in the post-war years, which then set off a boom in consumer spending.

Perhaps we ought to rethink our notions about a shorter workweek. Of course, if a shrinking economic pie is sliced into more pieces, each piece will be smaller; this happens not only because there are more pieces to share in the division but also because the pie itself is smaller. On the other hand, if an expanding pie is sliced into more pieces, the slices may be the same size or larger than before. Indeed, economic pies tend to expand when cut into more pieces, because each piece represents a job for a worker who is producing, earning and spending.

Prof. (later U.S. Senator) Paul Douglas, an economist at the University of Chicago, undertook a thorough study of the relationship between working hours and wages in the United States from 1890 to 1926. He found evidence of an inverse correlation between the length of the workweek and real wages: Industries in which the workweek was shorter generally paid higher wages. Within particular industries, wages tended to rise faster in periods when hours were cut. This conclusion contradicts the consensus of contemporary economists that there is a trade-off between hours and earnings.

In the 20th Century, the average workweek in the United States declined most rapidly during the early years of the Depression and in the periods from 1916 to 1920 and from 1943 to 1949. After both world wars, periods of sustained economic growth followed initial brief recessions. In contrast, after the decision was made in the early 1960s not to reduce the workweek so that the economic pie would grow larger, the U.S. economy eventually slid into a period of protracted stagnation and decay.

If it is true (as the experts say) that cuts in the workweek stifle economic growth, why weren't the "Roaring '20s" stifled by the unprecedented reductions in hours after World War I? Why didn't the reductions of the '40s make it impossible to experience the prosperity of the early "Eisenhower years"? Why didn't Japan's shift from a six-day week to five-day week during the late '60s and early '70s strangle its economy and cripple its capacity to compete in world markets?

Deciding whether to reduce the workweek does not involve a choice between leisure and material goods or, in graphic terms, between a smaller and a larger economic pie. Rather, the decision involves the question of whether a smaller or a larger percentage of the population should be allowed to participate in the prosperity that follows a recession.

If the workweek is longer, a relatively small group of workers can handle the greater volume of production, given normal increases in productivity. On the other hand, if working hours are reduced to offset the increased productivity, more workers will have to be hired to meet expanding production schedules. That means that more people will float in the rising tide of prosperity, and fewer will drown.

The time to make plans for reducing the workweek is now. There will never be a "Reagan prosperity" without this important structural adjustment.●

COMBINED FEDERAL CAMPAIGN

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, my office has received numerous calls concerning the Combined Federal Campaign. Last Friday, the Eligibility Committee voted to admit 113 of 114 organizations which applied for admission. The one organization which the committee voted to exclude, Planned Parenthood—World Population, was rejected on the phony ground that it had not won community acceptance. Dr. Devine, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, wisely decided to overrule this decision of the Eligibility Committee and admitted all 114 applicant organizations.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I insert the list of national organizations admitted to collect funds under the Combined Federal Campaign this fall. Other local organizations, including local United Ways, will also be admitted locally to participate.

LIST OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

U.S. Olympic Committee; National Foundation for Ileitis and Colitis; National Child Labor Committee; Oxfam-America; Tuberous Sclerosis Association of America; and National Congress of American Indians Fund.

Pacific Legal Foundation; Pearl S. Buck Foundation; African Medical and Research Foundation; National Image; Direct Relief Foundation; National Audubon Society; Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund; Children's Defense Fund; Cystic Fibrosis Foundation; U.S. Committee for UNICEF; American Heart Association; and American Hearing Research Foundation.

Research to Prevent Blindness; National Easter Seal Society; National Society to Prevent Blindness; United Service Organizations (USO); NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund; Arthritis Foundation; Project HOPE; Planned Parenthood—World Population; Leukemia Society of America; Medic Alert Foundation International; Unitarian Universalist Service Committee; and International Rescue Committee.

United Cerebral Palsy Associations; CARE; AMC Cancer Research Center and Hospital; National Parks and Conservation Association; National Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation; Save the Children Federation; National Recreation and Park Association; American Foundation for the Blind; City of Hope; Muscular Dystrophy Association; American Kidney Fund; and Africare.

National Jewish Hospital and Research Center/National Asthma Center; Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law; Epilepsy Foundation of America; National Mental Health Association; Myasthenia Gravis Foundation; American Diabetes Association; Project Concern International; International Eye Foundation; Native American Rights Fund; National Huntington's Disease Association; St. Jude Children's Research Hospital; and Association of Retarded Citizens of the United States.

Natural Resources Defense Council; Girl Scouts of the U.S.A.—Overseas Affiliates; National Kidney Foundation; Center for Science in the Public Interest; Indian Law Resource Center; Boy Scouts of America—Overseas Councils; National Council of Negro Women; The Wilderness Society; American Lung Association; Cooley's Anemia Foundation; Federally Employed Women Legal and Education Fund; and American Red Cross.

American Cancer Society; National Association for Sickle Cell Disease; International Social Service, American Branch; Helen Keller International; United Seamen's Service; National Organization for Women Legal Defense and Education Fund; Foster Parents Plan; World Education; American Near East Refugee Aid; Juvenile Diabetes Foundation; National Multiple Sclerosis Society; and Goodwill Industries of America, International Division.

Center for Auto Safety; Help the Aged; National Society for Autistic Children; National Right to Life Educational Trust Fund; Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund; National Citizens' Coalition for Nursing Home Reform; National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse; Meals for Millions/Freedom from Hunger Foundation; International Human Assistance Programs; Little City Foundation; National Hemophilia Foundation; and National Reye's Syndrome Foundation.

Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society of America; National Council for International Health; Church World Service; American Paralysis Association; National Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation; National Hospice Organization; Special Olympics; National Black Media Coalition; World Wildlife Fund—U.S; Conservative Legal Defense and Education Fund; Vietnam Veterans Foundation of America; and Capitol Legal Committee.

United Negro College Fund; Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, Inc.; Pacific Institute for Public Policy Research; National Spinal Cord Injury Foundation; Cenikor; Opportunities Industrialization Centers International; National Black United Fund; NAACP Special Contribution Fund; March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation; YMCA of the U.S.A., Armed Services Department; Technoserve; and American Social Health Association.●

LOCAL CONTENT LAW WILL FIGHT UNEMPLOYMENT

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, more Americans are unemployed today than at any point since the Great Depression; 17 million people are jobless or underemployed, seeking full-time work but unable to find it. This is a national tragedy which demands the full attention of the Government and immediate, vigorous action. Shockingly, the Reagan administration proposes to do nothing to put these millions back to work, offers nothing to alleviate their growing economic hardship, and opposes every reasonable measure in Congress that could speed an economic recovery. Instead, the administration repeats the same tired line: "Just wait a few more months. We just need a little more time."

But while we wait endlessly and futilely for the President's so-called economic recovery program to take effect, many of the Nation's most important businesses are not waiting. In record numbers, American corporations are closing factories and other facilities, laying off workers, and moving to foreign countries.

In March, April, and May of this year, the private, nonprofit Bureau of National Affairs reported that 186 American plants closed down, victims of a growing trend that has cost millions of jobs in the last few years.

Many of the businesses that have shut down these plants have not gone bankrupt or out of business. They have simply gone out of the country.

Some of these relocations, such as General Electric's switch of iron production from Ontario, California, to Singapore, have received a great deal of media attention. Most have not. The result is that quietly, U.S. multinational corporations have relocated hundreds of thousands of industrial jobs overseas in the last decade, leaving unemployment, devastated communities and higher taxes behind.

The reason for this industrial exodus is simple: Wage rates in Mexico, Taiwan, South Africa, the Philippines, and other recipients of U.S. jobs are only a small fraction of wage rates here. Thus, though GE's Ontario, Calif., iron plant was profitable, GE shut it down at the cost of more than 1,000 jobs to take advantage of $6 a day wages in Singapore.

Surprisingly, some of the industries which complain the loudest about import competition have been among the quickest to desert the United States for low wage countries. For example, as the following story from the July 25 New York Times indicates, General Motors has opened 10 plants on the Mexican border since 1979, an American Motors subsidiary pays its 98 percent female Mexican workforce $1.04 an hour, and both Ford and Chrysler operate cheap labor border factories in Mexico. All four companies then export their products to the United States at reduced tariff rates.

The dangers of imports are real, whether the imports are Datsuns from Japan or GM components from Mexico. They all displace U.S. workers; they all undermine the tax base of American communities.

The following story shows clearly that local content legislation is not, as its detractors allege, "protectionism" for giant U.S. corporations. H.R. 5133 will protect working Americans against the loss of their jobs because of automobile imports from any source. The American content requirements it imposes apply equally to U.S. corporations and those of foreign countries. The same rule will be enforced against every auto producer: "Sell here, build here."

The New York Times article follows:

[From the New York Times, July 25, 1982]

U.S. AUTO MAKERS USING MORE MEXICO PLANTS

(By Iver Peterson)

NOGALES, MEXICO, July 18—Detroit's automobile companies, like other American manufacturers, are setting up an increasing number of plants in border towns like this one where American-made materials are assembled into finished products by inexpensive Mexican labor.

The goods assembled in these plants, which the Mexicans call maquilas, are then brought back to the United States under special low tariff rates.

As the United States recession has deepened and some 10 million Americans, including a quarter million auto workers, have lost their jobs, the number of employees in the maquilas grew to 128,000 by June 1981 from 91,000 in 1979, a 40 percent increase. The number of plants, meanwhile, grew from 459 to 604, according to the Commerce Department's latest figures.

Calculators, clothing, suitcases, sunglasses and a host of other items requiring hand assembly flow from the plants back into the United States, with automotive components and subassemblies a growing part of the total.

General Motors opened its first border plant in Ciudad Juárez in 1979, and began hiring for its 10th one, there and elsewhere, a few weeks ago. It now employs about 5,300 Mexican workers. They assemble wiring harnesses, motor magnets, turn signal stalks and numerous other auto components.

Ford, making interior trim, employs 180 at its plant in Ciudad Juárez. Chrysler, assembling wire harnesses, also has an 800-employee operation there.

And American Motors, through its subsidiary, Coleman Products Inc., joined Caterpillar Tractor, Samsonite luggage and Foster Grant sunglasses, among others, here in Nogales last March when it hired its first crew of young Mexican workers to cut and wrap wiring harnesses.

American labor unions have attacked these operations as "runaway plants" that are no less exporters of United States jobs than the foreign imports that American corporations have appealed to Washington to curtail.

"There was no great need for them to cut the corner on the dollar as long as times were good," said Rex Hardesty, the A.F.L.-C.I.O.'s Washington spokesman. "But they make a grab for the coolie wages as soon as things get tight and it become cost-effective for them to do so."

But the corporations contributing to the boom in maquilas, an untranslatable term whose root is Spanish for "machine," argue that American labor costs are out of line with world competition, that many Americans will not perform the tedious, unskilled handwork to which the maquilas are limited by law, and that the Mexican plants provide an outlet for American materials while aiding Mexico's economy.

"We have observed over the past five years that the cost of our products were becoming less competitive in the world market," said James Tolley, a spokesman for American Motors, expressing a view similar to that of other auto makers, "We therefore established a strategy to continue to operate U.S. plants, but to expand in Mexico to average our cost downward."

REFUSAL TO DISCLOSE WAGES

American Motors refused to disclose the wage rates at its plant here, terming the information a "proprietary" secret. But employees of Coleman Products de Mexico, interviewed on their lunch break at the Parque Industrial a few miles south of here, said they received 2,400 Mexican pesos, about $50, for a 48-hour week, which works out to slightly more than $1.04 an hour.

American Motors also refused to disclose pay levels at its two Coleman Products plants in the United States, in Coleman, Wis., and Iron River, Mich. Both plants, in small, rural towns, have twice rejected affiliation with the United Automobile Workers, whose members in manufacturing jobs earn upwards of $12 and hour and whose benefits push the total hourly labor add another $8 an hours to that.

Company officials insisted that the Mexican plant did not take United States jobs because its two plants there were operating at capacity.

THE TARIFF EXEMPTIONS

The maquilas operate under strict regulations on both sides of the border. The Mexican Government allows the United States company to import, tax-free, the machinery and raw material needed to perform the work, provided that the finished product and everything else, including the machinery and even packing crates, is eventually reexported to the United States.

United States tariff regulations, meanwhile, exempt these imported products from all duties except for the value of the Mexican labor added to it. In 1978, the last year for which the Commerce Department has assembled the figures, this amounted to $12.7 billion.

Mexico is the main location for such operations by United States companies, but the system also operates extensively elsewhere, including the Caribbean, where American-woven and cut fabrics are sewn into clothes.

The legislative principles behind the duty exemptions for all but the value of labor added outside the country date from the 18th century in United States tariff law. They hold that materials whose production has already been taxed at its origins in the United States should not be subject to new levies upon being brought back after assembly or finishing abroad.

Mexico encourages the plants because they reduce this country's enormous pool of surplus labor at minimal but decent wages by local standards.

PAYROLL TAXES AID CITIES

Through payroll taxes, the plants, meanwhile, pay local taxes that in Ciudad Juárez, where most of the plants are situated, amount to more than half of all city receipts, according to studies done at the University of Texas at El Paso across the border.

Besides Ciudad Juárez and Nogales, the plants also operate in Matamoros, opposite Brownsville, Texas, Nuevo Laredo, across from Laredo, Tex., and Tijuana, below the California line.

"They may be taking some money out of the pocket of workers in Lorraine, Ohio, and Detroit by putting more jobs down there," said Prof. Ellwyn R. Stoddard of the University of Texas at El Paso, "but they put it back into the American communities and in other workers' pockets by providing an outlet for the materials the maquilas use."

It has also been argued that the maquilas reduce illegal Mexican immigration by providing jobs south of the border, although Professor Stoddard and other experts on the maquila system dispute this on the ground that most of the workers in the plants are women, while most of the illegal aliens crossing the border are men.

SOME CRITICS IN MEXICO

The system has its critics among Mexicans, too. A study by the Center for Third World Economic and Social Studies in Mexico City speaks of the disruption of traditional Mexican family life because most of the plants' work forces are young women, lured to the border by jobs paying five times the going rate of unskilled labor in the local economy.

Perhaps for these reasons, the American corporations are sensitive to charges of exploitation and appear glad to operate under a system of considerably greater secrecy that is normally possible in the United States.

The manager of Coleman Products de Mexico, the American Motors subsidiary, refused to let a reporter inside his plant, describing what goes on there, like the wages paid, as "proprietary."

Xavier Partidas, a foreman at the new Coleman plant, spoke willingly, however. "We have all women, 98 percent women, on the assembly line," he said as he stepped out for a breath of fresh air the other day, "and the biggest problem for them is the standing up. I think they are happy to work there but they do not like the standing, so we are always getting a rotation of workers."

But jobs in the maquilas are eagerly sought.

Rosa, the only name she offered, a woman who said she was 22 years old, said that before she went to work for Coleman Products, the only job she had found had been repacking the tomatoes that stream through Nogales to the United States late each winter. The pay was "poco, poco"—very little.

"They treat us very well," she said. "It is a very good job except that we have to stand up all day, and we can only go to the washroom when our turn comes. But I have never had a good job like this before."●

COMMUNITY BASED ORGANIZATIONS WORK

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, when CETA was being considered on the floor of the House in 1973, I made a statement which is a part of the legislative history regarding the outstanding contribution made by Rev. Leon Sullivan and the Opportunities Industrialization Centers.

Now that 9 years have passed and we are once again voting for a nationwide employment training program I have received reports from Reverend Sullivan that there is still a need for protection by the Congress for community based organizations with a proven track record of targeting employment and training services to the disadvantaged youth and adults in rural and urban poverty areas.

Reverend Sullivan indicates that his organization now in 126 communities in 40 States has gone to court and lost 12 times in efforts to assure their participation in the Federal employment training delivery system because there was not specific language in the law mandating their inclusion.

The Congress has gone on record as regarding the fact that groups like OIC and SER have concentrated in black and Hispanic areas in providing training services that are desperately needed in what are considered normal economic conditions.

Now, in a period of recession it is even more important that these programs should be utilized by both Government and industry as automatic targeting mechanisms to reach the unreached that normally are not included in vocational schools, community colleges, and traditional training programs.

To emphasize my confidence in the work of Reverend Sullivan and other community based organizations of demonstrated effectiveness I am pleased to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the same remarks that I made in 1973. Nine years later this statement is still true and the need is still real.

The statement follows:

The track record of OIC with reference to reaching the unreached is matched by the track record of enlisting the cooperation of business and industry, and OIC can be helpful to any prime sponsor in this direction because of the Industrial Advisory Council working with Dr. Leon Sullivan representing more than 30 of America's largest corporations.

The problem of polarization in the American community between white and black, Chicano and Afro, haves and have-nots, has been reduced in communities where OIC has built bridges of cooperation because of the nature of its self-help philosophy and providing a mechanism for coordinated effort to secure green power by combining black power, white power, brown power, and red power.

Let me now point out certain positive values:

First. A special value of this program is its involvement in the planning process to make possible the development of jobs through the cooperation of industry so that specific training on specific equipment for specific jobs is encouraged.

Second. Ways and means of using the OIC experience to retrain persons uprooted by technological change and who have not yet started out with the handicap of being economically disadvantaged, have been tested by OIC and could conceivably prove to be an asset to the Secretary in meeting the new needs created by todays crisis.

Third. Since more than 500,000 unemployed citizens from low-income communities of all races have been served, and more than one-third of those served have come off the welfare rolls, this project has proven its effectiveness as an integral part of the nation's manpower delivery system and can prove a valuable asset to the Prime Sponsors as they plan ways of reaching those populations that are normally unreached.

Fourth. The Opportunities Industrialization Centers (OIC), founded by Dr. Leon Sullivan in 1964, has become a national system of proven effectiveness providing comprehensive training and employment services which include recruitment, pretraining counseling, motivational and attitudinal training, skills training, job placement, on-the-job counseling, job development, and other appropriate services.

Fifth. OIC should be seen as supplementary to other training programs such as Mainstream, Vocational Education Boards, National Alliance of Businessmen and Community Action Agencies, since OIC has developed a special expertise in motivational and attitudinal training as a preparation for the skills training that is of proven effectiveness. The pride, the self-help concept, and the desire to achieve which OIC has generated, is an excellent undergirding for other training programs, although OIC itself provides comprehensive training for those persons whom it reaches directly.●

PHYLLIS AND STEPHEN KARSCH—OUTSTANDING AMERICANS

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the outstanding accomplishments of two of my constituents in Long Beach, N.Y.

Phyllis and Stephen Karsch have served the community of Long Beach for many years in many ways. Stephen has used his talents as a builder and engineer, not only for the betterment of our community, but also for Congregation Beth Shalom, of which he serves as vice president and chairman of the Housing Committee.

Both Phyllis and Stephen have generously supported the efforts of the Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation, and they have displayed a great interest in local education.

Phyllis and Stephen exemplify the finest qualities of America. Their spirit of voluntarism, their devotion to God, to their community and to their country serve as examples for each of us to follow. We would do well to have more citizens like them.

Phyllis and Stephen Karsch are being honored this weekend by Congregation Beth Shalom for their outstanding contributions to the life and spirit of our community. I am pleased to be among those who applaud their accomplishments. To them, I extend my best wishes for a long and happy future in Long Beach.●

NATURAL GAS HEARINGS

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels began a series of at least seven hearings on natural gas issues. We heard from various representatives of groups of end-users, both residential and industrial consumers. End-user hearings will continue on Friday, July 30, with additional sessions scheduled for later next month.

As the author of H.R. 2019, which would deregulate the wellhead price of natural gas, I am pleased that our inquiry into natural gas policy matters has begun.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my prepared opening statement from yesterday's hearing at this point in the RECORD:

OPENING STATEMENT OF THE HONORABLE WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER AT NATURAL GAS HEARINGS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOSSIL AND SYNTHETIC FUELS

Mr. Chairman, today the Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels begins its inquiry into the state of the natural gas industry and the status of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, together with other statutes that form our Nation's natural gas policy. As one of many subcommittee members who requested the holding of hearings, I am pleased that a series of indepth sessions starts today.

At the outset I want to commend Chairman Phil Sharp for this responsiveness to our request for hearings, for his interest in the subject, and for the cooperation he and his staff have exhibited in the planning stages of our inquiry. The subcommittee has a well-earned reputation for fair and balanced deliberations. I know that these hearings will be no exception. I look forward to working with Chairman Sharp and my other colleagues to fashion appropriate natural gas legislation in the 98th Congress.

Please allow me to briefly describe the landscape of the issues as I see them. While conditions in natural gas markets vary over time, enduring economic principles do not. I remain convinced as ever that the most important priority of this Congress in the energy area is the immediate deregulation of natural gas wellhead prices. Our hearings will provide us with information on the current state of the natural gas market and its many sectors. The hearings will be useful in helping us to shape decontrol legislation that will take into account the impact on the many classes of consumers, the distribution companies, the pipelines (both intrastate and interstate), and the State regulators.

Our overall perspective, however, should be a national one. We all know that natural gas policy is an energy issue. The additional supplies produced and the efficient allocation thereof stemming from decontrol will improve energy security. But this is also an important environmental issue. I am privileged to represent an area in Southern California that is in "nonattainment" status for purposes of the Clean Air Act. The experts tell us that we cannot reach attainment without reducing our use of petroleum-based products as a vehicle fuel. I note with interest that this subcommittee will hold a hearing next month on methanol as an alternative fuel. I believe very strongly that methane and propane are excellent alternatives as well. The greater substitution of clean-burning natural gas, in industrial and transportation uses, will help us meet our important environmental goals.

Crude oil and petroleum imports have always been the core concern of our energy debate since 1973. While imports are presently running at 4.5 million barrels per day, down 12 percent from one year ago and far below the peak level of 9 million barrels per day in 1977, they remain essential to our deliberations. A study by Professor Glenn Loury of the University of Michigan suggests that our imports could be reduced by 2.83 million barrels per day over a multiyear adjustment period. Other esitmates place the import reduction at 500,000-1 million barrels of oil per day. The Loury study further suggests a drop in the OPEC monopoly pricing power of $10 per barrel. All of this would flow from natural gas decontrol. Several important benefits would be derived from the reduction in oil imports:

Our balance of trade deficit, which was $40 billion in 1981, would be reduced significantly. At $34 per barrel, a 3 million barrel per day reduction translates into $37.2 billion per year. A 1 million barrel per day reduction translates into $12.4 billion per year.

As a consequence, the ability of foreign countries to invest heavily in U.S. companies and farms would be diminished by stemming the flow of dollars out of the country. Economic strength requires a reduction in trade deficits.

Our political and economic dependency on unstable energy sources would be lessened, thus improving our national security.

I look forward to hearing the testimony of the witnesses who represent various links in the natural gas chain. As policymakers, we must be aware of their concerns. In so doing, however, we must keep the objective of restoring free market principles firmly in mind. Decontrol will serve the energy, environmental, trade, and security interests of our country.●

MX IS NO Rx FOR GREAT PLAINS

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the need for a strong defense is no excuse for building weapons that do not work.

I have grave reservations about the wisdom of deploying the MX missile for this very reason. So far, the Pentagon has simply not produced a basing plan that makes sense.

Its latest attempt to find a home for the orphan MX missile is the closely spaced or "dense pack" scheme. Some have asked whether it should be dubbed "dunce pack"—for good reason.

Dense pack rests on the doubtful theory that the explosion of the first incoming Soviet missile would destroy the next flight of attacking missiles. Military experts have raised serious doubts that the plan will work. Better to rely on proven weapons like the Trident I submarine missile.

In addition, arms control experts suggest that the dense pack scheme will undermine the ABM and Salt II arms treaties, that President Reagan has promised to respect. And what we need is mutual and verifiable arms control—not more missiles that do not work.

Amidst all this technical debate we have also forgotten the concerns of American farmers. I am concerned that basing the MX on land could seriously damage farmland, ranchland, and scarce water supplies.

A timely letter to Defense Secretary Weinberger from two Wyoming ranchers punched holes in the Pentagon's MX notions. I would like to insert at this point a copy of the letter which appeared in the New York Times.

[From the New York Times, July 21, 1982]

A CALL FROM THE PLAINS: WHERE ARE WE GOING WITH THE MX MISSILE?

(By Rod and Mae Kirkbride)

Thank you, Mr. Secretary, for taking the time to visit with us here in Cheyenne, our "Magic City of the Plains," before you make your next MX decision.

Whether you decide to concentrate the missiles in a "dense pack" in a single state or to spread them out in several different parts of the country, we hold reservations about the proposed land-basing of the MX system here in Wyoming, and we would like to share them with you.

Many of your own advisers have counseled that submarines at sea would provide the cheapest and least vulnerable basing mode. Still, however, you pursue land basing.

We feel compelled to ask you—why are you preoccupied with land basing?

We are preoccupied with a fear of it. As ranchers, let us tell you what will happen if the MX comes to Western soil.

Our vital agricultural economy will suffer irreparable damage as rangeland, farmland and valuable water resources are appropriated for MX expansion. Existing water rights in our semiarid region will become weak and tentative as requirements and demands for water increase.

A boom syndrome will arise and hundreds of millions of dollars in public works projects will fall on the backs of present Western residents. The burden of impact will be awesome, as every aspect of our Western way of life becomes affected.

Mr. Secretary, public support for this MX proposal can be sustained only if our citizens, ranchers and farmers are kept from finding out about the extensive nature of deceptively basing the missiles.

And this is exactly what is happening. We are getting no answers, no discussion of impact. Officials ignore it, and the silence they create is deafening.

Here in the West, open discussion has always been our way of making decisions. In fact, the Democratic Party of the state of Wyoming has come out against land basing after just such discussion.

We believe our concerns are legitimate and full dialogue is the best way to get meaningful answers to our questions.

How much water will each variation of the MX system take?

How much land?

How will it affect our traditional economic activities centered on the land?

How big will the system grow to be?

One of America's strengths is its ability to thrive amid controversial debate.

Mr. Secretary, the stakes of the MX debate are no less than the economic survival of the agricultural community as we know it. The proposed trade-off of our rural heritage for a questionable MX program does not make good sense.

We who live in Wyoming, Nebraska and Colorado are doing our patriotic part right now as hosts to the Minuteman silos. We have a fine relationship with the Air Force and Warren Air Force Base, and we do not wish to risk altering this beneficial relationship with a barrage of unsetting MX deployment variations of political rather than strategic origin.

The latest "trial balloon" is your suggestion of the "dense pack" basing mode. That is, placing 100 missiles within a 10-square-mile area.

This foot-in-the-door approach could use the 100 new dense-pack silos to store the first 100 missiles while military and Government officials work to buy time to surmount the political obstacles and neutralize resident opposition.

The next step could be to bring in another 100 MX missiles to beef up the original system, thereby making it more survivable. Then would come the huge, deceptive mobile-basing umbrella to give the system adequate, protection.

The end result could easily be an immense MX compound, gobbling up our resources with the swiftness of a prairie fire.

HOW BIG WILL THE SYSTEM GET? HOW MUCH LAND WILL IT TAKE? HOW MUCH WATER?

Mr. Secretary, spare us this fate. Here in the high plains-Rocky Mountain region we are eager and proud to fulfill our obligation to our nation and state.

But we would like you to know that we also are earnestly moved by the words and thoughts of the noted Wyoming historian, T. A. Larson. His words may be destined to guide each of us through this period of national decision.

He said, "Perhaps it is not yet time to grieve, but surely it is time to reflect and to ponder whether what the world wants from Wyoming is worth more than what Wyoming already offers the world."

Lest we forget, Wyoming already offers our world a very special heritage.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BILL NELSON

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, due to official business in Florida on Friday, July 23, I was not present for rollcall votes No. 209 through No. 213. I was unable to announce my position on No. 209, No. 211, and No. 213.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on passage of H.R. 2329 relating to Cherokee Indians (No. 209); "yes" of the adoption of House Resolution 528, the rule for consideration of H.R. 5203, the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act Amendments of 1982 (No. 211); and "yes" on resolving into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 5427, to authorize support for radio broadcasting to Cuba (No. 213).●

BINARY CHEMICAL WEAPONS FUNDING DELETED

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, last week, during consideration of H.R. 6030, the House added an amendment deleting $54 million for the production of binary chemical weapons. This action, while unquestionably well-intentioned, was unwise and regrettable.

On Monday, July 26, 1982, the Richmond Times-Dispatch carried an editorial which I believe does much to put the issue in proper perspective, and I commend it to my colleagues for their careful consideration. I hope it will be read by those who supported the amendment, as well as by those who, with me, opposed it.

A "NO" TO GAS

In 1935, Italian Facists in four days wiped out one of Haile Selassie's finest armies by mustard-gas bombardment. Two years later, the Japanese invaders of China began using blister gas effectively against the unprotected forces of Chiang Kai-shek. Despite these portents, however, World War II never became, respecting chemical warfare, a replay of World War I, in which terrifying vapors were freely used by both sides.

This was not because the Allies succesfully used moral suasion on the likes of Hitler and Tojo. Rather, President Roosevelt threatened the Japanese with "retaliation in kind and in full measure" if gas were released on U.S. troops. Later, for the benefit of the Germans, he added, "Any use of gas by an Axis power . . . will immediately be followed by the fullest retaliation upon . . . military objectives throughout the whole extent of such Axis country." Winston Churchill issued similar warnings. They deterred.

It is not at all certain that the United States possesses a comparable deterrence capability vis-à-vis the Soviet Union, today's chief eggbeater of deadly concoctions. Alas, the House of Representatives last week amended the Defense Authorization Bill to cut out a $54 million appropriation for the development of binary chemical weapons, which would have ended a unilateral moratorium begun in 1969 by President Nixon. The House's action, if it stands, can only encourage the Soviets to use gas against Allied troops in any European war.

Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, D-Mich., who led the amendment forces, contends that America already possesses an adequate chemical-weapons stockpile and counsels the administration to pursue more vigorously gas-reduction talks with the other side. Actually, such gas as the United States possesses is years behind the state of the art; besides, binary gas, which consists of two components relatively harmless until mixed on the battlefield, is safer to handle than the bugs now cached on military bases. Talks with the Soviets? Well, those peace-loving folks in the Kremlin have been getting rid of much of their poison-gas arsenal—by showering it on Afghan freedom fighters.

Secretary of Defense Weinberger, who ought to know about such things, alleges that first-use of chemical weapons is integral to Moscow's military doctrine pertaining to a conventional war in Europe. The facts bear him out. The Soviets maintain a 100,000-man force specially trained to fight in areas of chemical contamination and, according to U.S. intelligence, have at least eight complexes capable of developing the deadly substances. The gas assaults by the Soviets and their janizaries on the Afghans, the North Yemenis, the Lao hill tribes, and others can be viewed as perfecting exercises under battle conditions. It is doubtful that the Soviets would go to these lengths on a caprice.

The Soviet gas buildup—a phase of its overall military expansion—occurred, of course, while the United States suffered from its self-imposed détente-plegia. The House action suggests that we still have not recovered. Many members voted for the amendment because poison-gas usage is so "unthinkable." But the only effective Allied counter to widescale Soviet use of chemical agents—because it invokes an equivalency of terror—would be tactical nuclear strikes. That's thinkable?

New Jersey Republican Rep. Millicent Fenwick's contribution to the debate was the assertion that "it is a disgrace to our country even to think that we could spend money, when we don't even know where to find it for children's lunches, for poison gas." Perhaps the indignation of Mrs. Fenwick and like-minded colleagues will stop the hordes pouring over the Elbe, but it isn't likely.

The House's error, however, need not be the final word. The Senate has authorized production of binary chemical weapons, and the disparity will be worked out in a conference committee that considers the big defense bill. Senate conferees should approve no measure that does not restore some funding for such weapons. Since World War I, gas has been thrown on Chinese, Ethiopians, Afghans, Cambodians, and others—all of whom shared the not-coincidental handicap of having no gas of their own.●

REAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE SENATE TAX PACKAGE

HON. JAMES A. COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an editorial from the Daily Record, a newspaper in my district which discusses the real significance of the tax package passed by the Senate on Friday, July 23, 1982.

As this House prepares to consider Senator ROBERT DOLE's tax package, I would urge my colleagues to read this editorial. I think it is important for all of us to stop to consider the clear and persuasive message that it presents before stamping approval on the largest tax increase in American history:

[From the Daily Record, July 24, 1982]

GOP GOES AWRY

Never underestimate the ability of the Republican Party to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory.

Fresh from last year's fulfillment of President Reagan's promise to lift the oppressive tax burden that was strangling the middle class, the spiritual heartland of America, the GOP has voted the largest tax increase in American history.

An oppressive income tax has been replaced by a series of repressive taxes that level rich, middle, and poor alike.

Only three stalwart GOP Senators (Hawkins of Florida, Kasten of Wisconsin and Mattingly of Georgia) could resist Senator Dole's callous white flag of surrender high atop the alter of expediency.

Only one party ever attempted to tax the United States out of a major economic disaster. You guessed it. It was the GOP and the result was called the Great Depression.

It is ironic, indeed, to have to look to the House's great spender, Tip O'Neill, to prevent the Republican Party from another disaster.

It is also more than slightly ironic that the Senate's one Independent, Senator Byrd of Virginia, could join three other GOP Senators in voting against this cynical and shameful tax bill.

These four rate the sincere thanks from the millions of Americans who elected a President and his party on the fanciful notion that indeed politicians might mean what they promise.

Friday, July 23, 1982, was indeed a sad day for the American people.●

IN SUPPORT OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 509

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, on June 10, Congressman LELAND and I introduced a resolution (H.J. Res. 509) prohibiting military aid and sales to Guatemala for fiscal year 1982 and 1983.

The administration requested $250,000 in international military education, and training assistance (IMET) for Guatemala in its supplemental foreign aid request. It has informally proposed to reprogram $50,000 in IMET for fiscal year 1982 and has indicated that it would like to sell $3.7 million of helicopter spare parts to the Guatemalan military House Joint Resolution 509 would make these transactions impossible.

These may seem like paltry sums in comparison to U.S. foreign assistance to other nations, but when considering how aid has escalated to El Salvador and Honduras over the last 4 years, it is reason enough for us to pause and consider very carefully just who will receive military aid, no matter how small an amount.

The political situation in Guatemala has not significantly improved since the March 23 coup. General Rios-Montt, the new Guatemalan President, has talked a great deal about cleaning up the political mess of his predecessor, Gen. Lucas Garcia. Unfortunately, indications are that he has done very little to improve conditions throughout the country.

Violence is still pandemic. Political activity is, at this moment, forbidden. The new regime has organized and armed civilian defense forces which are strikingly similar to the paramilitary death squads in the Salvadoran countryside.

Killings, particularly of Indians, who comprise about 60 percent of the population, have increased and because of this, the Indians are becoming increasingly alienated from the government. The amnesty program for the guerrillas that ended on June 30, was of doubtful success, and even the thought of negotiations seems implausible since Rios-Montt has not made public any proposal to reorganize the government. Instead, on June 8, he declared himself President, and deposed the other two members of the junta. Previously, he had promised that he would only be a "caretaker ruler" and that he would not seek the Presidency.

Further, Rios-Montt has declared a state of siege throughout Guatemala. Under the state of siege, all basic human rights are suspended. This suspension includes: the cessation of all political activity, severe restrictions on the press, prohibition of trade union activity, and restrictions on "freedom of thought." In addition, certain violaters of the state of siege decrees are to be tried by a special military tribunal without recourse to civilian courts or access to an attorney.

Continuation of the state of siege will be decided after July 27 by the Guatemalan Government. If it is not renewed it will expire on July 31. Defense minister, Gen. Oscar Mejia Vitores, has stated that "operations during the first half of the state of siege period have been very effective." This is in contrast with an article published in the New York Times last week in which Guatemalans, members of the clergy, and foreign diplomats are reported to have said that the killing of the Indians has increased since the coup.

Dr. Juan Jose Hurtado, a prominent Guatemalan physician was recently kidnaped and held under suspicion of being a Communist. Dr. Hurtado is widely respected in the United States and in Guatemala and claims no political affiliation. His treatment by Guatemalan authorities is reported to have been brutal.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the political problems in Guatemala have not been alleviated by the Rios-Montt regime. This is not to say that reform cannot take place under Rios-Montt; it is only to say, that it has not. The United States does not have any indication that Rios-Montt intends to improve the welfare of the Guatemalan people. What we do have a clear indication of is that the general is capable of capricious behavior, and is prone to violent solutions for resolving the ongoing conflict in Guatemala.

On the one hand, the general offered amnesty to the guerrillas, then turned around and said that, "whoever doesn't give up I'm going to shoot * * *" He has at times indicated that he feels himself somehow divinely ordained to rule Guatemala. While his faith is commendable, and may even inspire him to eventually help malnourished and impoverished Guatemalans, evidence does not indicate that he is an improvement over his predecessor.

The question arises when considering sending aid, be it military or economic, to Guatemala, as to whether or not it is in the best interest of the United States. I believe, at this point, it is not. Our aid should be distributed judiciously, not freely to any "authoritarian" leader who calls himself anti-Communist. It is our money; there should be nothing automatic in its allocation.

We need to reevaluate how we distribute military and economic aid to developing nations. It is the most effective leverage we have in influencing these nations. The jury is still out on Rios-Montt. I do not propose "hanging" him yet, but I do suggest that we give him at least a year before sending any military assistance or authorizing any arms sales to Guatemala.

Economic aid should also be held up at least until the violence subsides, the state of siege is lifted, there is a definite political program outlining the future of Guatemala and permitting political diversity, and most important, it is certain that Guatemala is no longer a gross violator of human rights.

Perhaps we should pay close attention to a speech made by Rios-Montt on July 5, in which he said, "* * * we must build a nation but without a capital in Washington or Moscow, but in Guatemala * * * We have to build a nation in which neither rubles nor dollars interest us." Let us hold up our dollars until we are certain they will not be used in a way that will misrepresent the fundamental principles of American democracy. Let Rios-Montt begin to build an independent Guatemala that is deserving of American support.

I urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 509.●

EMPLOYEE MERGER PROTECTION

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I have today asked my colleague from New Jersey, Congressman HOWARD to add my name as a cosponsor of his bill, H.R. 6077.

I rise simply to explain for the record that I have made this request because I feel strongly that this legislation will open the way for hearings on the important question of the employee protection provisions of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 and the matter of employee merger protection. While I am not convinced that every provision of Mr. HOWARD's bill as now written is deserving of enactment, and while I have particular reservations concerning the size of allowable monthly assistance payments and several other matters in this bill, I do share Mr. HOWARD's commitment to examine these questions in hearings for which his legislation will be the vehicle.●

CRS REPORT: "MENACHEM BEGIN ON THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES"

HON. DOUGLAS K. BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, in light of the current controversy regarding the fighting between Israeli and the Palestine Liberation Organization forces in Lebanon, and suggestions for a Palestinian homeland, I wanted to call my colleagues' attention to research completed for me by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress. In response to a September 1981 request by this Member for "a chronological summary account of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's public statements on the West Bank," the CRS on October 7, 1981, provided me with the following report which is shown in its entirety:

SELECTED CHRONOLOGY OF STATEMENTS BY MENACHEM BEGIN ON THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, 1977-81

5/19/77—While visiting a Jewish settlement on the West Bank, Begin called for more West Bank settlements. Begin also reiterated his refusal to talk to the PLO, saying, "What are we going to negotiate with them? The destruction of the state of Israel?"

5/24/77—Begin's Likud Party declared that the West Bank would not be annexed without a new electoral mandate and that Israel's right to impose its own laws on the occupied territories would not be exercised as long as Arab-Israeli peace negotiations were possible.

6/17/77—The Likud Party platform omitted Begin's election promise that the West Bank would "not be relinquished." The platform also stated that Israel would not apply Israeli law throughout the occupied territories while peace negotiations were in progress.

7/26/77—The Israeli government reclassified three existing Jewish settlements as legal.

7/27/77—Begin said, "Jews have the inalienable right to live anywhere in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip."

8/17/77—The Israeli government approved plans for three new Jewish settlements on the West Bank.

9/25/77—Begin told the ultrareligious Jewish group Gush Emunim that he intended to prevent them from establishing 11 new West Bank settlements.

11/20/77—Begin observed in his address to the Knesset during Sadat's visit, that, "The historical connection between the Jewish nation and Palestine known in Hebrew as 'Eretz Israel' has been renewed again."

12/18/77—Begin proposed West Bank autonomy plan to President Carter.

11/28/77—Begin presented a peace plan for the occupied territories [text appended]. Among the major points of the proposal: Israel would abolish its military administration in the territories and Arab administrative units would take their place to govern internal affairs; Arab residents would elect an 11-member administrative council that would serve a four-year term and oversee the needs of the Arab inhabitants; Israeli forces would remain in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to maintain security and public order; Arabs in both territories would have a choice of Israeli of Jordanian citizenship; Israelis would be permitted to purchase land and settle in the Arab territories, while the Arabs who chose Israeli citizenship would be allowed to buy land in Israel and settle there, and arrangements would be made for Palestinian immigration to the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Begin proposed that in the "knowledge that other claims exist" and "for the sake of agreement and the peace, that question of sovereignty [in the occupied territories] be left open."

1/3/78—Begin approved 3 new settlements, the first since Sadat's visit.

3/10/78—Begin said that UN Resolution 242 did not obligate Israel to withdraw from territory on all fronts.

9/17/78—Egypt, the United States, and Israel signed the Camp David Agreement [text appended], which provided for:

1. Negotiation of the status of the West Bank during the ensuing 5 years, based on UN Resolutions 242 and 338;

2. Withdrawal of Israeli military government;

3. Withdrawal of Israeli forces to specified security zones; hasn't yet occurred.

[Jordan and the Palestinians have refused to participate; withdrawal of the Israeli military government now appears to be occuring; withdrawal of Israeli forces to security zones has not yet occurred.]

9/27/78—Carter said he had "a very clear understanding" with Begin that the question of establishing new settlements in the occupied territories would be resolved by negotiations during a 5-year transitional period during which the final status of the West Bank would be decided. Carter challenged Begin's assertion that they had agreed to a freeze on new Israeli settlements on the West Bank only for the period of Israeli-Egyptian negotiations on a bilateral treaty, a process scheduled to take up 3 months. Carter said that he had dropped a demand that existing settlements not be expanded in return for Begin's agreement to an effective 5-year moratorium on new settlements.

10/25/78—Begin announced that it intended to expand existing Jewish settlements in the West Bank by means of a $15 million program to build 300 additional housing units, a reservoir, and roads.

10/26/78—Begin assured his supporters at a rally in Tel Aviv that his government would continue to "implement its right to settle anywhere within the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip."

1/15/79—The Israeli government said 3 new West Bank settlements would be established.

3/26/79—Israel signed a peace treaty with Egypt providing for Egyptian-Israeli-American negotiations on the final status of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

5/25/79—The first Egyptian-Israeli-American negotiating session on the final status of the occupied territories occurred.

6/11/79—Begin denounced critics of Israel's West Bank settlement policy as enemies of Israel and called the occupied territories "our land." He pledged to implement the autonomy plan in accordance with the Camp David accords.

1/22/80—Israel announced that municipal elections in the West Bank and Gaza would not be held as scheduled pending the outcome of negotiations on Palestinian autonomy.

2/4/80—Begin pledged to protect Christian establishments in Jerusalem and confirmed Israeli commitment to freedom of religion in Jerusalem.

3/6/80—Begin called the March 1 UN resolution demanding that Israel dismantle Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip "barbaric" and said Israel would refuse to abide by it.

3/23/80—The Cabinet approved a plan to build a religious school in the West Bank city of Hebron.

3/25/80—Begin rejected US envoy Sol Linowitz's proposal for a two-month freeze on Israeli settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

4/16/80—Begin said he was opposed to granting full legislative power to a proposed self-governing authority for West Bank and Gaza Arabs and said that the authority would have only responsibility over daily affairs, with Israel retaining responsibility for security.

5/25/80—The one-year deadline for determining the future of the occupied territories passed without any apparent progress.

6/10/80—Begin said 10 new settlements would be established on the West Bank and that these would be the last such settlements to be built in the occupied territories.

6/15/80—An Israeli communique likened the June 13 European Economic Community declaration calling for an end to Israeli occupation of the West Bank to Munich appeasement.

6/22/80—Israel announced Begin would transfer his office form West to East Jerusalem.

7/22/80—Israeli military authorities postponed the West Bank municipal elections indefinitely. The elections were scheduled for April 1980 but were temporarily postponed by the military authorities on 1/22/80.

7/23/80—The Israeli Knesset passed the second reading of the Jerusalem bill, which incorporates the eastern Arab section into the western, Jewish section and makes the whole city the capital of the state of Israel.

7/28/80—The Law, Constitution and Justice Committee of the Israeli Knesset attached an amendment to the Jerusalem bill before the Knesset that would delete the reference to the pre-1967 borders of the city, which will have the effect of leaving the ultimate boundary of the city open. The Knesset passed the Jerusalem law on July 30.

11/20/80—Begin reaffirmed his intention to maintain exclusive Israeli control over West Bank and Gaza security.

1/25/81—Haaretz newspaper reported that Begin wanted an additional 3,000 Israeli settlers to move to the West Bank to strengthen Israeli ties to the occupied territories. Haaretz speculated that Begin's move was insurance against his Likud faction losing the election and a reversal of the West Bank settlement policy by a Labor government. The next day, the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee of the Knesset approved three new settlements in the West Bank. The Begin government called for 10 new settlements.

3/11/81—Begin voted against a bill calling for annexation of the Golan Heights.

8/5/81—In his speech to the Knesset seeking a vote of confidence for the new cabinet, Begin said his government will continue to work toward the "advancement" of Israel's Arab and Druze citizens on the basis of "full integration" and "full equality of rights." The Prime Minister said President Reagan's statement (of 2/2/81) that the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories were "not illegal" was a "clear-cut announcement" that the Israeli position was justified. According to press reports from Israel, the basic guidelines presented to the Knesset by the Begin government said Israel would exercise complete sovereignty over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in 5 years, which might be interpreted as Israeli annexation of the territories.●

THE CAUSE OF CAPTIVE NATIONS

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, chairman of the National Captive Nations Committee and President of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America, is a well-known and respected leader for the cause of the captive nations. His recent article which appeared in winter edition of the Ukrainian Quarterly is reprinted below for the Members' enlightment:

GLOBAL PERCEPTIONS AND MISPERCEPTIONS

(By Lev E. Dobriansky)

In the summer of 1981 several vivid expressions of global perceptions and also misperceptions emerged almost concurrently as the United States and other countries were commemorating the 23rd observance of Captive Nations Week. They appeared in journals, newspapers and in other forms of media. They are of fundamental significance because they indicate the sufficiency or deficiency of basic conception and also holistic overview that largely predetermine the formulation, content, objectives and direction of foreign politico-economic policy. In fact, and without exaggeration, the views that were dominately expressed crystallize the essential divergences and disagreements of thought and action underlying this policy in the U.S.

For years now, one outstanding criticism of U.S. foreign policy has been its lack of coherency, consistency, and integrative global orientation. Some of the divergences of thought and concept to be shown here go back to the immediate post-World War II period, and in several respects even beyond that. In part, they account for these deficiencies in policy. For instance, a comparison of the leading concepts and overview in the Eisenhower Administration with those of subsequent administrations, down to the Carter one, would easily confirm the validity of our overall observation. Regardless of how one interprets or misinterprets the policy of eventual liberation in the 50s, Secretary of State Dulles displayed a far more knowledgeable grasp of the nature and posture of the Soviet Union in the world at large than have any of his successors in the following two decades. After a full generation a complete circuit has been turned, and we are faced with the same perennial problems of accurate understanding and realistic conceptions.

Here we shall focus our attention on three cases that exemplify global misperception more than perception. In themselves they vary as to the weight they assign to the Soviet Russian threat and the primacy of the East-West struggle. They are representative of the thinking of some circles in this country and abroad, and to a degree they repeat arguments which we thought were defused and scattered to bits over a quarter of a century ago. The fact that they focused to a greater or lesser extent on the Captive Nations Week observance is meaningful in itself. For anyone who has carefully read the original resolution on the captive nations, which the U.S. Congress passed in the summer of 1959, knows that its condensed content contains ideas and concepts which rest on the empirical evidence of history, present realities and the fine traditions of our country.

Before considering the first case, an article in the Foreign Affairs magazine, it should be noted that during the Polish crisis at the end of '81, Moscow once again assailed the West for its "interference," attributing it to our inherent "imperialism." It even extended this proverbial stance to accuse us of seeking to stimulate its intervention in Poland. As Pravda carried it, "Imperialist circles in the United States and other NATO countries are irritated over the fact that the events are not developing according to their scenario, which would inevitably involve Soviet interference."[1] Of course, the Russians have continually been there, indirectly dominating the Polish people. But what is significant about this and similar rhetorical acrobatics by Moscow is its patent abuse of the term "imperialism." The essence of the 1959 Congressional resolution is the prime and real force of Soviet Russian imperialism. From 1959 to the present the resolution has generated nothing but vehemence from Moscow and its satraps chiefly because it has officially fingered the real imperialist. How substantially different images in various parts of the world would be if the resolution and its vast implications were properly implemented!

Our first case for examination is the article written by Senator Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland in a prestigious magazine.[2] The Senator has been in the U.S. Senate since 1969. Prior to this period he served in the House of Representatives for eight years. He is currently on the Foreign Relations Committee and of late appears to be greatly concerned about the lobbying activities of so-called ethnic groups attempting to influence our foreign policy. As a by-product of this extensive article, his short comment "One Nation Divisible With Lobbies For All" also precipitated some discussion in the Washington area. Regarding the by-product, for instance, one critic who should know better claims that "the voices of the ethnic spokesmen have a limited audience" and "are restricted to their own constituencies."[3] To mention just a few achievements, pressure for VOA, Radio Liberty, the Captive Nations . . . Week, a Shevchenko statute in Washington, a listing of the Captive in the 1964 Republican National Convention Platform, the poltrade policy, the Helsinki Accords and so forth well demonstrate that the power of ideas prevails, not just the prospect of ethnic vote-getting and size of groups.

As to the Mathias article in Foreign Affairs, a Maryland State Senator, Julian L. Lapides, replied, "It was enlightening to learn of Sen. Mathias' views on ethnics and their lobbyists. I wish that he had the integrity to express those views one year prior to his reelection rather than one year after."[4] Though this line of reaction is not germane to our analysis here, it would be interesting for a researcher to reproduce what the Senator had to say before ethnic groups in Maryland in his struggle for reelection. Integrity is a factor in politics, and scores of legislators over the years have rightfully followed their convictions without necessarily endangering their tenure. But, as indicated, this is not the dimension of criticism for our analysis here. Our interest concentrates on the accuracy of the Senator's data, the logic and validity of his interpretations, and the soundness of his global perception. The same criteria will apply to the other two cases that emerged rather significantly in this same period of time.

On the level, then, of ideas rather than of ballot-box pressures, the Senator's presentation is found wanting in numerous respects. First, the very timing of it in the period of the Captive Nations Week observance should indicate the type of motivation behind the presentation. It would appear that honest scholarship was not the motivation, but rather one of calculated political intent to undermine the annual observance. No doubt, the Senator includes in his article the pressures exerted by Jewish, Greek, Irish and other American groups. But in global perspective and the focus placed on the captive nations issue it is evident what motivation was at play. This isn't the first time that an effort of this sort has been made. George Kennan, Senator Fulbright, Dean Rusk and others have questioned the resolution on Captive Nations Week, but none has had the courage to seek its rescission in the Congress. Public Law 86-90 is still on the books, just like Fulbright in the past, who was the chairman of the committee, Mathias is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and has a vantaged opportunity to submit a measure aimed at the resolution's revocation. Very simply, has he the courage to support the groundless views of his calculated presentation on this issue?

Mathias compares at the outset the groups in Washington's day pulling for the French or English and the ethnic groups today "who couple loyalty to America with bonds of affection for one country or another." He views American society as a diverse and heterogeneous one, "a nation of nations," a melting pot in which the constituent groups are not fully melted. The Senator also draws a distinction between "ethnicity," which he admits enriches American life and culture, and "organized ethnic interest groups, which sometimes press causes that derogate from the national interest." These, basically, are the guiding points in Mathias' exposition.

A little critical thought on the situation surrounding Washington in his day and the cultural environment today makes the analogy a somewhat silly and fragile one. The crucial test then was achieving and maintaining a new and independent nation; the crucial test today is the exercise of American world leadership, based on primary security interests, viable alliances, moral and military strength, human rights and the expansion of freedom. I know of no so-called ethnic spokesman who does not support such leadership fully. On particular issues impinging on areas where such spokesmen may, and often do, have more detailed knowledge than our official intelligence sources, they can be in error as to application and interpretation. But so can the Senator and others with less intimate knowledge and, yes, sentiment be subject to mistakes in strategic or tactical judgment. Mathias could have used a more appropriate parallel to Washington's problems had he cited Communist and fellow-traveling groups in our country seeking the colonialization of the U.S. by Moscow.

Concerning his other guiding points, it would do well for the legislator to read the Captive Nations Week resolution for a different conception of American society. Diverse, yes, for herein lies its primary source of renewed strength; a nation of nations, absurd, for the figuration isn't even logical and also belies his own attestation to the loyalty of these groups. The melting pot characterization is a poor and inaccurate one; that of a beautiful and richly expansive mosaic is far more to the point. As to his distinction between "ethnicity" and organized groups, enough has been said above, but an added observation on this is that the Senator exposes himself to the charge of denying free expression of views in what we all presumably hold as part and parcel of our precious democratic process, whether on domestic or foreign issues. God forbid that we adopt an elitist view of determining vital issues. One could fill a volume on the supposed knowledge and judgments of many in official positions dealing with such issues.

A substantial amount of space and thought is devoted by Mathias to Public Law 86-90, the Captive Nations Week resolution. It should be said at the start that the writer didn't personally experience the events . . . of the summer of 1959. He wasn't a Member of Congress then, and thus his observations are all second-hand and poor ones at that. The Senator initiates the subject with this one: "It mattered little in world affairs, for example, when Senators heaped denunciation on the Tsar of Russia for his brutal suppression of the Hungarian revolution in 1849. It was a more consequential matter when Congress, under pressure from East European nationality groups, in July 1959 unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the President to proclaim an annual 'Captive Nations Week.' By that time ethnic foreign policy pressures had become in Walter Lippmann's phrase 'a morbid experience.'[5] Parenthetically, and on the basis of my own experience, the columnist never understood the resolution and even refused to accept my articles clarifying it. On the other hand, David Lawrence in his column at the time characterized it as "an historic document."

So far, if we were to logically follow the import of Mathias' initial observation, all Americans from the President down should have remained mute during the 81-82 Polish crisis. One wonders what the Senator's reaction was, or was he fearful of consequences in the realm of the present Red Tsar of Russia? He doesn't know it because he wasn't involved at the time, but it might surprise him that the source of my inspiration to write the resolution and see it through to passage was the '56 Hungarian Revolution and the murder of Nagy. The resolution is inextricably bound up with the spirit and energies and displayed aspirations of all the post-World War II revolts, from Germany in 1953 to Poland in 1981-82. Its meaning and significance, of course, extend far beyond this. Moreover, Mathias commits his first factual inaccuracy when he speaks of "East European nationality groups" pressuring for the resolution's passage. The very opposite is the truth, and he would be hard put to furnish any evidence of such pressuring. Editorials at the time, in The Washington Post and the Washington Star as examples, made the same mistake. The climate, a few knowledgeable persons, and collective determination were all that was required. The groups joined with others to implement the resolution after President Eisenhower had signed it.

Mathias continues, "when Congress, on July 17, 1959, unanimously adopted the resolution calling for a Captive Nations Week, it is doubtful that many members considered themselves to have made a major foreign policy enactment. The resolution was 'churned out,' according to a syndicated columnist of the day 'along with other casual holiday proclamations, such as Natural Hot Dog Month."[6] He adds, "To Members of Congress the resolution (which President Eisenhower promptly implemented) was a more or less routine response to the wishes of Americans whose countries of origin had fallen under Soviet domination." These statements are quoted in full here and in context in order to preclude the usual rejoinder where evidence is found wanting.

Now, had Mathias been in the Congress then or had engaged in some research into the period rather than depend on one or two secondhand sources, he would have understood the mood of the Congress then and why the resolution was passed unanimously without the need of any hearings. To use a quote of some "syndicated columnist" which was quoted by some remote author scarcely measures reliable writing.[7] Moreover, the Senator shows poor taste in his selection, which cannot but reflect on the collective judgment of such outstanding sponsors like Senator Douglas of Illinois and Javits of New York, the original sponsor, Senator Humphrey and others of the seventeen constituting a broad spectrum of Senate representation. I'm not doubtful, I'm very certain that they perceived the challenging idea and essence of the resolution, having talked to them then, and that they weren't aware of equating it with any "holiday" proclamation or a routine measure to satisfy any particular group. However, the content and meaning of the resolution escapes the Senator's comprehension at this date, for with reference to it he would hardly use the simplistic phrase "Soviet domination."

With his obviously disturbed feelings about the resolution, the Senator continues: "It had been strongly supported by such groups as the Assembly of Captive European Nations, which had been founded in 1954 to work for the freedom and independence of the nations of Eastern and Central Europe, and was adopted by Congress verbatim from a draft submitted by professor Lev Dobriansky of Georgetown University, a zealous advocate of East European causes who became well known in the corridors and committees of Congress."[8] It would probably amaze the legislator to learn that the Assembly had absolutely nothing to do with the idea, the authorship and the processing of the resolution through Congress. In fact, once it became law, difficulties arose between the Assembly and the newly founded National Captive Nations Committee in the conduct of the observances. Here, too, Mathias fails to understand the narrow basis of ACEN, which was concerned exclusively with the few captive nations in Eastern Europe, and the global conceptual framework of the resolution, engendering other captive East European nations, such as Byelorussia, Ukraine, Cossackia, Georgia and others, as well as those in Asia and Cuba. It is also open-ended in text for more captive nations in Latin America, Africa and elsewhere.

Before registering his other inaccurate and misplaced observations the Senator points out that "thereafter, each year, Representatives and Senators have been reminded of the annual observance so they could place appropriate statements in the Congressional Record." The reader would think from this that the objective of the observances was to have statements printed in the Record. The facts are that with turnovers in Congress new legislators have to be apprized of Public Law 86-90 and veteran ones do have to be reminded. There are many particular issues that fall under the captive nations umbrella, ranging from Angola, for example, to the Moslems in the U.S.S.R., as another example. Moreover, these addresses and statements, provide needed material for our international broadcasts. In short, what the Senator doesn't seem to realize, and his article shows it, is that the resolution in the form of Public Law 86-90 is in existence and continually demands the support of Members of Congress as well as that of all Americans represented in Congress.

In what is disparate reasoning at its best, Mathias later observes that Moscow reacted to the inclusion of Armenia, Georgia and others in the resolution, this beyond the purview of ACEN interest and also suggestive of the ideational power of the resolution. As he points out, the resolution caused displeasure for Khrushchev and the then Vice President Nixon had to apologize "for what Khrushchev read as 'blatant interference' in the internal affairs of the Soviet Union."[9] He also states that Nixon said "Congress had the prerogative to pass such a resolution and moved on it," but that neither he nor Eisenhower "would have deliberately chosen to have a resolution of this type just before we were to visit the Soviet Union." Here, too, the facts belie this observation and had the Senator done some research, namely Nixon's book on My Six Crises (chapter five) he would have found his admission on being stunned by the Russian leader's reaction and explained that the resolution was only to offer prayers in behalf of the captive nations.

Like the Senator, Nixon had no understanding of what this is all about, and as president fell for the illusion of the Russian principle of "non-interference in the internal affairs" of the Soviet Union in the Moscow communique which he signed in May, 1972. It took President Carter to straighten this out with his insistence on human rights and the many treaties signed by Moscow to this effect. Armed conquest of independent-Russian republics and their subsequent subjugation in the framework of the Soviet Union are hardly props for this old Russian imperialist principle.

Seizing upon Nixon's presumed remarks about Congress moving on the resolution, Mathias reverts back to his speculative scenario by stating that "Congress, of course, had not 'moved' in the sense of having taken an autonomous policy initiative based on debate and deliberation. Congress had, in fact, been moved by interest groups whose goal, although desirable, was practically unattainable." In rebuttal enough has been said on this score. A consensus of broad sponsorship was sufficient then to move the resolution without costly hearings. Senators had ample time to debate it on the floor of the Senate, and at this stage the impact of interest groups wasn't even at work. In short, the idea was poignant—as, indeed, it still is today—and the environment was right and conducive.

Along with this repeated notion on congressional propriety, the Senator then introduces the liberation policy of the Eisenhower Administration. He writes, "the Eisenhower Administration had already been compelled by practical circumstances to abandon early facile statements about 'liberating' Eastern Europe from Soviet domination." By lumping this with the resolution Mathias attempts to show that "Liberation cannot be achieved" through mere rhetoric, that the resolution encourages false hopes, leads to bitterness, and exposes us to dangerous risks.[10] Can you imagine having someone of this frame of mind in the White House during a crisis of the Polish proportion?

Here, too, the Senator is just speculating about the experience of the Eisenhower Administration with the policy of eventual liberation. Based on my own direct experience with this development prior to the Republican National Convention in Chicago in 1952 and down to 1960, I can categorically affirm that it wasn't "practical circumstances" that caused the administration to give only lip-service to the policy; it was a persistent failure to understand what the policy meant. At a function in Newark during his campaign there, Senator Alexander Smith of New Jersey, who became the intermediary between candidate Eisenhower and Taft, asked me point-blank "Lev, what does this policy involve?" My answer, briefly, was that it involved a firm, moral commitment to the eventual freedom of the captive nations and a progressive programming of realistic means to abet the objective in time and to adequately cope with expected Soviet Russian challenges on all continents of the globe."

Not attainable? This isn't the place to discuss this vital issue except to point out that our protracted incapacity to grasp the nature of Soviet Russian psycho-political warfare has produced reverses for us in Vietnam, Cuba, parts of Africa and elsewhere. During each crisis, from the East German one in '53 to the Polish one in '81-82, we hear the same refrain, "What can we do?," "Why weren't we prepared for it?" A sensible policy of liberation as envisioned in '52 would have placed us in a far better position than what we have experienced. What's more and whatever we may name our policy, so long as it shies, for whatever reason, from an increasing concentration on the strategic non-Russian nations within the USSR, it will continue to be inadequate and ineffective. The Soviet Russians know this all too well. Clearly, it has been for this reason that from Khrushchev to Brezhnev they quiver when the Captive Nations Week resolution is brought forward. And contrary to the fears of a Mathias and many like him, an intelligent and knowledgeable implementation of Public Law 86-90, which invites a broad array of programs, would not lead to war. In fact, it would reinforce deterrents against one.

Almost lamenting it, the Senator virtually concludes his thought on the resolution by asserting, "Captive Nations Week is still proclaimed in the third week of July every year, and Senators and Representatives, with varying degrees of conviction, still make the required statements."[11] In his opinion the majority of our legislators believe the U.S. cannot bring freedom and self-determination to the captive peoples, that efforts to do so jeopardize limited improvements, and that they increase the chances of a dangerous confrontation between the superpowers. He also argues that with greater autonomy in Central Europe, groups like the Polish Americans and others become more bland. And his overall conclusion is that ethnic politics "have proven harmful to the national interest."

Now, as pointed out earlier, the Senator can test his opinion by seeking the elimination of Public Law 86-90 from the statutory books. Perhaps that will pave the way to a great debate which our country sorely needs on these fundamental issues. At this moment he has no evidence to support the opinion. On a sampling basis of the Week's observances and many other indicators, the very opposite would seem true. The logical implications of Mathias' other concluding points should be obvious. Carried to the extreme, America as the beacon light of freedom for the captive nations should cease, VOA, RL and RFE should dissolve into simple news carriers, trade should be completely positive with the totalitarian states and we should naively hope for improvements as the regimes strengthen themselves, and so on into many other areas. Briefly, if Washington had to depend on such timid resources and lack of vision, the Republic would never have been established. As to his correlation of blandness and improvements, he is clearly unfamiliar with so-called ethnic activity among Hungarian Americans, German, Slovak and other groups, and one wonders how he would treat Polish American activity during the Polish crisis. Finally, Mathias' overall conclusion rests on no proof at all. As emphasized earlier, our democracy accommodated all sorts of imputs which are processed accordingly, and those provided by the Senator are subject to the process of objective criticism as well. Plainly, his suggested elitism has no place in this Republic.

EXPORT TRADING COMPANY AND EXPORT ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENTS

HON. LARRY E. CRAIG

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, in June of this year, I appeared before this body to express the great need for export trading company and export administration legislation. Today, this legislation took another giant step forward with the passing of H.R. 1799—Export Administration Amendments Act and H.R. 6016—Export Trading Company Act. I want to extend my congratulations to all the members, but especially the committee chairmen and ranking minority members for their efforts in helping make this legislation into law.

Historically, many U.S. businesses have been reluctant to enter into foreign trade because of the perceived complexities of engaging in international transactions. Foreign languages, distances, variations in consumer preferences, and different market practices have discouraged consideration of international sales. Another major problem has been the discouraging nature of the U.S. laws and regulations which are often more difficult to work through than the idiosyncracies of foreign markets. Much of the frustration being caused by regulatory policy is because Government leaders have simply not made a sufficient commitment to vigorous promotion of U.S. exports.

As I have mentioned before, increased exports means increased American jobs, thousands of them. Currently, one out of every eight manufacturing jobs in the United States, and one out of every three jobs in the agricultural sector, are related to exports. An increase of only 5 percent in our exports would support over 300,000 additional American jobs.

In my own State, the estimated increase in employment resulting from the export trading company legislation would be 720 new jobs on the low end to an estimated 1,110 new jobs on the high end. The value of this legislation cannot be underestimated. And I believe another point is brought to the surface: The significance of exports to the economic well-being of this country should never be minimized.

Export trading company and export administration amendments will give American business—particularly smaller business—a badly needed shot in the arm. By acting as trade intermediaries, these trading companies can provide a full range of export services and functions that will help our companies realize the economies of scale necessary to make their products competitive in the world market.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this legislation is a positive step toward alleviating some of the trade deficits in this country. And once again, I commend the Committees on Foreign Affairs, Banking, and the Judiciary for the actions they have taken.●

ON VIRTUE, COCAINE, AND HOMOSEXUALITY IN THE NATION'S CAPITOL

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, our Founding Fathers considered virtue—moral excellence based upon religious principle—to be an indispensable foundation for the governance and survival of our Republic and, indeed, of any republic. James Madison, the "Father of the Constitution," once observed:

> But I go on this great republican principle, that the people will have virtue and intelligence to select men of virtue and wisdom. Is there no virtue among us? If there be not, we are in a wretched situation. No theoretical checks, no form of government can render us secure.

Virtue was to be especially characteristic of political leaders to whom citizens looked for inspiration and guidance.

It is a sad commentary upon our times, Mr. Speaker, to see how far we have fallen from the noble vision and ideals of our Founding Fathers. I am submitting for the RECORD a transcript of an interview on the use of cocaine and homosexuality in the Nation's Capitol—conducted by the Westinghouse Broadcasting & Cable Co. Group W Newsfeed. It is my hope that by presenting this material, we Members of Congress may realize the grave obligation we have, particularly in the age of the all-seeing camera, to live exemplary lives of virtue, and so recall the warning of George Washington in his Farewell Address:

> Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness.

COCAINE

PATRICIA SAGON (Reporter). Rock stars take it. The people in their audience and lots of ordinary people take it. They say it makes you feel great—like you're on top of the world. Now we learn maybe 16 Members of Congress take it too. Cocaine has been called, quite seriously, a middle class high.

SAGON. So it's really not suprising that mere mortals here on Capitol Hill might have tried the stuff and even liked it, but isn't the power here intoxicating enough? For a few it may not be.

Dr. ROBERT DUPONT (Founder, Nat'l Institute of Drug Abuse). Even if you're a Congressman or a Senator or a rock star or whatever else, the amount of time that you're actually on and people are clapping and jumping up and down and saying ooh la la to you is a very short period of time. Most of the time they lead very ordinary lifestyles even when they are very successful. And for people who get really hooked on all the excitement they are vulnerable to a drug that will bring them back that feeling.

SAGON. This Washington undercover cop knows the social scene.

WASH. D.C. UNDERCOVER NARCOTICS OFFICER (Identity concealed). Cocaine trafficking in Washington is throughout the entire city. I've made purchases of cocaine from Capitol Hill to Georgetown.

SAGON. The drug world met the White House world when investigators probed charges that Jimmy Carter's top aide, Hamilton Jordan, took cocaine at New York's Studio 54. citing insufficient evidence, they cleared Jordan. The recent death of John Belushi reminded everyone of the Hollywood cocaine connection. Belushi died after reportedly taking a mix of coke and heroin. Comedian Richard Pryor had a near miss with death after taking the drug for three days straight. But entertainers are different, right? They live in another world. What about a public official? What about his job?

Dr. ROBERT DUPONT. A person would be erratic in paying attention to the important legislative work, doing the homework and all the nitty gritty details would pale in insignificance compared to the excitement of the cocaine use.

SAGON. It was this California Congressman who triggered the current drug probe.

Rep. ROBERT K. DORNAN of California. People say if stars can do it, why can't I? If basketball and football heroes can do it, why can't I? Imagine what they're going to do, if they say, people elected to the Congress, who make our laws, our solons, they do it, so why can't I? It will have a devastating effect upon the whole population.

SAGON. This is Patricia Sagon on Capitol Hill.

GAY LIFE IN D.C. PART 1

PATRICIA SAGON (reporter). The Nation's Capitol has one of the largest and most accepted gay communities in America. Like the city's main industry, Government, many of the city's gays are employed by Uncle Sam.

FRANKLIN KAMENY (Gay rights leader). We've played our politics wisely, sophisticatedly, and astutely and have created for ourselves here in Washington what is the most comfortable city in the country for a gay person to live in, work in, play in and just be in.

SAGON. At night, they return to their own world, much of it in the shadow of the U.S. Capitol. There are homosexual bars and discos, faceless storefronts and flashing signs. Baths and porno bookstores—all in the business to cater to the estimated 50,000 homosexuals in Washington. Gay newspapers are openly sold advertising flesh for sale. The Capitol's yellow pages let you order up a sex partner from any of the escort services—let your fingers do the cruising—sex is just a phone call away. Allegations of a homosexual scandal with Congressmen and pages do not faze them much. Their world is not the same.

D.C. GAY PERSON. People who are gay in Washington live a gay life and the gay community is very vibrant here. People who are living straight lives and experimenting with their gay desires are not a part of that community—it's a whole different issue.

SAGON. But there is violence in the gay community—at the famous Iwo Jima Monument across the river in Arlington, homosexual men are known to frequent this memorial to bravery in World War II. Six years ago a congressional aide was beaten to death by three other men.

Sgt. ROGER PHILLIPS (U.S. Park Police). When they go into those areas after dark they subject themselves to the potential for real violence.

FRANKLIN KAMENY. Hatred is an ugly thing and it manifests itself in all kinds of ways and this is one of the ways it manifests itself.

SAGON. "Richard" is a young prostitute who works the violent Washington street scene.

"RICHARD" (Hustler). It is supposed to be the Nation's Capitol. D.C. is so corrupted—it's like the neighborhood John. You name it and I've been to bed with it and the money's been good. This is the only thing I'm good at is hustling my body.

SAGON. This is Patricia Sagon in Washington.●

DRAFT AMENDMENT CREATES PAPERWORK

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I continue to have serious concerns about an amendment being offered to section 902 of H.R. 6030, the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1983. It would amend the Military Selective Service Act to make any male, who is required to register with the Selective Service and has failed to do so, ineligible for any form of assistance provided under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended. This provision would create an administrative nightmare for institutions of postsecondary education throughout this country.

The amendment would require the Director of the Selective Service System to submit to the Secretary of Education the names of those individuals who are participating in any program or who are receiving funds authorized under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 who have not submitted to registration pursuant to section 3 of the Military Selective Service Act.

The Secretary is then required to make a determination as to whether or not the individual has complied with or violated Section 3. If the person has not registered, the Secretary must notify the individual that he is not in compliance and that he has at least 30 days to conform to the registration provisions or submit information to the Secretary of Education showing that he has already complied with the requirement. The Secretary, after taking into consideration any information submitted by the individual, must then make a final determination regarding the person's registration status. If the person has violated section 3, the Secretary shall take all possible actions to insure that the student does not receive any benefits from the title V provisions.

I suggest to my colleagues that, regardless of your position on this amendment, it cannot be implemented by the Secretary of Education and the Director of the Selective Service without creating a tremendous paperwork burden for all parties concerned.

Given the fact that the Educational Department does not have individual records on each title IV recipient, it is impossible for the Secretary to identify those persons who should have registered and who are receiving assistance. Therefore, the Secretary would have to go to the individual institutions, States, or guarantee agencies to secure this information on a student-by-student basis. The costs and workload of securing such information would be enormous and might well take several months before any satisfactory response could be received.

Timing is also a consideration since the amendment is to go into effect October 1, 1982. Given the Department's recent track record of issuing regulations, developing computer systems, and obtaining approval from the Office of Management and Budget on required forms, it is unlikely that it could meet an October 1, 1983, deadline for implementation of the amendment. The Department has notified the sponsors of this amendment and the Office of Management and Budget that, in their opinion, section 902 is not the best means by which to accomplish this goal since it would require a level of unnecessary Federal intrusion and administrative complexity and burden which they would like to avoid. The Department's Office of General Counsel has also noted that there would be immense administrative, regulatory, and enforcement burden imposed upon all parties with this amendment. They further stated that there are potential Federal Privacy Act violations if social security numbers are to be used in matching aid recipients with draft registrants and possible problems of conditioning receipt or termination of Pell grant entitlements on certification of registration. Even if the Secretary could enforce this amendment, there is a belief that it could only be done at the current time for students who have applied for or are receiving Pell grant funds. This would only include those students from the lowest income families. However, since the requirement only affects males, it is interesting to note that the fact that there are duplicate social security numbers legitimately in existence, the Secretary could unknowingly deny benefits to a female student who is not subject to these provisions.

The Department of Education has suggested that section 484(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 be amended to require each male student to file with the institution a statement of compliance with section 3 of the Military Selective Service Act and, further, that the Secretary be authorized to prescribe the methods for verifying such statements of compliance. The Selective Service no longer issues registrants identification cards which, if they did exist, would facilitate status verification. Instead, registrants are only provided with a letter acknowledging that their registration has been received. Since many students do not keep the letter, the Secretary would then have to ask the institution to collect the compliance statements and send them to the Secretary who, in turn, would have to take the notices from over 8,000 institutions, convert them to a computer tape which would then be matched with the Selective Service tape sorting out the exceptions which then would be reported back to the institution or the individual registrant to either give them an opportunity to come into compliance or be terminated from further assistance.

I suggest that this would be a very costly procedure which would greatly increase regulatory and reporting burdens on all parties at a time when the administration is advocating a reduction in such activity.●

THE COSTS OF THE BRINK'S CASE AND THE NEED TO RELIEVE THE BURDEN ON LOCAL TAXPAYERS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, on October 20, 1981, a group of alleged underground terrorists, some of whom had been wanted by the FBI since the 1960's, participated in the robbery of a Brink's armored truck at the Nanuet Mall in Rockland County, N.Y. In the course of the robbery and escape, one guard and two local policemen were killed. Six alleged terrorists are about to come to trial in Rockland County in connection with this crime, and with indictments brought by the Federal Government.

Although this case has national implications, and has brought the eyes of the Nation upon Rockland County, the extra costs of the trial itself and the attendant security have to be borne by the local government. Evidence has been found that national terrorist groups plan to make the trial a cause celebre, and yet the Federal Government so far has been unable to find the means to reimburse the county for these expenses which were and will be accumulated by the county through no choice of its own.

Our local Rockland County officials, including the chairman of the legislature, the sheriff, and the district attorney, estimate that these additional expenses will amount to between $2.7 million and $3.1 million. This is an unfair burden for a small county government, already overburdened with taxes, to assume.

In order to help the local officials in Rockland County meet the extraordinary costs involved in pursuing this prosecution, and to help other communities so situated, I am today introducing the Local Prosecutor's and Sheriff's Relief Act of 1982.

This bill enables the Attorney General of the United States to make grants to State and local authorities to help them meet the expenses of prosecutions and associated security costs when they are prosecuting a defendant in a case involving a clear Federal interest.

The grant procedure is designed to be simple and straightforward. The Attorney General will have broad discretion as to which applications, if any, would be funded. It is anticipated that he would be able to take swift action on all applications.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that desperate criminals, wanted by Federal authorities, often break State laws. We have seen this happen in Rockland County in the Brinks case. The people of Rockland County have paid a substantial cost in human life in apprehending these criminals. The Federal Government should now help them to successfully complete these prosecutions without disrupting the budget of the entire county.

Mr. Speaker, I am inserting a copy of the bill I am introducing today at this point in the RECORD, and I ask each of my colleagues to join with me in cosponsoring this legislation.

The bill follows:

H.R. 6868

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. That this Act may be cited as "The Local Prosecutor's and Sheriff's Relief Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. The Attorney General, in his sole discretion, is authorized to make grants to State or Local governments for the purposes set forth in Section 3, if he deems an application made by a State or Local government to merit payment under this Act.

SEC. 3. Grants under this Act may be made to assist State and Local governments

(1) to meet the expenses of prosecuting a defendant or defendants,

(2) to meet the expenses of maintaining courtroom security, or

(3) to meet the expenses of maintaining a defendant or defendants safely and securely in custody, when a federal interest is served by the vigorous prosecution of such defendant or defendants.

SEC. 4. The Attorney General is authorized to prescribe such rules as are necessary to carry out this Act, including rules regarding the disposition and accounting of funds granted under this Act.

SEC. 5. The Attorney General may approve in whole or in part, or deny, any application for a grant under this Act.

SEC. 6. Grants under this Act may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement.

SEC. 7. Grants under this Act may be made to reimburse costs incurred at any time after June 1, 1981.

SEC. 8. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984.●

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, during the observance of this 24th anniversary of Captive Nations Week, I am proud to rise with my colleagues and compatriots throughout the United States, in voicing our strong support, unwavering admiration, and heartfelt sympathy for those nations caught in the grip of communism.

This is a special week for all freedom-loving people to recognize the Communist aggression felt by the people of Poland, Hungary, Lithuania, North and South Vietnam, and Afghanistan, to name a few; and also recommit ourselves to the exercise of basic individual rights that has been denied the people of these captive nations. It is a time to realize that in the United States where freedom is a birthright that is so often taken for granted, it is a right that has been taken from these nations. For them, their only freedom has sometimes been a memory and always a dream for the future.

The time is now for the United States to stand stronger and taller as the citadel of human freedom, and for its citizens to be the leaders in bringing freedom and independence to these people. We have a responsibility to these captive nations who have provided us with shining examples of courage and determination, and who have also enriched our lives with the emigration of their fellow countrymen to the United States.

The United States is indeed fortunate to have been able to benefit from the heritage of these nations. They have instilled in American communities a strong sense of appreciation for what freedom is and have passed along to others the empathy they still maintain for their homelands. All American citizens should join with these people in hope and prayer for the day when their homelands will be free and people can live without fear.

The Soviet Government has for the last three decades dominated and controlled the lives of those who reside within their boundaries. That denial of human dignity has shown itself in many ways, including the separation of families, the imposition of restrictions upon freedoms of speech, travel, and religion, and the exiling and imprisonment of those who still dare to speak out against oppression in their native lands. The headlines of the past month have served to remind us of the ever-present tyranny and the courageous struggles which continue daily for freedom.

Captive Nations Week is not a pleasant observance. Not for us. Not for the peoples of the captive nations. And, I would hope, not for the Soviets, Nor should it be. I look forward to the day when we will no longer have to hold this observance, that day may finally come when no nation will be deprived of independence, freedom, and human rights.●

CONGRESSMAN MILLER ADDRESSES NATIONAL MEETING

HON. GERALDINE A. FERRARO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, Congressman GEORGE MILLER of California, recently was a keynote speaker at the national meeting of the United Presbyterian Women. Congressman MILLER was selected to address this convention of 5,500 politically active and socially conscious women from throughout the world because of the exemplary leadership he has offered in such crucial areas as education, nutrition, foster care and adoption reform, women's rights, and human rights throughout the world.

Congressman MILLER told the national meeting that our historic national commitment to social justice and human rights is under assault today because of well orchestrated assaults from extremist, narrowminded groups and politicians. His message is one which should be read carefully by the Members of this body and by the general public throughout this Nation. I would like to share the text of this thoughtful and well received address with all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN GEORGE MILLER

It is with a great deal of pleasure and hope that I address you today.

Pleasure—to be among so many friends who have led the fight for economic justice and equity; and Hope—that from this conference will emerge conscientious leadership for a troubled Nation.

It is particularly appropriate that your organization has chosen to consider "economic difficulties and inequities" in this Nation. Because, when you talk about poverty, when you talk about wage discrimination, when you talk about inequities in retirement benefits, you are talking about women.

And when you talk about women, you are talking about the children who depend on them.

During the next several days, you have the opportunity to reaffirm your commitment to justice, equity, and economic opportunity—not as defined by political rhetoric, but according to the fundamental principles of your faith.

For decades, that faith has helped you to lead the way for social and economic justice not only here in the United States, but around the world. Today, your commitment to that faith, and those ideals, are being tested as never before.

For today, the world anxiously watches as a profusion of small conflicts raises the unthinkable spectre of a possible nuclear Holocaust.

Poverty, unemployment and urban decay, which were on the decline in the 1960s and 1970s, are again reaching dangerous levels.

Inequality, intolerance and prejudice, which have no place in this society, are again appearing with frightening openness.

As a member of the Congress of the United States, I am constantly challenged by those who ask what government can do to address these social and economic crises.

There are those who argue, with considerable popular support, that government can do nothing to remedy these problems because government, itself, is the problem.

I reject that rhetorical and narrow view, and so must you. As I look back over the last fifty years, I see a government that has attempted to achieve the goals of economic equality and humanity in this country. And during those fifty years, we have recorded accomplishments unprecedented elsewhere in the world.

The pain of hunger and malnutrition, compelled the American people to build an agriculture system which feeds much of the world. We created programs to feed pregnant women, the elderly, the poor, the school children—and we largely eliminated hunger in this country.

The tragedies of illiteracy and inadequate skills led us to create education and job training programs that have produced the most expansive educational system, the best educated people, and one of the highest standards of living in the world;

The injustice of oppression and discrimination led the government to enact and enforce laws to assure civil and voting rights, to end prejudice in schools and housing; and we will still enact a constitutional amendment to assure full equality to women in America.

The plight of the aged, the ill, and the disabled who had been warehoused in institutions led the American people to create social security and medicare; we established a rehabilitation program and supplemental security assistance; and we opened the classrooms of the Nation to millions of handicapped children.

But today, somehow, that vision and that sense of history has been lost. Instead of serving as the catalyst for the improvement of society, government has been characterized as the enemy of the people it was created to serve.

Decades of achievement have been blurred and forgotten. In place of that record is the shrill rhetoric of those who appear unaware of, or unmoved by, inequality, injustice and despair that remain in our society. I was both alarmed and saddened to read one of the editors of the largest newspaper in America recently declare that there are no more poor people in the United States, only "a few hermits."

We cannot tolerate this ignorance and lack of concern for the plight of the poor, the unemployed family, and for our children. Because the standard for this Nation was set long ago: Whenever you helped "one of the least important of these brothers of mine you did it for me."

This must be our standard, not one defined by any current or temporary leader.

This must be our standard, not political popularity, not our standing in the Harris polls, nor our chances for reelection.

Matthew's teaching is the standard by which we will be judged. We must reaffirm our commitment to this principle and reject those who have mistakenly taken a mandate for better government and charted a course of political extremism, a course that excludes millions of Americans from sharing in the bounty of this country.

Surely, it is tragic for a government to know of the great needs of its people, but be unable to aid them, as in so many underdeveloped nations.

But it is far more tragic for a government to possess the ability to relieve the suffering of its people, and yet to turn away, or to single them out for ridicule as frauds and loafers. The poor, the unemployed, abused children, food stamp recipients, the disturbed—many of them victims of crises beyond their control.

We would all be making a tragic mistake if we do not recognize that these people are not strangers. They are our neighbors:

They are two-thirds of poor adults in this country who are women;

They are the 60 percent of working women in this country who need child care for their children;

They are the majority of the elderly who are women, millions of whom live in poverty, and nearly half of whom live alone.

It is particularly distressing that the very officials who are calling for the dismantling of so many effective programs confess that the programs work—that they save children, that they save money, that they are effective.

The Education Secretary admitted that title I helps disadvantaged children do better in school. But he endorses cuts of hundreds of millions from that program.

The Deputy Agriculture Secretary testified that WIC saves lives and produces healthier babies. But he wants to slash hundreds of millions from that program.

The official in charge of Head Start and the President call it one of the most effective programs, and yet have endorsed major cuts.

Can anyone believe that they, or the administration they represent, want to cut these programs to make them work better? Or is there a different agenda? Is the goal not to improve the programs, but to destroy them?

I fear that the architects of these policies seek not to build on our traditions but instead to abandon our commitment, and they cloak their negativism in the rhetoric of religion.

By their twisted rhetoric, child abuse laws are anti-family.

Ignoring the fact that social security has lifted tens of millions of our elderly out of poverty, they call the system "the most tragic and criminal plunder ever perpetrated against the American people."

They denounce public education as the worst evil facing America, except perhaps for efforts to control the spread of nuclear weapons.

In their personal interpretation of the scriptures, they find support for their entire political agenda—from support for Taiwan to a balanced budget amendment.

But we cannot allow this narrow misreading of history to deter us from our historic commitment to economic equality and justice.

Maintaining our commitment to economic justice does not mean levelling incomes or denying just rewards to those who have earned them fairly.

Economic justice means that a worker can earn a living without suffering disabling exposures to dangerous products.

Economic justice means assuring women the right to good jobs at comparable salaries.

Economic justice means that profitable corporations will invest those profits in our communities, in healthy workplaces, and in safe products instead of shutting down factories and shipping profits abroad

Our campaign for economic justice and equality is not complete. We need only look to this great unfinished agenda to recognize that a fair, compassionate, and intelligent government has a major role to play in that campaign.

Those who seek to remove government from that role are not only opposed to the participation of government, but are opposed to the achievement of those goals.

Their opposition is disguised in well known code words—"states' rights", "cutting red tape", and "getting government off our back". But we have seen the government-free America:

A "Jim Crow" America where equality did not extend to blacks or women or other minorities;

A Hooverite America where banks and businesses parlayed their freedom from regulation into economic chaos;

A robber baron America where private greed perverted politicians, poisoned workers, and raped the environment;

A gilded age America, where the powerful and the wealthy enjoyed the fruits of other peoples' labor, while the sick, the poor, the elderly and the workers begged for compassion.

We have seen that version of America, and we measure our progress as a Nation by our achievements in overcoming it.

We have seen that vision of America, and we have rejected it, and America has rejected it.

The Federal Government did not take on those responsibilities casually, and it did not achieve those improvements alone. It was done in response to the activism of our citizens who organized the boycotts, the voter registration drives, the demonstrations, the vigils, and the election campaigns which forced government to confront the inequality and injustice in our society.

In the past, you have helped us remove great obstacles and achieve great things for the people of this Nation, and for the people of the world. Let us renew that partnership and recommit ourselves to those goals.

We desperately need your voices and your leadership again. As you cannot achieve all of your goals without the assistance of our government, then most certainly government cannot, and will not, respond without your activism, your persistence, and your commitment.●

PRIVATE, NONCOMMERCIAL USERS OF VIDEO RECORDERS SHOULD NOT PAY ROYALTY TAX

HON. THOMAS S. FOLEY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, last month, my friends Jack Valenti and Charlie Ferris appeared on the Cable News Network (CNN) to debate the issue of copyright liability for the use of video cassette recorders. This program, which was available to the cable television system's cumulative subscriber base of 11.8 million people throughout the country, provided a unique opportunity for consumers to carefully listen to the arguments on both sides of this issue.

One of the many systems that carries Cable News Network programming is QUBE in Columbus and Cincinnati, Ohio, whose two-way cable system permits, among other things, instantaneous polling of public opinion by allowing viewers to electronically register their views on stated questions. In this way, the QUBE system has provided the opportunity for many viewers to register their opinion on the issue for the first time.

Prior to the beginning of the debate on the video cassette recorder controversy, Cable News Network anchors asked QUBE viewers the question: "Should home tapers have to pay a royalty fee on recorders/blank tapes?" To this, 70 percent of those responding indicated that they opposed such a royalty fee, while 16 percent favored it. A further 7 percent were undecided.

At the conclusion of the debate when the question was rephrased to provide for the option of imposing a royalty fee on manufacturers of video recording equipment, the majority of QUBE viewers continued to oppose the imposition of a royalty, this time responding 81 percent opposed, 16 percent in favor and 3 percent undecided.

As the sponsor of H.R. 5250, a bill to exempt from the provisions of copyright law the private, noncommercial use of video recorders in the home, I was gratified by this overwhelming demonstration of public support. This sampling of popular opinion underscores the fact that the American public feels that such a royalty tax would be unfair, unnecessary and unworkable.●

EL SALVADOR

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, in January of this year I had the unique opportunity to learn from an eyewitness source of a military operation conducted by U.S.-backed Salvadorn troops against a column of close to 1,000 refugees in the Cabanas Province of El Salvador. Phillipe Bourgois, an American graduate student from Stanford University, related to me and later to the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Inter-American Affairs, his chilling account of the massive aerial attack launched upon the civilian population.

In response to these atrocities, I, along with several of my colleagues issued a letter to President Reagan asking for a full-scale investigation into Mr. Bourgois' allegations. In April, I received a response from the State Department noting that the administration "could neither confirm or disprove Mr. Bourgois' account" but explained the "noncombatant casualties are difficult to avoid when these groups (guerrillas) are found and engaged by the Salvadoran military."

Recently, Christopher Dickey wrote an article (Post June 21, 1982) entitled, "Salvadoran Colonel Turning Rebels' Tactics Against Them," which cites the "new kind of warfare" being waged by government troops against guerrillas which is "costly in casualties * * * but relatively cheap in dollars". These "new" counterinsurgency tactics involve the tracking, ambushing, and killing of all guerrillas sealed within a particular radius. American military advisers in El Salvador have been quoted as being very pleased with the utilization of such tactics and are staking military victory on their effectiveness.

I am particularly disturbed by the accomplishments of Lt. Colonel Ochoa of the Salvadoran army, who is noted by Dickey as having "methodically cleaned out Cabanas' terrain within 6 months" and yet is acclaimed by U.S. advisers as being "their kind of commander."

With the recertification of military aid upon us, I, for one have serious difficulty supporting U.S. participation in the Salvadoran conflict when contradictions and incongruent accounts have yet to be resolved.

I ask my colleagues to carefully examine the following articles to determine for themselves the wisdom of maintaining our current policy of providing military aid to El Salvador.

The articles follow:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 14, 1982]

RUNNING FOR MY LIFE IN EL SALVADOR

(By Philippe Bourgois)

I crossed the Lempa River from Honduras into El Salvador shortly before dawn. I wanted to see firsthand the land and kinds of villages Salvadoran refugees had come from.

Although the area I entered—Cabanas Province—was considered an FMLN [Frente Farabundo Marti para la Liberacion Nacional] stronghold, no shot had been fired there in eight months, and Salvadoran government forces only enter known guerrilla strongholds on major military operations.

In November, the days were sunny, warm and clear. I brought an extra shirt and pair of underwear, planning only to stay 48 hours.

The peasants were a friendly group, curious about my work but always unobtrusive. I had been in Central America several times; in fact, I had written my honors thesis at Harvard on how the Mayan Indians in Belize were reacting to economic development. I am fluent in Spanish. The children followed me everywhere.

Shortly before dawn on the day I was scheduled to leave I was sleeping in a peasant hut when a little boy came running up in tears to say Honduran troops had lined up along the far bank of the river and were shooting into it to discourage anyone from crossing over. He was quickly followed by other peasants, who reported that Salvadoran soldiers were surrounding us.

As soon as the sun rose, as soon as visibility was good, the Salvadoran troops attacked with U.S. Huey helicopter gunships. Everyone ran away from the huts. I was told they would be the first things strafed.

We all ran to a nearby cliffside and huddled as best we could in small cavities the peasants had dug there. Unfortunately, there weren't enough for everybody, so we often shielded the women and children in the cavities with our bodies.

I learned that some 1,200 to 1,500 soldiers, including members of the elite Atlacatl battalion which was trained by U.S. military advisers, had sealed off a 30-square-mile zone. For the next four days, under heavy aerial bombardment and land attack, 1,000 Salvadoran peasants—mostly women, children and elderly people—and I zig-zagged through the area running for our lives. I did as I was told by the peasants, who had experienced a similar offensive in March.

The young males, mostly FMLN fighters, had lined themselves up along the perimeter of the zone to fight the government ground forces. They kept their distance to avoid drawing fire toward us.

We hid by day behind trees and boulders, in underbrush and in small caves. The rainy season had ended three weeks earlier, which meant the foliage was still thick enough to hide in and there were fewer mosquitoes. I wasn't prepared, however, for the cold when the sun went down, and I shivered all night.

When the bombardments and strafings began, we would take cover anywhere we could. I had never been in a combat situation before. I remember lying with my face in the dirt while bullets whistled around me. The terrifying thing is that you can hear them coming. I never really believed before that you could actually hear bullets.

I was also told to crouch beside a tree trunk and, whatever I did, not to move. They'd shoot at anything that moved. I remember inching around a tree trunk to keep something solid between me and the machine-gun fire of the helicopters flown by the Salvadoran air force. We were also bombarded by Fouga-Magister jets and old-fashioned mortars.

A mortar projectile makes a soft sound when it is fired. Then you have to wait 30 seconds before it reaches its target. So you wait—breathless—hoping this time you are not the target. Sometimes the mortar shots came 10 times in a row, and there's a tremendous sense of panic when you hear them getting closer and closer.

I was told that when I heard a mortar fired, I should grit my teeth and keep my mouth open to prevent my ear drums from rupturing.

I was more afraid of being wounded than dying. We had almost no medical supplies, and I had this fear of being roughly dragged around the country on somebody's back for days without medication.

Unfortunately, I was forced to see the suffering of the wounded in gory detail. On the first four days, I know of about 15 men, women and children who were wounded. Shrapnel was removed, and amputations were performed with absolutely no pain medicine.

The helicopters and jets would attack up to 10 to 12 times per day. During those break periods, we would cook and try to eat as much as possible. We knew if we survived we would have to flee from this place, and we didn't know when we'd be able to eat again. We would need our strength, but I just couldn't choke down the food. I lost 25 pounds during the ordeal.

At night, because the airplanes couldn't circulate, we'd be bombarded even more heavily by the mortars. You'd never have a long enough period of time to sleep. Most of the people were wounded at night because they were tired of crouching behind a boulder. They'd stretch out on the ground to sleep and get hit by shrapnel.

The guerrillas I saw did not have aircraft or the sophisticated U.S. weapons that the government forces had. The weapons I saw them with were primarily World War II vintage, taken from the government paramilitary forces, the loyalist peasant troops, because they are the easiest to ambush. The FMLN fighters had a handful of newer guns stripped from government regular army soldiers.

The rebels barely had enough ammunition, so it was only a matter of time before they were overrun. They would occasionally pass us in groups of two or three and calm us. "Don't panic," they'd say. "Everything's OK."

After four days, we knew we had to get out of the region, but the Honduran troops still barred our escape across the river. We were forced to head deeper into Salvadoran territory.

An FMLN scout told us, "Tonight's the night," so all the noncombatants gathered in a field in the middle of the night. We marched single-file along a path toward the line of fire. We hoped to run through the line undetected.

We were on a rocky path, with a Salvadoran gunpost off to the left. FMLN guerrillas, also on our left and to the rear, drew their fire while we made a break for it. The babies the women were carrying were shrieking at the noise and, as soon as we got within earshot, the Salvadoran forces turned their fire on us.

At that point, it was pandemonium. Grenades were landing around us, machine guns were firing; we were running. I saw two prople die that night. A little boy about 20 yards ahead of me was blown in half when a grenade landed on him. His body lay in the middle of the path, so I had to run over it to escape. An older woman was shot next to me.

About 1,000 of us were running at once as fast as we could, and roughly three-quarters made it before the Salvadoran troops sealed off the path. Two to three hundred of the peasants were forced to go back into the battle zone.

For the next six days, I found myself in a no-man's land, hiding during the day, running and looking for food and better shelter at night. I don't know how far I traveled or where I was.

I shivered awake each morning to another 12 hours of anguish. One night I dreamed I was safely out of El Salvador; I was in New York, telling my friends the story. Then I realized I was still here, worried a helicopter would spot us or that military patrols would hear the hubbub of the camp.

It's amazing that these people didn't have more discipline. As soon as they thought they were safe, they would laugh and joke, even play their radios, when any one of these noises could have gotten all 700 of us killed in a jiffy.

One of the major hazards we always faced was the noise of crying babies and the moans of the wounded making the whole group vulnerable to detection. Rags were stuffed in the mouths of the wounded so their cries would not be heard. The babies cried a lot because they were hungry; their mothers' milk had dried up. We played with the babies to distract them; we put leaves in their mouths so they wouldn't cry.

I held the legs of a little boy while shrapnel was removed from him. We stuffed a rag in his mouth so his screams of pain wouldn't alert the government troops. He died later, but we couldn't even bury him properly. We buried him under a bush.

We had some cotton to clean wounds, but it quickly became bloody and mud-stained. We kept using it anyway. Some of the young people from the villages had some very basic medical training, and they helped care for their wounded.

Some of the sights were just horrible, I helped a woman whose chin had been blown completely away stay alive for 10 days by squeezing orange juice down her throat.

One woman who was killed was the mother of two children, one two months old, the other two years old. The baby the mother had been nursing was severely malnourished by the time I left.

A young woman gave birth on the second night of our flight. She was up and running for her life the next day, along with the rest of us. Those of us who were young and healthy were lucky.

It was the law of survival at its cruelest: The slow runners and the elderly were killed.

We finally decided to return to the area we had fled from, assuming by now that the government offensive was over. The battle zone stood between us and the safety of the Honduran refugee camps, so we had to reenter it to get out.

As we returned, we were hit with the overpowering stench of decaying bodies. There were donkeys, pigs, horses, chickens—all dead. The soldiers had burned down as many of the houses as they could, ripped apart the granaries. It even looked as if they had tried to trample the fields.

I heard many stories about what the soldiers had done to the people, but only saw one victim personally—a naked middle-aged woman whose skin was bubbling off, apparently some kind of acid had been poured on her—placed by the path we returned on. I imagine it was to instill terror in us. I was told by the peasants that it was standard procedure to display mutilated bodies.

Then the Salvadoran troops relocated us. We were bombarded again by the helicopters, the jets and the mortars. It lasted for three more days.

Finally a scout came to tell us that the Honduran troops had left the bank of the river. As soon as it was dark, we sprinted for the river. I was faster than most because I wasn't carrying a baby, wasn't pregnant, wasn't in bare feet, wasn't elderly. I was wearing a new pair of running shoes. Ironically, I had thought when I was trapped, and no one knew I was in El Salvador: That's how my body would be identified—by my shiny new Adidas.

I ran all night through the broken terrain and made it to the river. There were six other people with me. They paused to take their clothes off first; I didn't even stop. I dove right in, shoes and all. It was surprisingly warm. I swam the 60 yards to the Honduran side and crawled up onto the shore, safe at last.

I was told in the Honduran refugee camp at La Virtud that those who were slower, caught by daylight running toward the river, were strafed by the Salvadoran helicopters. I heard the gunfire in the distance.

Subsequently, Salvadoran Defense Minister Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia claimed a great victory for his troops in the Nov. 11-24 Cabanas offensive, saying 250 guerrillas had been killed. I was there and I saw who was killed. I estimate conservatively that at most 12 FMLN soldiers died in the fighting.

But 50 civilians were dead, another 50 wounded and 100 more missing. If that's one of the most successful military operations the Savadoran forces have engaged in, then there's something fundamentally flawed with the strategy behind this war.

(Philippe Bourgois is a graduate student in social anthropology at Stanford University. A New York native and the son of a United Nations official, he went to El Salvador to explore the feasibility of an anthropological research project about Salvadoran refugees.)

Salvadoran Colonel Turning Rebels' Tactics Against Them

(By Christopher Dickey)

San Antonio, El Salvador.—The young private riding shotgun in the front seat clenched his rifle and his face glistened suddenly with sweat as we passed the crude wooden crosses on the dirt road. Two here. Three there.

"This is where you were ambushed in January," Lt. Col. Sigifredo Ochoa half asked, half told him. "You were the only one in the patrol who wasn't wounded."

The private nodded stiffly, shaken.

"This road is clear now," said the colonel as he told a visitor about how tough it was to take this stretch from Villa Victoria north to the Honduran border. It had been mined. It had been in the middle of territory where eight months ago, only guerrillas traveled freely. "All these crosses," said the colonel, "are where soldiers died."

Ochoa was conducting an impromptu tour of a zone taken from the Farabundo Marti Forces of National Liberation in the province of Cabanas in a campaign that exemplifies the "new" kind of war that Washington and some Salvadoran officers want to see fought here.

It is a kind of fighting that is costly in casualties, at least in its initial stages, but relatively cheap in dollars at a time when Congress seems intent on cutting back massive aid to the government here.

There is not much high-tech about it, no Exocet missiles or F16 fighters. Ochoa says he needs mules more than jeeps, portable radios rather than radar.

It is a concept of war that turns the guerrillas' tactics against them. It pits small squads of soldiers against the small squads of rebels, tracking them, hunting them, ambushing and killing them; following up with political and civic action; swimming in the same sea of peasants that guerrilla theorists from Mao Tse-tung to Che Guevara have tried to make their own. In short, it uses whatever it takes to steal the initiative from the insurgents.

But it also seems a never-ending kind of war that requires not just battles but, at least in the short run, virtual occupation of the territory that is retaken.

"Where there had been guerrillas, now there are troops of ours," Ochoa said proudly.

And while the narrow, tortuous road to San Antonio is "secure," the nervous private in the front seat of the jeep and even Ochoa cocking his Israeli Galil automatic rifle indicate the road is not that secure.

How clear it remains depends on the patrols we see on its edges and those we don't, who stay hidden on mountain trails now half-lost amid the thick new rainy-season undergrowth.

An intense 40-year-old professional soldier with sharp mestizo features and yellow-brown eyes, Ochoa is pointed to by U.S. advisers as their kind of commander.

In an Army characterized by what one Western military observer calls "warlords" who have tremendous autonomy in the way they take on the guerrillas in their 14 departments, or provinces, Ochoa is one of the few who wholeheartedly has adopted and adapted the classic counterinsurgency tactics on which Washington is pinning its hopes for affordable military victories in El Salvador.

Some of the warlords continue trying to fight the guerrillas the way they fought the regular Army of Honduras in 1969. Some have favored the use of thinly veiled official terror that has made this country notorious for human rights abuses. Some have seen their role principally, and in some cases it is said profitably, as protecting large landowners in the richer provinces to the south. None of those made much progress against the guerrillas.

Thus, even though U.S. military aid increased from nothing in 1979 to at least $80 million this year, in most of the country the guerrillas continue to dictate the pace of the war. At the moment they have drawn new U.S.-trained battalions intended to operate as hunt-and-kill squads into a large-unit battle for the rugged hills of northern Morazan province that has raged unabated for two weeks.

Ochoa, meanwhile, methodically cleaned out Cabanas' similar mountainous terrain within six months after he took it over Aug. 17.

Ochoa and his troops, while admired by the Americans, are not the product of the U.S. advisers or the massive training programs in the United States that turned out three new battalions in the past 18 months.

Ochoa studied political warfare in Taiwan and took courses in counterinsurgency from Israeli trainers here in 1978, during the time when U.S. aid was cut off because of human rights problems.

He likes to give chalk talks on his techniques in a special map room at his headquarters in the departmental capital of Sesuntepeque. Vast topographic charts, an aerial photo and a kaleidoscopic array of arrows and diagrams lay out operations and occupations in his corner of the war.

A major element in his formula for success, one generally not mentioned by American advocates of the new tactics, is the most notorious adjunct of the Army, the collection of local paramilitary informers and militias called the Civil Defense.

These untrained but armed peasant groups date back to the days when a 1932 uprising was crushed at a cost of 30,000 lives. As cantonal patrols, as "military escorts," as the now-disbanded groups called ORDEN and currently as Civil Defense units they keep an eye on potential or imagined troublemakers and in many areas they simply eliminate them.

Gesturing to map polka-dotted with scores of green circles showing "armed paramilitary groups," Ochoa says, "sometimes they commit abuses, but they are punished." He said he has jailed at least 25 for crimes ranging from rustling to robbery to murder. Then he went on to his main point.

"All these send us information." he said, such as where the guerrillas camp, where they move, how, what is their modus operandi, do they have foreign advisers and other intelligence necessary to exterminate insurgents.

As a result of the information he received from the Civil Defense, Ochoa staged three major operations in August and November.

The November operations, especially the one here around San Antonio became the focus of international furor when British-Nicaraguan celebrity Bianca Jagger and U.S. congressional aides accused Salvadoran troops of crossing into Honduras and trying to drag refugees from a camp at La Virtud.

Ochoa dismissed this as propaganda, and he said that certainly none of his troops did such a thing. He was not responsible, he said, for what troops from other commands might have done.

Looking out over the track on the collection of houses in the village, Ochoa points proudly to every newly sown hillside, where the corn already is sprouting beneath the heavy, hot rains that come in the afternoons.

Refugees returning to their homes mingle comfortably with soldiers living much the way the guerrillas live in other strongholds or, in the days before Ochoa, in these.

A MOST SIGNIFICANT 24th OBSERVANCE OF CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1982

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, when President Reagan in a White House signing ceremony proclaimed the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, he emphatically stated, "The nature of this struggle is ultimately one that will be decided, not by military might, but by spiritual resolve and confidence in the future of freedom, especially in the face of the decaying and crumbling dreams of Marxism-Leninism." This has been the thrust of the Captive Nations Week tradition since 1959, and even more.

The "even more" note above is best expressed by the National Captive Nations Committee which has guided the national observance since 1959, when Congress passed the Captive Nations Week resolution and President Eisenhower signed it as Public Law 86-90. For this, and why the 24th observance was most significant, I bring to the attention of my colleagues the following: (1) The release issued by the NCNC, "President Lauded by National Captive Nations Committee;" (2) the interview with Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, chairman of the NCNC, published in New York's the News World of July 16th, "Captive Nations Remembered,"; (3) the message sent by the Committee's chairman to all Members of Congress; (4) the report in the News World of the Rose Garden ceremony (5) the release of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America on "Captive Nations Week—1982; and (6) the program of the congressional luncheon commemorating the Week and also highlighting the 40th anniversary of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army, which fought both Nazi German imperialism and that of the Soviet Russians:

PRESIDENT LAUDED BY NATIONAL CAPTIVE NATIONS COMMITTEE

In a statement on the national observance of Captive Nations Week, the National Captive Nations Committee called the ceremony yesterday at the White House "an historic first". "No President since the inception of the Week in July, 1959," it observed, "has understood the strategic value of the captive nations concept as does President Reagan." The President proclaimed the 1982 Captive Nations Week in an impressive signing ceremony attended by Vice President Bush, Congressional leaders, several of the original sponsors of the Captive Nations Week resolution, and some 200 citizens who for over two decades have led the annual observance in all sections of the nation.

Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, a professor of economics at Georgetown University and chairman of the Washington-based NCNC, pointed out that July 18-24 is the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, based on the resolution Congress passed in 1959 and signed by President Eisenhower into Public Law 86-90. In that period the Russian leader Khrushchev lambasted the law for years. In the committee's statement the chairman emphasizes, "Few people realize that through the late Suslov, the so-called ideologist of the party, and now Arbatov, the current Kremlin mouthpiece, this Russian assault against the resolution has continued to present date. Indeed, as the documented record well shows, no single idea and measure has drawn since World War II more consistent invective and opposition from the Soviet Russian imperialists than this resolution."

The professor cites the following as reasons explaining this deep fear and disturbance on the part of Moscow and its communist regime offshoots. One, the resolution accurately defines the USSR as an "imperium in imperio", made up of the majority of captive non-Russian nations conquered by Soviet Russian forces in the early 20's. Two, the resolution and its Captive Nations List (CNL) causes free men to at least annually remember the captive nations in Central Europe, within the USSR, in Asia and Cuba—what the totalitarians would have us best forget. Also, the resolution underscores the patent illegitimacy of every one of the imposed, so-called communist regimes in these areas. And, in addition, accurately understood, the captive nations concept can be the very core of an integrated, global strategy in our national policy by virtue of its multiple issue dimensions. According to Dr. Dobriansky, "the captive nations concept, if properly implemented, would both reinforce strongly all deterrent forces against a war and spearhead the forces for freedom in the Soviet Russian empire and the entire totalitarian world."

Both here and abroad, the 24th observance of the Week will be held by civic organizations. Governors and Mayors of all large cities have also proclaimed the Week. An advisory member of NCNC, Representative General Solomon of New York, will speak in Taipei, the Republic of China. A congressional luncheon will be held on Wednesday, July 21 in the Cannon Building, with General John K. Singlaub as the speaker. The luncheon will also highlight the 40th Anniversary of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army (UPA), which in World War II fought both the Nazi German and Soviet Russian imperialism. The UPA continued its fight against the Russians until 1950. Members of Congress have been invited by the NCNC chairman to speak out for all the captive nations. Each has received a pamphlet written by the chairman on Global Perceptions and Misperceptions.

CAPTIVE NATIONS REMEMBERED

(Since July, 1959, Americans have each year commemorated Captive Nations Week. Our Congress passed a resolution affording this, and President Eisenhower signed it into Public Law 86-90.

(Held the third week of July, the event this year will mark the 24th observance in the week of July 18-24. In other countries, such as Taiwan, South Korea, and Great Britain, this annual observance has also been faithfully kept alive.

(Dr. Lev Dobriansky, Professor of Soviet studies at Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., and chairman of the Captive Nations Committee, is recognized as the initial driving force behind the efforts to officially recognize the plight of those countries held captive by communist domination.

(In anticipation of next week's observance, Dr. Dobriansky gave the following interview.)

Are you pleased with President Reagan's response so far to the efforts of the Captive Nations committee?

Every year on behalf of the committee I write a letter to the White House, well before Captive Nations Week, asking for a proclamation. In this case with the letter I did send to the President came a very good response. I received word from the White House that definitely there would be a special ceremony (the President's signing of the Captive Nations Proclamation) on Monday morning (July 19). Having been with this committee from the beginning, I can tell you, this is historic. With this action, he is putting into deed what we've been seeking.

In the past 24 years, what have been some of the most significant accomplishments of your organization?

One is that you have a continuous reaction on the part of the people in the Kremlin with regard to this resolution. I would go so far as to say, and I have said this publicly, that there is no single idea or measure since World War II that has received such vehement reaction on the part of the Kremlin.

Other highlights, well, it would be in the way of rear stage tactics we have engaged in such as in the case of Mr. George Kennan. When President Kennedy asked Kennan to become our ambassador to Yugoslavia, he said fine I'll do it on one condition, that you do not issue a proclamation on Captive Nations week. Kennedy said fine and Kennan went off to Belgrade.

Fortunately we had one great ally and that was Mayor Daley of Chicago. Of course you know his power in the Democratic party at the time. He got after the White House and Kennedy issued the proclamation. Mr. Kennan had to take a two week vacation as ambassador in Belgrade because he couldn't face the people there.

What are your views on the situation in Poland?

Well, with regard to Poland, there's no doubt, that Solidarity and that whole movement has been unprecedented among the captive nations. Here was an attempt to bring about an industrial democracy on the part of the workers toward a sounder economy within Poland.

In the propaganda of the Soviet Union, the communist party is supposed to reflect the interests of the workers. Now here you had the emergence of the workers attempting to unionize and saying in effect, "look you haven't reflected our interests at all and we now want to assume greater economic power for ourselves as workers and for the good of the state, our nation and even let's say, for the good of Eastern Europe.

What has been the overall effect of martial law on the human rights movement in Poland?

Well, no question, it has been harmful. I have no doubt the whole attempt there (martial law) has been to dissolve Solidarity and prevent any resurgence. I've contended that when you get a crisis of this sort, you get the perennial-question what can we (U.S. foreign policy) do? And my answer is why didn't you anticipate this, prepare for this. We go through this time and time again of inadequate preparation and anticipation for events of this sorts.

Now one may say, yes but sometimes these things come up unpredictably and you could make out a case for that. You could make a case possibly in the Hungarian Revolution, that was spontaneous, but here we had from August 1980 when Solidarity came to the front and began progressing. There was adequate room here for anticipation and for programming. My feeling has been that we do as we always do, we wait until the situation arises and then we ask what can we do.

I read recently the Census Bureau released a report saying that the Russians are more vulnerable to economic sanctions than is generally believed. What is your feeling towards detente, especially western European economic interaction with the Soviet Union?

In 1965, I was invited to appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by the chairman Senator Fulbright. The committee met ever so often to build up arguments for liberalization of trade with Eastern Europe. They were particularly anxious to liberalize trade with the Soviet Union. My testimony brought up what I call 'pol-trade'.

It's not a single minded idea, it's an 'umbrella' idea. You can get trade, you can get athletics into it, or religion, politics, you name it. The pol-trade policy that I advocated was this: Yes, we should trade, but not solely on the basis of commercial values, but on values that should be considered in any liberalization of trade in a way of political, cultural concessions. So for example, we won't give you the best petro-chemical plant, or number of them, we'll give you much better than what you have. Are you willing, in addition to paying for these plants, also bring down the Berlin Wall?

Linkage?

Well, that's what Kissinger started using when he got in later. They linked it with immigration, but there are many other things you could link it to such as amnesty for dissidents or religious things. The Ukrainian Catholic and Orthodox churches were not persecuted—they were 'genocided'. Stalin eliminated them.

Alright this is another. You want trade? (to the Soviets) Well, let's have a resurrection of these churches.

What are the specific goals that you have?

Specific goals really bear on what I call the sub issues that are under the umbrella issue with regard to trade.

If we were to suspend in conjunction with Canada, Argentina, Australia, France, exports of wheat and other agricultural commodities to the Soviet Union it would have the heaviest impact on Soviet Union economically, because their agricultural output has been miserable.

A second is to have a restructuring (both short and long term) of Radio Liberty the need I think to reorganize the board for international broadcasting and give that board greater power over the operational to make it more effective.

NATIONAL CAPTIVE NATIONS COMMITTEE, INC.,
WASHINGTON, D.C.

[By Lev E. Dobriansky, Chairman,
Georgetown University]

July 18-24 marks the 24th Observance of Captive Nations Week. Most fittingly, following our own Independence Day, Americans across the country will speak out for the freedom and independence of over 30 captive nations in Central Europe, within the Soviet Union, Asia and in Cuba. In accordance with Public Law 86-90 (the Captive Nations Week Resolution which in their wisdom Congress passed and President Eisenhower signed into law in July, 1959) the President will significantly proclaim the Week, supported by the proclamations of Governors and Mayors through the Nation.

In the current light of Afghanistan and Poland, I am certain that you, too, will speak out in the Congress for the freedom of over 1 billion captives in the totalitarian world. What is occurring in these two countries cannot rationally be isolated from the experiences of all other captive nations. Your expressions during this Week will convey meaning, affinity and hope not only to the Afghan patriot and the Polish solidarist but also to the dissidents and human rights advocates in Czechoslovakia, the Baltic states, Ukraine, Georgia and elsewhere in the Soviet Russian empire. They will have meaning, too, for the captives in Mainland China, North Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia and Cuba.

One of the values of PL 86-90 is that its basic concept enables us to view and interpret events in the totalitarian world genetically and integratively; not to see Afghanistan or Poland in a vacuum. Much to the constant chagrin of Moscow and its totalitarian offshoots, the concept and its Captive Nations List (NCL) show the evolution of the captive nations since 1920 and also contribute to a much-needed global strategy. A brochure titled Global Perceptions and Misperceptions will be delivered to your office to elaborate on this in part, citing a number of misunderstandings of the concept. If this hasn't been brought to your direct attention, please let us know and another copy will be supplied.

On Wednesday, July 21, by special order in the House, Representatives Derwinski and Samuel S. Stratton will lead the observance, highlighting also the 40th Anniversary to the Ukrainian Insurgent Army, which fought both the Nazi German and Soviet Russian imperialists for Ukraine's independence.

With deep gratitude for your freedom participation and all best wishes.

CAPTIVE NATIONS ARE NOT FORGOTTEN

[By Jeremiah O'Leary]

WASHINGTON.—President Reagan yesterday proclaimed Captive Nations Week and used the occasion for one of the strongest verbal attacks he has yet made against Soviet tyranny and the expansion totalitarianism.

"We in the West must do more than merely decry attacks on human freedom. The nature of this struggle is ultimately one that will be decided, not by military might, but by spiritual resolve and confidence in the future of freedom, especially in the face of the decaying and crumbling dreams of Marxism-Leninism," Reagan told 200 guests at a White House Rose Garden ceremony.

Under a summer sun, the president signed a proclamation designating the special week and charged that the "ideological obsession" of the Soviet Union "remains the single greatest peril to peace among nations."

The president said he wanted to make it clear that the United States intended to move forward with a program to modernize the international radio system including the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, Radio Liberty and Radio Marti.

"This plan of modernization for a relatively modest expenditure over a number of years will make it easier for millions of people living under communist rule to hear the truth about the struggle for the world going on today between the forces of totalitarianism and freedom," Reagan said.

The president said the international radio programs have old equipment and strained resources after years of neglect and that little has been done to counter Soviet jamming, which has intensified in recent years. He said the Soviets spend three to four times more to jam foreign broadcasts than the U.S. spends to transmit.

"I especially want to urge Congress today to approve the funds so desperately needed to bring to the people of Cuba through Radio Marti the truth about the struggle between freedom and totalitarianism," Reagan declared.

"Throughout the Baltic states, Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America, nation after nation has fallen prey to an ideology that seeks to stifle all that is good about the human spirit, even as it attempts to justify communist rule. The ominous growth of this danger and the human suffering it has caused is clearly the most important news event of our generation and the tragedy of our time."

Reagan said the extension of totalitarianism has been accomplished by military force or subversion, by a tiny revolutionary cadre whose only real ideal is the will to power.

"It has not meant, as promised, a new classless society or the dictatorship of the proletariat," the president said. "It has instead meant forced labor and mass imprisonment, famine and massacre, the police state and the knock on the door in the night. It also has meant the growth of the largest military empire in the history of the world, an empire whose territorial ambition has sparked a wasteful arms race and whose ideological obsession remains the single greatest peril to peace among the nations."

In the proclamation he signed, as was mandated by Congress 23 years ago, Reagan said the imposition of martial law in Poland last December was a "bitter reminder that the quest for freedom and self-determination can only be restrained by force and the moral bankruptcy of a system which has been unable to earn the support of its population after more than 35 years."

To ringing applause from the representatives of countries that have fallen to totalitarian control, the president said a message was being sent today by the observants to the people of Poland and all those who are denied freedom that their cause is not lost.

As the president began to leave the assemblage a woman in the audience shouted, "God Bless America, would you sing it with us?" Reagan said "You will have to start." Immediately the assembly and the officials gathered with Reagan on the steps outside the oval office began to sing. Reagan joined them word for word.

Among those attending the signing ceremony were Chairman Clement Zablocki of the House Foreign Affairs Committee; Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.; several other past and present members of Congress; Vice President George Bush, and Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, chairman of the National Captive Nations Committee.

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK—1982

[Ukrainian Congress Committee of America]

In the third week of July, 1982, Americans in all walks of life and diverse ethnic and religious backgrounds, will mark the 24th observance of CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK, established on July 17, 1959 by the passage of the CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK RESOLUTION by a unanimous vote of the U.S. Congress. It became Public Law 86-90 upon being signed by President Eisenhower.

Twenty-three years have elapsed since the passage of the Resolution, and the world is in worse turmoil than it was when the measure was adopted. Not only were none of the original captive nations liberated, but a number of others have been added to the list: Cuba, the whole of Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, South Yemen, Afghanistan, Angola, and uncertainty looms for Poland, Nicaragua and El Salvador. All of them are under the direct or indirect control of imperialist Moscow.

MOSCOW—NERVE CENTER OF ENSLAVEMENT

The Resolution enumerated 22 non-Russian nations, with their distinct history, culture and national traditions that had been conquered by force by Communist Russia, and were kept under direct control in the USSR, or in the chain of satellite countries on the periphery of the USSR.

Evincing a far-sighted view of events to come, the Resolution said that "these submerged nations look to the United States, as the citadel of human freedom, for leadership in bringing about their liberation and independence and in restoring to them the enjoyment of their Christian, Jewish, Moslem, Buddhist, or other religious freedoms, and their individual liberties. . ."

The resolution listed the following captive nations:

". . . Whereas the imperialistic policies of Communist Russia have led through direct and indirect aggression, to the subjugation of the national independence of Poland, Hungary, Lithuania, Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia, White Ruthenia, Romania, East Germany, Bulgaria, mainland China, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, North Korea, Albania, Idel-Ural, Tibet, Cossackia, Turkestan, North Vietnam, and others."

CAPTIVE NATIONS—VULNERABLE "ACHILLES" HEEL OF USSR

The observances of CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK have always been a cause of concern to the Kremlin. Why?

Moscow knows well that the weakness of its far-flung totalitarian empire is the presence of over 50 percent non-Russian inhabitants who detest the tyrannical rule, heinous Russification and genocide applied to them over the years. Therefore, Moscow wants to hide from the rest of the world the constant discontent and often open rebellions of the non-Russian peoples inside the Soviet Russian prison house of nations!

Fellow Americans: Support the cause of the captive nations behind the Iron curtain, who are our true and reliable allies against Moscow and against everything it stands for!

On this 24th observance of CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK, we as free Americans must show them—and their tormentors and oppressors—that the American people sympathize with their plight and will stand by them with whatever help we can muster until the day of their freedom and independence is achieved!

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK—24TH OBSERVANCE, JULY 18-24, 1982, 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UKRAINIAN INSURGENT ARMY (UPA), WASHINGTON, D.C.

PROGRAM

Welcome to Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, Georgetown University, Chmn., National Captive Nations Committee.

Pledge of Allegiance—Katherine C. Chumachenko, Director, Ukrainian National Information Service (UNIS), Ukrainian Congress Committee of America.

Invocation—Rev. Anatole Bulavka, Pastor, St. Michael's Ukrainian Orthodox Church, Baltimore.

Master of Ceremonies—The Honorable Edward J. Derwinski.

Luncheon—Introduction of Guest Speaker: The Honorable Samuel S. Stratton.

Guest Speaker—Maj. General John K. Singlaub, Chmn., United States Council for World Freedom.

Benediction—Rev. Joseph Denischuk, C.S.S.R., Asst. Pastor, Ukrainian Catholic Church of the Holy Family, Washington, D.C.●

SENATE—Wednesday, July 28, 1982

(Legislative day of Monday, July 12, 1982)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, LL.D., D.D., offered the following prayer:

"Not alone for mighty empire stretching far o'er land and sea,
Not alone for bounteous harvests, lift we up our hearts to Thee.
Standing in the living present, memory and hope between,
Lord we would with deep thanksgiving, Praise Thee most for things unseen.
"Not for battleship and fortress, not for conquests of the sword,
But for conquests of the spirit give we thanks to Thee, O Lord.
For the priceless gift of freedom, for the home, the church, the school,
For the open door to manhood in a land the people rule.
"For the armies of the faithful, souls that passed and left no name;
For the glory that illumines patriot lives of deathless fame;
For our prophets and apostles, loyal to the living word,
For all heroes of the Spirit, give we thanks to Thee, O Lord.
"God of justice, save the people from the clash of race and creed, from the strife of class and faction,
Make our nation free indeed.
Keep her faith in simple manhood strong as when her life began,
Till it find its full fruition in the brotherhood of man."—Amen.

—Rev. WILLIAM P. MERRILL, 1911.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, today after the execution of the time allocated to the two leaders under the standing order, and a special order in favor of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN), there will be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 30 minutes in length in which Senators may speak for not more than 3 minutes each.

After the period for morning business is closed, the Senate will resume consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 58, at which time the Moynihan amendment No. 1927 will be the pending question.

Under the order previously entered, there will be a 1-hour time limitation on the Moynihan amendment.

Senators' attention is invited to the unanimous-consent agreement that was entered into yesterday in respect to the time limitation on other amendments and the time certain of final passage.

Mr. President, it is not anticipated that I will ask the Senate to remain in beyond the usual operating hours, which would mean recess or adjournment at approximately 6 or 6:30 p.m., unless there is a need for additional time. If Senators feel that under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement they will be pressed for time, if they will make that known to me I will be glad to adjust those hours so that we can accommodate any reasonable requirement by Senators on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. President, I do not anticipate a Saturday session this week under the circumstances. I would expect more or less normal operating hours, with the single exception that I just noted, that is to say, if there is a need to accommodate the requirement of Senators for additional time.

SECOND RECONCILIATION PACKAGE TO BE TAKEN UP ON WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1982

Mr. President, on next Wednesday, a week from today, after we have final passage or final disposition of the balanced budget resolution, it will be my intention to ask the Senate then to turn to the consideration of the second reconciliation package. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday we should have ample time to finish the debate on that package, which Members will recall is limited to 20 hours under the Budget Act.

Mr. President, I have no further need for my time under the standing order, and I am prepared to yield to any Senator seeking time. Does the Senator from Wisconsin seek time?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 minute?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD CONSIDER A COMPREHENSIVE TEST BAN TREATY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on July 23, the New York Times carried an editorial that deplored the President's decision to avoid negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty. Few actions this Government and the Soviet Union could take would do more to slow down the arms race than the ratification of a comprehensive test ban treaty. It would greatly slow the progress in both countries to perfect the killing power of newer and more deadly and more utterly devastating nuclear weapons. Above all, it would slow down and provide a much more secure basis for stopping the proliferation of the nuclear arms race among a dozen or more other nations.

There is every reason to believe that such a test ban could be practical, workable, and greatly advance mankind's prospect of surviving for the next 30 or 40 years.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NUCLEAR SAND IN THE EYE

The Reagan team's "decision" not to consider a comprehensive nuclear test-ban until two older treaties are perfected is so much sand in the eyes. The Administration has avoided test-ban negotiations for 18 months; it clearly has no interest in the total treaty. That is too bad for Soviet-American relations and for the cause of non-proliferation. Without great military risk to either power, a total ban would do much to help discourage other nations from pursuing nuclear weapons.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff invariably insist that testing is essential for weapons development and for confidence in the reliability of old warheads. Their opposition is reinforced by America's weapons laboratories, which fear for the future of their work if denied the right to test. But there are good answers to these concerns that the Administration does not even bother to debate. It sides with the Chiefs and uses old scare stories about inadequate verification to confuse Congress and the public.

Indeed, officials are raising objections to one set of nuclear test agreements to discredit a wholly different kind. The verification problem, if there is one, concerns a protocol to a 1974 treaty that limits underground explosions to 150 kilotons. It was concluded by President Nixon and augmented by President Ford to cover tests of so-called peaceful nuclear devices. Various controversies have held up ratification of these accords, but both superpowers say they are abiding by their terms.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

The old threshold treaties, however, have mostly symbolic value. A 150-kiloton limit allows virtually all the testing that anyone would want. A comprehensive test-ban is an entirely different matter. It would effectively stop the race to improve the quality of nuclear warheads. Under principles already negotiated by the Carter Administration, it would supersede the threshold treaties and also the 1963 treaty barring tests in the atmosphere.

It is much easier to detect violations of a total ban than to discriminate among explosions with a force of about 150 kilotons. So there would be no insuperable obstacle to monitoring compliance. The Soviet Union has gone further than ever before in agreeing to American-controlled monitoring boxes where Washington wants them and to the idea of onsite inspection on challenge. The details of these concessions is what the Reagan team should be negotiating about.

A comprehensive ban would hamper improvements in warhead design, an American emphasis, and explosive power, a Soviet emphasis. It would also gradually erode confidence in the reliability of warheads on the shelf. But that is important only for a preemptive first-strike. American strategists who feel vulnerable to such a strike would actually gain security from a total ban.

Against all the fears of a comprehensive test-ban must be weighed the enormous boost it would give to the diplomacy of halting the proliferation of nuclear weapons states—a greater danger than even the Soviet-American arms race.

Even without a full ban, the opprobrium attached to testing has been a deterrent among third-world nations. A total ban would greatly reinforce the efforts to bar a second Indian explosion or the Pakistani test that might provoke it. A treaty would reduce the likelihood of testing by Middle East nations, Argentina, Brazil or South Africa.

Negotiations in the Carter years demonstrated a real Soviet interest. It was the United States that backed away when a politically weakened President became afraid to challenge the Joint Chiefs. A test-ban is one kind of "freeze" that is manageable and advantageous. If the Reagan team opposes it, let it be honest about its reasons and risk a fair debate.

EAST TIMOR: THE DEATH TOLL GOES ON

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, as he has so often in the past, Senator TSONGAS recently alerted us to the latest information on the plight of East Timor. According to the report he cited by Rod Nordland in the Philadelphia Inquirer, the suffering of the East Tomorese continues unabated.

Six years ago, East Timor was invaded and occupied by Indonesia. Mr. Nordland tells us that during these past years, hundreds of thousands of Timorese may have perished through violence, famine, and disease. Mr. Nordland describes widespread malnutrition and hunger, inadequate health care, and ongoing warfare that disrupts efforts to feed the starving populace. Mr. Nordland also writes of political prisoners numbering in the thousands and of the relocation of hundreds of thousands of Timorese.

The Indonesian rule has been characterized by fear and accusations of torture, murder, rape, and widespread abuse of the Timorese. Those civilians who protest disappear, are imprisoned, or interrogated, and are forced to recant. Relatives of guerrillas are held hostage on Atauro Island in a so-called rehabilitation center, purportedly for there own good. There, entire families, including children, are ravaged by disease and hunger before Red Cross relief is allowed. These findings are supported by clergymen, civilian officials, and aid organizations, but the Indonesians coldly deny them all.

The story of the Timorese, as tragic as it is, is lamentably familiar. Once again, we have a national, ethnical, racial, or religious group singled out for deadly maltreatment. Those in power often show little pity for peoples who are "different" from the ruling group. This is why insular cultural groups are particularly vulnerable to oppression. The tale of East Timor is a flagrant case of one group crushing another with complete disregard for the survival of the subjugated group. The Indonesians seem quite indifferent to the horrible death toll among the Timorese. A prominent Timorese told Mr. Nordland:

> I think the Indonesians are happy to see famine. The Timorese people will always be a problem so, they figure, just eliminate the problem.

The Indonesian Government's insensitivity to the potential extinction of the Timorese is the first prerequisite for genocide. We cannot permit genocidal perpetrators to escape from the prosecution that their acts warrant. The Genocide Convention is designed to deter through the threat of future punishment, just as any law is intended to do, yet this simple device has generated groundless opposition here in the Senate.

Mr. President, although the inhabitants of East Timor are not allowed to speak to foreigners, some braved government terror to urge Mr. Nordland, "Please tell the world so they can help the Timorese people." I wish I could tell these tormented people that their message is heard, that their cries and the pleas of other persecuted peoples reach sympathetic ears. But any such assurances would be somewhat hollow as long as America has refused to back the Genocide Convention. I hope someday soon I can tell the Timorese and others who share their misery that they are not forgotten, that America has at long last ratified the Genocide Convention.

I thank the distinguished majority leader and I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF MINORITY LEADER'S TIME

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to the minority leader under the standing order may be reserved for his use at any time during this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield back my time under the standing order.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR NUNN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982: TITLE IV—HABEAS CORPUS REFORM

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, for the past several weeks, Senator CHILES and I have reiterated again and again to our colleagues the urgent need for reform of the laws currently governing habeas corpus proceedings. In this time of violent crime and congested court dockets, our criminal justice system can no longer afford the luxury of litigating and needlessly relitigating issues fairly decided many years before. I suggest that much of the delay and uncertainty in our court system can be traced to the abuse of habeas corpus proceedings by convicted criminals. The 3-year statute of limitations for those proceedings, which Senator CHILES and I have included in S. 2543, will go a long way in restoring efficiency and certainty to our judicial system

Consider that provision in light of the case of Joe Ed Hudson versus the State of Alabama. Hudson was convicted of two counts of armed robbery in the circuit court of Chilton County, Ala., in 1948. He was sentenced to terms of imprisonment of 10 years on the first count and 15 years on the second.

Hudson made no attack on his conviction until some 17 years later when, in 1965, he filed a petition for a writ of error coram nobis in Alabama State court. After a full hearing, the State court denied any relief to Hudson.

Nearly 10 years after disposition of that petition, Hudson turned to the Federal system for relief, filing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the Federal district court. Following a full evidentiary hearing on issues from a trial taking place over 20 years earlier, the Federal district judge denied Hudson's petition. The court found insufficient evidence to support Hudson's claim and further, that Hudson was barred by laches since he had not been "reasonably diligent" in asserting his rights.

Hudson, in turn, appealed that ruling to the court of appeals for the fifth circuit. In 1974, more than 26 years after his original conviction, the court of appeals reversed the district court's ruling and granted Hudson's petition for a writ of habeas corpus. In doing so, the court held that delay, even to the extent of 26 years, was not a bar to habeas corpus relief in Federal courts.

It is interesting to note the difficulties which faced the State in contesting Hudson's petition, some 26 years after the actual criminal trial. When the habeas petition was filed, there was no longer any formal record of the two 1948 convictions available for presentation to the court. It is not difficult to imagine the obvious problems with continued availability of witnesses and difficulties in recollection of such long ago events. Despite those problems, the appellate court made no attempt to judge the reasonableness of Hudson's great delay in bringing the petition.

Finally, there is still one more cause for concern in this case. Hudson waited until 1974 to seek habeas corpus relief for his 1948 convictions, despite the fact that he completed serving the sentence imposed in 1948 some 4 years earlier, in 1970. At the time of his petition for habeas relief, he was serving a prison sentence imposed in 1951 as a result of his conviction on a separate charge of armed robbery. Despite that fact and despite his delay of over 20 years in filing, the Federal courts were required to review and review again issues which should have been, in all fairness, raised and decided many years earlier.

I suggest that it is exactly this type of delayed litigation which daily hampers our already overburdened judicial system. If we are to regain the public's confidence in the criminal justice system, we must begin by fair and efficient revision of habeas corpus proceedings.

This Congress can and should act now to bring about that fair and efficient revision by prompt and favorable consideration of S. 2543.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to exceed 30 minutes, with statements limited therein to 3 minutes each.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EL SALVADOR CERTIFICATION REPORT

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee received a report from the Department of State yesterday which makes certifications with regard to El Salvador's human rights situation, government control of the armed forces, and economic and political reforms, including agrarian reform.

The report is required under section 728 (b) and (d) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981, signed into law by the President last December.

The Foreign Relations Committee will hold hearings on the certification on August 3. Administration witnesses including Assistant Secretaries of State Thomas Enders and Elliott Abrams will testify at 10 a.m., and public witnesses are scheduled to testify at 2 p.m., both in room 4221 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

Because of the large interest in the details of the administration's report, I ask unanimous consent that the determination and the accompanying report be printed in its entirety.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., July 27, 1982.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981, P.L. 97-113, makes the provision of certain security assistance and the assignment of certain military personnel to El Salvador contingent upon a certification in accordance with Section 728 of the Act. The first such certification and justification were presented to Congress January 28, 1982.

I hereby transmit to you the second such certification as is required under Sections 728 (b) and (d). Specifically I have:

(1) determined that the Government of El Salvador is making a concerted and significant effort to comply with internationally recognized human rights;

(2) determined that the Government of El Salvador is achieving substantial control over all elements of its own armed forces, so as to bring to an end the indiscriminate torture and murder of Salvadoran citizens;

(3) determined that the Government of El Salvador is making continued progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms, including the land reform program;

(4) determined that the Government of El Salvador is committed to the holding of free elections and has held such elections at an early date and to that end has demonstrated its good faith efforts to begin discussions with all major political factions in El Salvador which have declared their willingness to find and implement an equitable political solution to the conflict;

(5) authorized the obligation of funds in fiscal years 1982 and 1983 for assistance for El Salvador under chapter 2 or 5 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the issuance of letters of offer and the extension of credits and guarantees for El Salvador under the Arms Export Control Act, and the assignment of members of the Armed Forces to El Salvador to carry out functions under either of these Acts.

A comprehensive report dealing with the matters covered in this certification and providing the justification for the certification is enclosed. Although not a requirement of the law at this time, the report also includes a separate section dealing with the Government of El Salvador's investigation into the murders of the six United States citizens in El Salvador in December 1980 and January 1981 and into the disappearance of John J. Sullivan. I understand that legislation on these matters is before the Congress. Should such legislation be enacted, the Administration would, of course, promptly implement it.

It has been our objective in compiling this report to provide the Congress with the most comprehensive and objective analysis possible of the subject covered under the certification requirement. As the report makes clear, we continue to be concerned over the human rights situation and the course of the reform program in El Salvador. Nevertheless, there have been tangible signs of progress in each of the areas covered under the certification requirement, and we believe that the attached justification shows that a firm base has been established for further progress in the months ahead.

Sincerely,

GEORGE P. SHULTZ.

Enclosure.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., July 27, 1982.

Subject: Determination to authorize continued assistance for El Salvador.

Pursuant to Sections 728 (b) and (d) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 and Executive Order No. 12163, as amended, I hereby:

(1) determine that the Government of El Salvador is making a concerted and significant effort to comply with international recognized human rights;

(2) determine that the Government of El Salvador is achieving substantial control over all elements of its own armed forces, so as to bring to an end the indiscriminate torture and murder of Salvadoran citizens;

(3) determine that the Government of El Salvador is making continued progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms, including the land reform program;

(4) determine that the Government of El Salvador is committed to the holding of free elections and has held such elections at an early date and to that end has demonstrated its good faith efforts to begin discussions with all major political factions in El Salvador which have declared their willingness to find and implement an equitable political solution to the conflict;

(5) authorize the obligation of funds in fiscal years 1982 and 1983 for assistance for El Salvador under chapter 2 or 5 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the issuance of letters of offer and the extension of credits and guarantees for El Salvador under the Arms Export Control Act, and the assignment of members of the Armed Forces to El Salvador to carry out functions under either of these Acts.

This determination together with the justification therefor shall be reported to the Congress immediately.

This determination shall be published in the Federal Register.

GEORGE P. SHULTZ.

REPORT ON THE SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Severe civil strife has continued in El Salvador in the period covered by this report. The newly-elected Government of National Unity continues to be engaged in a struggle with a guerrilla movement which is, with outside support, attempting to seize power by force. The on-going violence continues to result in reports of violations of basic human rights committed by leftist guerrillas, right-wing terrorists and members of the government security forces. We continue to be concerned over the human rights situation and the course of the reform program in El Salvador. Nevertheless, there are tangible signs of progress by the Government of National Unity, and we believe a firm base has been established for further progress in the months ahead.

The development of democratic order in El Salvador is likely to be, over the long term, the best guarantee of human rights improvement. In this regard, the most important development in El Salvador in recent months has been the initiation of a democratic political process based on free elections. One-and-one-half million Salvadorans (over 80% of the eligible electorate) voted in the March 28, 1982 elections. These elections, closely monitored by large numbers of international observers and journalists, selected a 60-member Constituent Assembly, charged with forming an interim government and writing a new constitution.

As the Assembly continues its work leading up to elections for a permanent government after adoption of the constitution, the popular accountability inherent in the democratic process will channel the widespread desire of the Salvadoran people for a return to law and order into pressure on all political elements for action in this area.

The new government has already undertaken substantial steps to ensure continued progress in human rights areas:

The Minister of Defense has ordered that all violations of citizens' rights be stopped immediately and directed punishment of military offenders.

Over the past six months 109 members of the Salvadoran Armed Forces were disciplined for various offenses, including 56 cases submitted to judicial action. In addition, 20 members of the civil defense forces were disciplined in the ongoing effort to prevent abuses by the paramilitary forces.

Despite continued resistance in some quarters, demonstrable progress has been made in the land reform program, including the issuance of over 10,000 Phase III (Land-to-the-Tiller) provisional titles in the last six months—4,865 issuances since the elections.

The Government and the Armed Forces have undertaken an effort to restore those farmers illegally evicted from their land following the confusion over the Constituent Assembly's modification of Decree 207. Some 2,000 families have been returned to their farms by the Armed Forces since June 1.

The Salvadoran government has begun proceedings under Salvadoran law to bring to justice those accused of the December 1980 killings of four American churchwomen.

The report which follows is designed to provide the Congress with the most comprehensive and objective analysis possible under the certification requirement. We believe the report shows tangible signs of progress in each of the areas covered under the certification requirement.

SUMMARY

The most important development in El Salvador during the certification period was progress in the development of representative government. The Salvadoran people elected a Constituent Assembly, which has designated an interim coalition Government of National Unity, is functioning as an interim legislative body, and will draft a new constitution and set the ground rules and the date for presidential elections.

The Constituent Assembly elections, held March 28, were hotly contested by six parties, supervised by an independent Central Elections Commission (CCE) and monitored by more than 200 international observers. President Duarte and the president of the CCE invited all parties to participate, including those on the far left associated with the guerrillas, but the latter refused to take part or negotiate how they could have participated with security guarantees. The turnout of one and a half million voters exceeded all expectations and constituted a severe setback for the guerrillas, who had called for a boycott and attempted to disrupt the voting by force of arms.

During this certification period, the land reform program advanced, was subject to some challenges, and was relaunched. The net result is that Phase I of the agrarian reform has been consolidated further; and demonstrable progress was also made on Phase III. Ambiguous legislation passed by the Constituent Assembly in May gave rise to the widespread belief, in and outside of El Salvador, that Phase III was being suspended and the entire reform process was in jeopardy. One effect of this misconception was a surge in illegal evictions in the countryside.

Faced with this situation, the Government of National Unity, as one of its first official acts, began a campaign personally directed by President Magana to put the land reform programs back on track. Supported by the military, the President acted to ensure that all reform activities go forward, to distribute the first permanent land titles to Phase III beneficiaries, to pay the first compensation to affected owners, to direct high-level military and government participation in issuance of provisional titles throughout the country, and to issue military orders to support the agrarian reform and to assist in reinstallation of illegally evicted beneficiaries. Perhaps most importantly, the government appointed a strong president of FINATA, the government agency which administers Phase III.

Our conclusion is that despite continuing problems and strong challenges, there has been demonstrable progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms, including land reform, in El Salvador during the certification period: Five permanent titles were issued to cooperatives and 48 owners were compensated, but of major importance was the fact that 178,530 Phase I beneficiaries were, as a result of government-supported technical assistance and agricultural credit programs, able to begin their third crop year. For most, that alone represents three consecutive years of progress. Since January 1, 11,238 Phase III titles, including 4,865 since the March 28 election, were issued, together with the first 251 permanent titles. The first former owners of lands redistributed under Decree 207 were paid $614,219, and 7,017 essential field inspections were carried out.

Democratic elections will, of course, give the Salvadoran people a regular opportunity to gauge the performance of their elected leaders and the political parties on the reforms.

Although the monthly total of deaths attributed to political violence declined somewhat (according to available statistics), human rights violations and terrorism continued to be a major problem during the certification period.

There continue to be reports of human rights abuses on the part of various branches of the Salvadoran security forces. There have been, however, significant efforts by the Salvadoran leadership to correct the problem. Since October 15, 1979, at least 1,000 members of the Salvadoran security forces have been disciplined for abuses of authority. Ministry of Defense records show that during this certification period, 109 members of the Salvadoran Armed Forces were disciplined for various offenses, of which 56 cases have been submitted for judicial action. In addition, at least 20 members of the civil defense forces were disciplined in a special effort to crack down on abuses committed by paramilitary forces.

On March 10, 1982, Minister of Defense Garcia issued an instruction to all military personnel stating that all illegal actions and violations of the rights of citizens must cease and ordering the punishment of those failing to heed this order. But continued training is necessary for building upon the progress already achieved in raising the level of discipline and professionalism.

Although serious problems remain, we conclude that the Government of El Salvador is making a concerted and significant effort to comply with internationally recognized human rights. Given the orders issued by the Armed Forces concerning human rights abuses and the codes of conduct promulgated to achieve this objective, and in light of the substantial efforts to improve the disciplinary system, we conclude that the Government of El Salvador is achieving substantial control over all elements of its own armed forces. Moreover, the establishment of responsible democratic institutions is a major step toward channeling popular desires for peace, law, and order into public accountability for the government's performance in these areas of concern. In addition, democratic institutions provide a peaceful channel for resolving conflict and disagreements.

Substantial progress has been made in the murder case involving four American churchwomen. In February, the investigatory working group turned its final report over to the National Guard. The National Guard found sufficient evidence in the report to dismiss six guardsmen and turn them over to a civilian court. The presiding judge, in turn, examined the evidence and determined that it was sufficient to justify charging five of the former guardsmen with aggravated homicide. They were remanded to prison pending the resolution of their trial. The trial judge has initiated and largely completed the judicial inquiry required under Salvadoran law. We expect the date of the trial to be set this fall.

The Government of El Salvador has moved to reinvigorate the investigation into the murder of the two American land reform advisors and their Salvadoran colleague by forming in April a new investigative working group to uncover additional evidence. To date all efforts have failed to provide any clues as to the whereabouts of John J. Sullivan, an American freelance journalist who disappeard in San Salvador in December 1980. The investigation of Mr. Sullivan's disappearance has received the attention of the highest levels of the Salvadoran Government.

END SUMMARY

Each of the specific issues enumerated in Section 728(d) is addressed below:

THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR

Severe civil strife has continued in El Salvador in the period covered by this report. The newly elected Government of National Unity continues to be engaged in a struggle with a guerrilla movement which, with external support, is attempting to seize power by force. This strife in El Salvador continues to produce serious and frequent violations of basic human rights committed by leftist guerrillas, right wing terrorists, and members of the government's military and security forces. Criminal activity and personal acts of vengeance also continue to occur with frequency in an atmosphere of confusion and destruction resulting from bitter civil conflict.

The most important development in El Salvador in recent months has been the initiation of a democratic political process based on free elections. On March 28, 1982, the people of El Salvador exercised the internationally recognized human right to participate in the political process of their country. The overwhelming majority of the Salvadoran electorate cast ballots for the selection of a 60-member Constituent Assembly, charged with forming an interim government and writing a new constitution and electoral laws. The election was conducted (CCE). The electoral process was closely monitored by large numbers of international observers and journalists and was widely judged to be fair and honest. (See the following section on elections.)

The development of a firm democratic order in El Salvador is likely to be, over the long term, the best guarantee of human rights improvement in other areas. The popular accountability inherent in the democratic process will serve to channel the widespread desire for a return to law and order into pressure on all political elements to promote these objectives. The establishment of democracy in El Salvador also offers the possibility of ending the civil strife that produces human rights abuses on all sides, by providing an avenue for political participation and reconciliation of disagreements by peaceful means. Finally, elections in El Salvador, as a process in which people participate freely as individuals rather than acting on the basic of existing familial or patron-client ties, should gradually reduce the lawless use of public forces for private interests.
